Topics of the Time.

THE WAR ON RUM.—The movement against intemperance now extends from Missouri to Maine. In Columbus and Dayton, Ohio; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Brooklyn and New York city, New York; Worcester, Massachusetts; St. Albans, Vermont; and Bangor, Maine, the long-sufering people have moved on the enemies of our race, commonly denominated saloons. In large cities like the ones named the results are not as yet apparent, but in a host of smaller towns the friends of temperance have completely triumphed. From three to four hundred saloons have been closed and thus far there are no signs of weariness on the part of those engaged in the work. An illicit distillery was lately discovered on Barren Island, near New York city. A party of United States officers made a raid on the place, run fifty thousand gallons of mash into the sea, destroyed the tubs and set the building on fire. In all such movements we may and must rejoice. This country will never reach the true position on this question, however, until a man who sells liquor is locked up just as quickly as a horse-thief or a murderer. Selling intoxicating drinks causes nine-tenths of the murders and theft which our courts punish. It is cheaper and better to lock up the man who sells than the men who drink. We must do one or the other.

MAKES MEN DRINK MORE THAN EVER.—Men who argue against prohibitory laws are accustomed to declare that in all places where such laws are enacted, men drink more than ever. That they hide but continue to drink. The only answer which such statements require is, that they are entirely untrue. Having traveled extensively in States where there are and are not prohibitory enactments, the writer knows that the States where such laws exist are so far superior to those where there are none as to be beyond comparison with them. In Massachusetts, where Good Templarism and Masonry have hindered the reform for years, there is hardly a hotel in medium sized towns were liquor is openly sold, while in Missouri villages consisting of a dozen houses must have their rum shop. In Vineland, New Jersey, the traffic is illegal and no saloon can live in the corporation; while a man who kept a low groggery just outside the limits was lately fined three hundred and fifty dollars and sent to states prison for six months. The result is that Vineland paid to support her poor last year less than two hundred dollars and her police cost about fifty dollars. We hazard nothing in saying that there is not a town of ten thousand inhabitants where saloons exist in the United States that can show such a record. In other words, prohibition don't make men drink more than ever.

TILTON'S LETTER TO THE COUNCIL.—Theodore Tilton sent to the Congregational Council in Brooklyn, and to the papers, a letter in which he says that he has never slandered any human being. This may be true. He did, however, say to the writer of this paragraph, in January, 1871, that Mr. Beecher preached to twenty mistresses every Sabbath; repeated the assertion several times and authorized its publication. This was nine or ten months before the publication of the Woodhull scandal. Again in January, 1874, Mr. Tilton said, "I spoke hastily to you three years ago, and perhaps unwisely, but I told no lies about Mr. Beecher. I didn't come through the anti-slavery fight to be either a liar or a lick-spittle." From these facts it is evident that whether he has slandered Mr. Beecher or not he has charged him with adultery. This is the question that agitates the Congregational churches, "Is or is not this charge true?" There will be no rest until this question is answered. We hope that the answer will be "no."

A LESSON FOR YOUNG MEN.—In an age like this, young men are inexcusable, if they fail to learn that it is only rigid adherence to principle which is rewarded by lasting fame. When Senator Sumner wrote his letter of acceptance to the Legislature of Massachusetts in 1851, he said: "Since true politics are simply morals applied to public affairs, I shall find constant assistance from those everlasting rules of right and wrong which are a law alike to individuals and communities." In obedience to those rules of right and wrong he stood in his place year by year, surrendering friends, influence and reputation in obedience to his convictions. He declared slavery sectional, when by lordly assumption and brutal violence it ruled the nation. He denounced "the crime against Kansas" as the peril of his life. He declared "the barbarism of slavery" when pulpit and press and people were its obedient slaves. When a subservient Senate were about to put a merchant into the treasury and to repeal the law that stood in his way; when that same Senate were about to annex a debased and slothful people to our already sufficiently distracted land, it remained for Charles Sumner to pronounce the "I object" that gave us pause, and prevented national disgrace. It was also allotted to him to introduce a resolution providing for the discontinuance of the names of battles fought during the civil war, on the army register and on regimental flags. For every one of all these acts he suffered reproach, and so far as his enemies could accomplish it, infamy; but to-day he looms up among the time-serving, wire-pulling politicians who surrounded him like the pyramids of Gizeh from the Egyptian sands. Let then this just orator, statesman and man go sleep in his native soil; and write on his marble where the young men of to-day may read: There is naught but fidelity to truth which is pleasing to God or glorious to men.

ROBBING MERCHANTS.—The testimony of Wm. E. Dodge and other merchants regarding the revenue laws and custom house proceedings in New York form, it would seem, an unanswerable argument in favor of free trade. Government, to raise money for the payment of debts and current expenses, levies a tariff upon certain articles. To collect this tariff custom houses are established and custom officers are appointed. Men attempt to defraud the government or are suspected of doing so, and hence rewards are offered to spies, detectives and informers. A law is passed allowing men accused of fraud to compromise with officers of the port by the payment of money. Unfortunately some men are not honest, and many officials are like Murphy and Casey. The result is that honest houses are compelled to pay enormous sums for mere technical violations of law, while spies who are too low for an honest man's contempt, grow rich on their detestible toil. Commerce is discouraged and corruption increased and rewarded. How simple a remedy to abolish tariffs and levy a direct tax for the wants of government. True, it would diminish the number of office-holders. It would lessen the number of places which a shameless official could fill with drunken and dishonest personal servants. It would reduce the estates of a few men who live on the oppressive taxation of their poorer neighbors. It would, however, lessen the expenses of government, make officials more honest and lighten greatly the burdens of society.

OUR COLLEGES AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

OBERLIN COLLEGE, OHIO,
March 3d, 1874.

Gentlemen:—You ask our views and the statistics of our college on the subject of secret societies. We have views on the subject, but no secret societies, and no experience. The early founders of the school were decidedly opposed to secret societies, and the principle was adopted at the beginning of excluding them. Consequently no secret society has ever been established among us.

The views of our faculty on this question are just as decided as ever. There is but one opinion among us.

The open literary societies are prosperous, and seem to meet all the wants of the students in this direction. They work in harmony with the general movement of the college, and their influence is wholesome and helpful.

Masonic Oaths Viewed from the Standpoint of Reason.

BY PROF. O. F. LUMRY, WHEATON COLLEGE.

An oath to do an immoral act is in its very nature annullity.

A valid oath presupposes a free agent, a man, covenanting to do or not to do something; the man himself or some other being exacting such obligation, and God formally invoked as witness to exact the performance of what is covenanted or inflict the penalty.

Every immorality, or trespass against man, is likewise a sin against God. Now in every formal oath requiring the performance of these, if it be a real oath, God is supposed to be present to exact the performance of acts of rebellion against his own government and to become the minister of sin, a position he expressly repudiates in his Word. All the peculiar binding character of an oath above an ordinary promise is derived from the supposed presence of God to enforce the same. If he is present, and for the purpose specified, then is his kingdom indeed divided against itself; but if he is not present for such purpose, then is the administration of such oaths a blasphemous and fraudulent farce, and the formula used has nothing of the nature of a genuine oath. Having the form but lacking the essence of a binding oath it is in the nature of a bogus coin, whose only uses are to throw suspicion upon genuine money and to deceive; since it is certainly supposable that the Master of a lodge, or the majority of its members, are godless men, rebels against God's authority. If lodge oaths are genuine oaths, when a man swears to obey the Master of such lodge, or such lodge itself, we must suppose that God stands ready to enforce any obligations that rebels against his government may impose—a supposition so preposterous that no sane man can for a moment believe it. If such be not genuine oaths then are they Satan's counterfeits, blasphemous devices to make God and men the ministers of sin.

If the above positions are correct—and I shall be greatly obliged to the man that shall point out their essential error—the multitudes of poor, blind candidates who have suffered their souls to be ensnared by such mock oaths will find them a "covenant with death and a league with hell."

Having in the above examined Masonic obligations in the light of reason and the nature of the case, I propose in my next to show how they look in the light of God's Word.

The Workings of the Craft.

(An Experience.)

BY WOODRUFF POST.

The instructions received from my father in my boyhood days in regard to Freemasonry, and the fact that a person supposed to be dying at our home felt compelled to renounce Masonry to make his peace with God, and the fact that a brother-in-law who was a Freemason advised his son never to unite with any secret society, all led me in maturer years to investigate, and I came soon to the conclusion that there could be no especial benefit derived therefrom. My first confirmation of its dominancy and arbitrariness was had when at conference. I was quietly distributing tracts on Freemasonry. I then and there had notification by a Mason to "beware", etc. This was the first development of the genius of Masonry as concerned my experience. This encouraged and emboldened me to proceed, for it was very evident that freedom and love of Christ could not govern the conference or church if ever controlled by Masonry, and the sooner we knew where we stood the better.

I was also encouraged by a seceding minister who had "been deceived" and took three degrees. In a short time it was discovered that all adhering Masons, whether professed Christians, ministers or infidels, expressed the same excited feelings when the subject was broached. In the fear of God, much prayer and deliberation, it was resolved to test our conference and "strike out" for God and humanity. Therefore at our East Genesee conference held in Phelps, N. Y., Aug., 1869, the following was presented. "Resolved, That we disapprobate Free masonry." Seven reasons were stated why.

This created a sensation and after a brief sustaining speech by the mover, Masons sprang to their feet and moved that the resolution be tabled. Thirty-one voted against this motion, sixty-one for. The leader of the Masons at this time excited by it, said, 'We Masons in this conference number sixty. We now began to see more clearly the nature of "divine" Masonry. Providence opened the way for another vote in 1870 at Elmira conference. The "leaven" had been working. At this conference there were the signatures of most of the leading men, senior and junior, in all sixty-nine names in their own autographs, to the following:

"Resolved, That without judging any man, we affectionately advise the members of this conference for the peace of brethren, not to affiliate with the Masonic institution."

When the vote was taken, it was moved to table it. The vote stood 64 for, 58 against. So we lost this by just six Masonic majority. It was tabled. Yet this year we gained on last year twenty-seven votes. I should have said that last year after conference, a member of the conference visited me at my home in Rochester, and said, "Bro. Post, I have been a Royal Arch Mason. I was glad you took the position you did. I fully endorse the speech. It has always been my impression that ministers should not be connected with Masonry, and you can use my name whenever it becomes necessary."

The following year at conference in Geneva, N. Y., 1871, the village where Johnson met his death-blow in a lodge-room, the following were offered:

"1st. Resolved, That we protest against the corner stones of our churches or literary institutions being laid by any ceremonies of the Masonic fraternity.

"2d. Resolved, That Article 25, Sec. 2, in our Discipline pertaining to a Christian man's oath, may not be violated with impunity.

"3d. Resolved, That extra-judicial oaths, i. e., all such oaths as are not required by the civil magistrates are condemned by God's holy Word, and by our Discipline.

"4th. Resolved, That all such oaths as are expressed in the following language are forbidden by our Lord; therefore, criminal."

Here followed some of the Masonic obligations, though the term Masonry was not used. As "I, A. B., most solemnly promise and swear that I will never reveal any part or parts of the secrets which I have received, am about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in, to any other except it be to a true brother. Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, and my tongue torn out by the roots. So help me God. Furthermore, I promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master's wife, mother, sister or daughter, I knowing them to be such." This created a great sensation among the Masons, and some "Jacks," one in particular, Rev. T., said he had all power in the conference and could do as he pleased, and if I did not behave he would have me first located and then expelled. I think it was said to him—try!

But we are sorry to say one Rev. Dr. with whom Masons had wrought during the year in their artful way—I think I am safe in saying this, I may be mistaken—turned right about face and opposed us. Nevertheless we had fifty-eight votes while the Masonic vote was sixty-one, being three less than last year—giving Masonic vote three majority. The craft were terribly taken aback, and went desperately to work and absolutely succeeded in degrading the conference—it was so astonishing—in the passage of the following, presented by an aged Mason, brother to the Royal Arch heretofore mentioned, seconded by a D. D., once a strong defender of the faith, against Masonry, viz., "Resolved, That we advise our beloved brother Post, to desist from his efforts to draw us into a discussion upon this subject, which can only result in evil to himself, and the cause of Jesus Christ." "TELL IT NOT IN GATH." Our conference boundary line was changed, and we were last year, Oct., 1872, met in Rochester, N. Y., as Western N. Y. Conference, and then brother Post had enough to do besides presenting resolutions. By this time they supposed they had got him, but he still lives—God be praised—and triumphs. The end is by-and-by.

A Personal Recollection of Charles Sumner.

BY SAMUEL D. GREENE.

One of the honorable of the earth is gone to his reward—like his prototype (Moses) he went up in the midst of a cloud, but he got into the mount.

In Mr. Sumner I lost a dear friend. In July, 1833, at the close of the trial of Moore and Seavy for their malicious libel on me, he at the age of 22 years came with his honored father to my house in South Boston, and after a kindly greeting from both, he said, "Mr. Green, don't let this decision of a partial jury effect you. Your moral character stands untarnished in the estimation of Judge Thacher and many unpredjudiced citizens who heard the trial. I vouch for them. I have heard their expressions, you may yet see the triumph of your principles." After a few comforting words from his father they left. From that day to his death he has been a good friend of mine, sending me his speeches and many important documents, and answering my letters. I will copy one of my letters to him from Walnut Hill, Ohio, March 24th, 1866:—

Hon. Charles Sumner.

MY DEAR SIR:—I received your letter and speech, "Taxes without representation is tyranny." It is in my opinion unanswerable. The master or his apologist who have oppressed the negro, may attempt it. The cry of the South has been, "Give the negroes freedom, or an opportunity, and they will massacre their masters." But when their freedom is proclaimed they are quiet. This rebukes their former masters. "And they hate him that rebuketh in the gate and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly. For as much therefore, as your treading is upon the poor; and you take from him burdens of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them, ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink the wine of them" (Amos. v. 10–11). I am a believer in the truths of the Almighty and his providence. This nation he bequeathed his people as a land of religious and civil liberty, and though he may chastise us for our sins, eventually your truths uttered to the nation and the world will triumph. I have loved Wilson and believe him a sound man, one of the noble creations of his Maker; but I fear one screw is a little loose, which he will soon tighten and all will be right again.

Farmer Grey and the Patron.

BY A. THOMPSON.

The golden haze of the autumn day
Shone down on the smiling river,
When into the town rode farmer Grey,
As merry and hale as ever.

His hair was hoar as the morning's frost
That shone on his meadow grasses;
E'e day-beams scatter the starry host,
Or moon to her chamber passes.

"Here, neighbor Grey," said an upper crus:
"I'll give you an introduction
To one who comes as a friend, I trust,
To the farmers with instruction.

A son of the noble Grange is he,
And believes that our location
Is just the place, if we all agree,
To erect a Patron's station."

"Indeed, indeed," said old farmer Grey,
"Is this a son of the thunder
That booms around in an awful way,
While the whole world stares in wonder?

That scares our rail-roads out of their wits,
Till their impudent color changes,
And gives the rings and the rascals fits,
That are out of the noble Granges?

But, sir, I have always known the grip
Of our Anglo-Saxon greeting,
And friendly word never fail my lip
On spur of a friendly meeting;

But never struck I with hidden hand,
Nor bowed to an unknown master,
And much I fear that your mystic band
Bodes less of good than disaster.

The good you do and the wealth you gain
Is a doubtful compensation,
For and you give to the ghouls that drain
Out the life-blood of our nation—

To the power that works when the world's asleep
To shield the knave and the traitor,
And bind the good in an iron keep
With a demon-wielded fetter."

Danger from the Grange.

[Extract from a letter to the Chicago Tribune from the Sec'y of the National Agricultural Congress.]

I have been frequently charged as in opposition to the order of the Patrons of Husbandry. Until the meeting of the National Grange at S. Louis, it was an unjust charge. True, I did object to, and criticise some of its features,—among them that of secrecy,—but never with a view to the breaking down of the organization. Since that meeting, however, notable for its grand declaration of purpose without any provision for their realization, and for the postponement of action upon all of the vital questions which came before it, even upon the business-system for which so much was expected, I should be false to the cause to which I have been devoted for the past two years were I to fail in the exposure of those weaknesses in the organization which threaten the utter defeat of the reform movement, which had been so auspiciously inaugurated.

Take the transportation question as a case in point the National Grange adjourned with no expression save that of Worthy Master Adams, which, in substance, was a mere admission that he could not comprehend the question, and, therefore, asked Congress to take ti in hand and "regulate" it. We have seen Congress and the State Legislature dancing attendance all winter to the grange-magnates, exceedingly anxious to curry favor with its million (?) of votes. They certainly must be delighted—as well as the railroad men—at this expression of Master Adams, which was in no manner modified by any public expression of the grange. It is the easiest victory that the railroad-kings and their legislative abettors ever won. The big companies were getting tired of state legislation, because they found it effective; and their only hope was to get the higher power to interfere in their behalf. Just mark how plausible is the proposition that Congress shall legislate for the long roads which run from state to state, while the states may reserve the power over the short roads. Will anybody with a grain of sense pretend to claim that the regulation of the short roads, which are practically controlled in the interest of the through lines, and which would be at once consolidated with them, would meet the requirements of the people of Illinois? It is the long lines, and their wealthy and unscrupulous managers, which need regulating,—and they alone. Now, if Congress manages the long lines, which practically manage the short lines, is it not quite apparent that no state legislation—which necessarily yields to national legislation—is at all practicable, or indeed possible? But it is not my intention here to discuss this question. I have only suggested it to show how easily an immense and powerful organization—which has been to the present time kept well in hand,—through its system of mystification and meaningless mummeries,—may be committed to the ill-digested views of a single individual, and that man one who has never had personal experience of the subject which he presumes to treat. If Congress shall go forward and take such action as the "test vote" indicated was their purpose,—the overwhelming majority clearly indicated that the railroads were not opposing it,—the country will have a poisonous pill to swallow, even though it is sugar-coated and labeled "Reform." When we are suffering from its effects we may hear our legislators taunting us, as they have before, with the assertion, "We did your bidding. Your great grange, through its Worthy Master, demanded that we should vote for this measure."

And note how utterly impossible it is to controvert such action. The council proceedings being secret, the discussions, too, being confined to those who represent one side of the question only, —how can their fallacious reasonings be met and the public mind be really educated?

In conclusion, then, I do now set my face squarely against this grange monopoly; and, feeble though my efforts may be, I will oppose its further encroachments upon the province of free, open discussion, to the extent of my ability. As at present officered and conducted, it is far more threatening to the public welfare, to the national life, than any railway-corporation that has ever been dreamed of. Not that I charge against its officers any wrongful intent, but that they are as "blind leading the blind," and that they are closer upon the banks of the "ditch" than they suspect. More anon.

CHAS. W. GREENE.

The Labor Question from a Christian Standpoint.

[From the Journal, Phila.]

De Solure, in his celebrated treatise on the English Constitution, tells us, that "it is a fundamental principle with the English lawyers, that Parliament can do anything except make a woman a man or a man a woman." And it seems to be "a fundamental principle" with all Americans, that Congress and the State Legislatures are endowed with a similar power. This opinion has been amply, a good deal too amply, illustrated in the matter of labor reform. Instead of undertaking to do anything vigorously outside of legislative halls, labor reformers have been constantly besieging the bodies therein assembled, to give them eight-hour laws, ten-hour laws, graduated taxation, etc.

This belief in the omnipotence of the legislative function is, as I have suggested, not a delusion of the labor reformers alone, it is an error of the age. Temperance men, women-elevators, moral and social reformers of every kind, seem to think that a legislative body is the anointed vice-gerent of heaven, to whom is intrusted "all power in heaven and on earth." Even so very able a man as Mr. Wendell Phillips talks as though misled by the same will-'o-the-wisp. 'To the State House with everything,' one would think to be his ever-abiding motto. In one of his latest speeches—at the anniversary of the "Boston Tea Party"—he gave utterance to the pivotal idea that I have introduced into this essay, that we must stop the accumulations of great fortunes; but the working out and application of the idea, he said, was in the hands of some true successor of Thomas Jefferson,— a politician, be it noted. I must differ from Mr. Phillips. A religious reformer, like John Wesley, would be worth, for the purpose indicated, a thousand Jeffersons. As Mohammed is said to have converted a hemisphere, with the Koran in one hand and a sword in the other; so a Wesley with God's law against accumulation in one hand, and His sword—"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God"—in the other, would do a work that those comparatively inferior lawgivers, the world's statesmen and politicians, would essay in hopeless imbecility. Mr. Phillips, who knows well the illimitable superiority of religious lawgivers above Pitts and Jefferson, should have done better than he has. He should have disabused men of his legislation folly long ago. He has had occasion to understand thoroughly the superiority of the work of William Lloyd Garrison to that of the crowds of "Hon." gentlemen who, for twenty years, have been hammering out the details of the great matter Mr. Garrison handed down to them for manipulation.

From the croppings out of the opinions I am now considering, I fear the next step of the labor-reformers will be to go to our legislative bodies and try to persuade them to annihilate our prospective Stewarts and Astors, if not our existing ones. Such will be for labor reformers a most miserable waste of time and strength. For, although Mr. Phillips and Mr. Beecher see the necessity of some check to accumulation, the average legislator does not; and a public opinion will have to be created in its favor before our Senates and Houses of Representatives will make a statute modeled after the Master's "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." The shortest path to the end Mr. Phillips and Mr. Beecher propose is to preach to the world Jesus Christ's gospel on the subject.

Could the labor reformers succeed with legislatures in getting a law against unhealthy fortunes, the result would be worse even than a waste of time and strength. It would make the men of organizing minds—unconvinced in reason, unconverted in conscience, and untouched in heart—feel constantly that a tyrannical hand was laid on them, restraining them from their rightful opportunities. Out of such an enforced state, no true co-operation could grow; nothing but sullen hate ready to burst out into violence at the first incitement. Take a lesson from the present relations between the late slave-owners of the South and their freedmen. There exists the beauty of legislation without conviction and conversion in belief. Nothing but the heavy hand of the Federal Government prevents a return to the old villainy of slavery; and even that hand is not strong enough for the production of co-operation in social decencies. The co-operation that labor wants is the real brotherhood of men who "have love one to another." And this brotherhood never yet came, and never can come, except by men's being imbued with the same great principle, to which they are striving every moment to live, from an affectionate reverence to one great lawgiver, who can favor no antagonisms among his children, except antagonisms to the sins that sever those children and make them wretched in such severance.

One illustration to which I have already referred will answer well again. Each early Congregationalist was so deeply imbued with the true meaning of Matt. 18. 17, as an ecclesiastical principle—politics in the matter never entering his contemplation—that he felt he must eternally believe it, eternally live it, and to it he must convert the world. But he began by being loyal to the truth himself; not by asking that legislatures should compel other men to be so. He believed, as all manly men do, in working out his own salvation by the means that God had put into his hands. Soon came—as always comes to such obedient sons of God—the brotherhood of men and the sisterhood of women like-minded with himself. There were, then, "two or three gathered together in the name" of the Master. And truly, the result to that Scrooby Church was all that that Master had promised of the gift of power, and it was as glorious as heart could wish. In the cathedral of St. Paul, in London, stands a statute of its architect, Christopher Wren. At the statue's foot is the inscription, in Latin, "Do you seek his monument? Look about you." Does my reader seek the monument of the men of that Scrooby Church, who, without legislative help or statemen's favors, but, rather with the bitterest persecution from legislatures and statesmen, were true to one of those words that "cannot pass away," even "though heaven and earth should pass away"—let him stand anywhere between "the lakes and the gulf," and "the Atlantic and the Pacific seas," and "look around" him? One magnificent mother republic and forty descendants of unparalleled endowments form their monument. The first organization to which these men looked was a church, not a state, and they founded it for themselves, or, rather it had another founder, but grew up in their hands, by their single-eyed, simple, but magnificent loyalty to a principle that he had enjoined. "Two or three gathered together in one name," in one of the most insignificant hamlets in Europe, and the face of earth's civilization is changed. Capitols, whose cost is millions on millions, become objects of contempt before a manifestation like this. Well said John Andrew, an experienced statesman, just as his earthly experience was drawing to a close: "From all that I can learn, all the good things that we have, have come from the church." Such good as the labor reformers want will have to come in the same way. Two or three gathered together, say in the city of Philadelphia, or in the most obscure corner of the land, it matters not which, and accepting Matthew 6. 19, reverently, in the love of God, fraternally, in the love of man, ready to live by it, ready to die for it, and determined to convert the world to it; holding to the promise, "If two of you shall agree on earth touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my father," and again the civilization of the earth shall be changed. For it would not be long before such men would gather into their fold men with organizing power hat a Kirke Boott could not despise. Catholics and Episcopalians tried to despise Congregationalists, yet the latter called to their side an abundance of Isaac Johnsons and John Winthrops from "paradises of plenty" to New England's inhospitable shores.

No man can tell us from history any reform of the same grade and kind as that desired by the labor party, which received its inception, modeling or establishment from political legislation. The thing never has been and never can be.

Suppose the labor reformers could achieve their pet political purposes. Suppose they could get an infrangible eight-hour law and a perfect system of graduated taxation; a most galling evil, one that now stings them to madness, would still remain. The employee would still be a plebian, the wealthy employer an aristocrat. Then there would be pleading to Congress for another civil rights bill. Pray, let's stop all this. The labor reformers have

Waiting amid the shadows
For the blushing of the dawn,
Waiting amid the darkness
For the sunlight of the morn;
Waiting because the appointed age
Has not told out its years—
Waiting because a groaning earth
Has wept not all its tears.

Toil-worn and very weary—
For the waiting time is long—
Leaning upon the promise—
For the Promiser is strong.
Waiting because some straying sheep
Are on the mountains still,
They must be sought, and found, and saved,
It is the Father's will.

Waiting 'mid cruel taunting
From many a scorning foe—
Chilled by the bitter night-winds;
The lamp of faith burns low,
Waiting because a patient God
Is pitiful and kind—
The seeking Shepherd may not leave
One halting lamb behind.

Waiting 'mid angry billows
For the breaking of the light—
Heart-sick, and sad, and fretful
With toiling all the night!
Waiting because the Master stands
To watch the rising tide,
And he would have us cast the net
Upon the other side.

Waiting while skies still blacken
With storm-clouds hanging low,
Eyes fail with looking upward
To find the emerald bow.
Waiting because the Master's eye
Is on the ripening grain
Th' impatient sickle must be stayed,
Waiting the "latter rain."

Waiting with hands still busy,
Chiding the tears that fall,
Stopping sometimes to listen,
If haply He should call.
Waiting because the mighty stream
Flows on with ceaseless tide;
There's room within the palace halls,
The open door stands wide.

Beguiling waiting hours,
With rapturous thoughts of home,
Breathing a yearning whisper,
"When will the Master come?"

Hark! get thee to the mountains,
There is sound of distant song;
The Bridegroom King is coming,
For his bride has waited long!

Centenary of the Suppression of the Jesuits.

It was in August, 1773, that a Franciscan monk, Ganganelli, better known as Clement XIV., set the seal of the fisherman to the famous Bull Dominus ac Redemptor, which suppressed the order of the Jesuits, closed their houses, confiscated their property and annulled every one of their privileges. It was not a step hastily taken on Ganganelli's part; on the contrary, events had led up to it in all directions. It was only the last act in a long series of demonstrations against the Society of Jesus. The order had made itself enemies on all sides; where it was not detested it was despised. Men had feared it once—they now flouted its pretentions. Singular to say, as its foes were those of its own household, so its only friends were found among skeptics, like Fredrick of Prussia, or schismatics like Catharine of Russia.

The slaughter of the Janissaries by Sultan Mahmoud was not a stranger act than this suppression of his own body-guard, the Jesuits, by the Pope. The explanation of it is to be found in the fact that even the Papacy has to reflect the ideas of the age it belongs to. The eighteenth century was the age of Illuminism. The ideas of the encyclopaedia and of a coming regeneration of man by the reform of a few Old World institutions were dominant everywhere. Voltaire was the philosopher, and Rosseau the prophet of a coming millenium. The age was steeped in sentimentalism, in visions of Utopias never to be realized. Exaggeration and affectation abounded everywhere. The mannerism of the old Court and regime broke out now in new quarters; it affected philosophers and even religious teachers. The Dresden china style of shepherds and shepherdesses were in fashion in real life; the age was modish, priggish and affected. It prated about the rights of man, but it overlooked their duties. The cant of the seventeenth century went after the heroes of Hebrew history—that of the eighteenth after the heroes of Greek and Roman history, but it was a cant in both cases, and the latter was the most unreal of the two; for the one was founded on authentic history, the other on the fictions of Plutarch and writers of the late empire, which passed for history.

Now, the strength and the weakness of the Papacy lies in this—that it is the creature of the age which it professes to guide. It was reforming in the age of the Reformation, as every reader of Ranke knows; and in the same way it became Rationalist, when deism was in the ascendant, in the so-called Age of Reason. Ganganelli, who was elected to the Papacy through the influence of France, to carry out the work which Choiseul and the French Court had set their heart on, was himself a creature of the age. A weak, well-meaning man, who would have been a passable monk if he had never crossed the threshold of a cloister, he was set to a problem which has been the despair of the boldest and most thoughtful minds ever since—viz., how to wed the past with the future. It is the marriage of January and May; but youth and age cannot thus live together even at the bidding of an absolute pope. He tried to break with the past, or, rather, to heal the breach which his predecessors had made with modern society, and because the Jesuits stood in his way, and resisted all change, he swept them away. But the Jesuits were right in their point of view and had their revenge in the long run. Their maxim was sint at sunt aut non sint, and time has proved that they were right. There are institutions which cannot reform, and whose only safety consists in a stolid resistance to change. The church of Rome is one of those institutions. It is like an old house, which may hold together for a long time if left alone, but to touch a brick is to destroy it throughout. Its only strength is a certain vis inertiae and to modernize it is to bring the whole building down with a crash.

The sequel showed that the Jesuits were right in their view of the case. Little more than thirty years after the expulsion of the Jesuits from Rome they were summoned back from their retreats in Russia by the penitent successor of Clement XIV. The Revolution had spent itself, and those who had sown the wind had reaped the whirl-wind. Then came the reaction. Loyola redux may be described as the motto of the age from 1814 to 1848. The Jesuits were everywhere present, and all powerful in the cabinets of kings as well as in the co claves of popes and cardinals. As for the church of Rome she has drifted more hopelessly every year under the direction of the Society of Jesus; and the Black Pope, as the general of the Jesuits is called at Rome, is a greater power there than the White Pope. The one is the titular prince of the church, but he is only a faineant king, like the long-haired Merovingian kings. The Mayor of the Palace, the major-domo at Rome, is General Beckx, who, from the Farnese Palace, held in hand the wires which moved the Roman hierarchy throughout the world.

Thus the centenary of the suppression of the Jesuits sees them not only restored to Rome, but also more powerful there than ever. Jesuitism is apparently more in the ascendant than ever in the church of Rome. It dictated the syllabus to a docile and willing pope; it drew from him the dogma of the immaculate conception; and at last tickled his personal vanity and secured its greatest triumph in the definition of his personal infallibility. The victories of Prussia and the decisive measures taken by Germany since the war to rid itself of these political meddlers, have been a heavy blow and sore discouragement; but it has recovered the blow, and has apparently rallied France to its side. These pilgrimages to the favorite shrines of Jesuit devotion seems to be signs that it has not lost its hold on the popular mind. In the year 1873 we seem to be further off than a century ago from the time when the order shall ultimately cease to exist.—Witness.

Bigotry.

The bigot to laxness is himself an inquisitor, and a foe to freely formed opinion. He is uneasy upon seeing that others have fixed and settled views, and attempts to unsettle them by attacks upon all definite statements of doctrine. Why is he not content with the liberty which he himself enjoys of adopting no particular sentiments, and of maintaining, like the ancient sophists, that there is no absolute truth, and that one thing is just as valid as another? He is allowed his own dislike and rejection of a creed, why should he disallow another man's liking for and adoption of a creed? His complaint over the freely formed conviction of his fellow-men that the evangelical system is the truth of God, is in reality a protest against their right of private judgment, and a demand that they adopt his opinions upon this point. But this is bigotry. If he would be content with his criticism and attack upon a particular creed, no fault would be found with him. But when, after the criticism and attack, he pronounces the advocate of the creed to be a bigot because he still remains unconvinced by his reasonings, and still retains his belief, he passes the line of free and fair discussion, and enters the province of intolerance and bigotry. He does not meet with this treatment from the defender of the "faith once delivered to the saints." The charge of bigotry is not often made by the orthodox against the hetrodox, but always by the heterodox against the orthodox. Perhaps we are the first since Dr. Johnson to direct attention to the bigotry of laxness. And we do not charge bigotry upon the latitudinarian merely because he attacks the evangelical creed, but because he calls those bigots who are not converted by his arguments.

It is curious to notice how extremes meet. The latitudinarian will be found to be narrow, when he comes to be examined; and the dogmatist will be found to be broad, when his real position is seen. The former is restless and uneasy upon discovering that his fellow-men in large masses are holding fixed opinions, and are ready to live and die by them. He complains and quarrels with them for so doing. The latter is calm and self-possessed. He is satisfied with freely-formed convictions and self-consistent creed, and while he does his best to convert to his own views those whom he regards as being in error, yet, if he finds himself to be unsuccessful, he enters no querulous complaint and indulges in no bitter intolerance, because he commits all judgment to God and the final day.—*Chris. A Good Mother.

Sometimes one hears said of a good wife and mother that "she's a regular home body." The phrase is simple, but what a world of ennobling qualities it indicates, and what a universe of frivolities it excludes. The matronly home body is indeed "Heaven's best gift to man." Dashing ladies, whose mission it is to set the fashions, won't you look in upon your gentle sister as she sits in her well ordered nursery, making the children happy with her presence? Note how she adjusts their little difficulties, and admonishes, encourages, instructs, amuses them as the case may require. Do you think any nurse-maid could produce such harmony in their little circle? Is she not an enchantress? Verily, yes, and her charm is "love stronger than death" for those sweet young faces, where you may see her smiles and frowns (though she seldom has occasion to frown) reflected in glee and sorrow like sunlight and cloud shadow in a quiet pool. What she is, she will teach her daughters to be; and blessed are the sons that have such a mother.—Ex.

WELL-SPENT LIFE—Dr. Cotton Mather, who was born at Boston, U. S., in the seventeenth century, commenced a life of the most active benificence when very young, and at the age of sixteen adopted as a maxim that a power and an opportunity to do good not only gives the right of doing it, but makes it a positive duty. On this maxim he determined to act, and continued to do so during the remainder of his days. Accordingly he began in his father's family, by doing all the good in his power to his brothers and sisters, and to the servants. After he had attained to man's estate, he imposed on himself a rule "never to enter any company where it was proper for him to speak without endeavoring to be useful in it; dropping, as opportunities might offer, some instructive hint or admonition." Not a day passed without some contrivance on his part "to do good," nor without his being able to say, at the close of it, that some part of his income had been distributed for pious purposes.

Maxims for Working Men.

The savings-bank is a safe debtor.

Fifty cents for a good lecture is better than half that sum for a circus.

Dress neatly. A well-clothed man commands favor and respect, while one in slovenly attire can hardly borrow his neighbor's saw horse.

If you wish to personally comprehend the completest meaning of the old adage "A fool and his money are soon parted," buy a lottery ticket.

Never sacrifice money for what people will say. It is better to buy a fair piece of beef at fifteen cents a pound, and leave the surloin for some other man, who would buy your kind except for the name.

The man is always most honored who is most excellent in what he undertakes. It is better to saw wood well than to plead law poorly.

Be honest; a cold stove is better than a stove hot with stolen fuel.

The laboring man holds the same relation to the merchant manufacturer, attorney, physician and minister, that the locomotive does to a train of elegant and well-filled cars: they would stand still forever if the engine did not move them.

There is many an honest, hard-working poor man, who rises himself and calls his family before sunrise three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. In nine cases out of ten, when his children arrive at his age, they will be called up by servants.

A meerschaum-pipe and bank book always quarrel, and the upshot of the encounter generally is, that one puts the other out of doors.

Work harder at drilling rocks, for instance, if your employer never visits you than if he frequently does. He will know of your faithfulness when he pays for the drills.

The poverty of childhood is more frequently than otherwise the stepping-stone to wealth.

It is better to eat one meal a day and pay for it, than to eat three and have two of them charged.

The larger your account with Trust, the sooner Debt will take your business into his hands.

It costs a poor man more to let his children wander in their every-day clothing, Sabbath-days, than it does to dress them for church.

Want is a far less uncomfortable companion than debt.

Never envy a rich neighbor; his boys will drive your children's carriages.

A poor man's character is worth two dollars to him, where his hands are worth one.

A full purse and a brandy bottle rarely occupy opposite pockets in the same coat.

Never dodge a dirty job. The richest deposits of gold are frequently overlaid by the deepest debris.—From "Money and How to Make It."

Table Manners.

LITTLE FOLKS, ARE YOU POLITE AT YOUR MEALS?

In silence I must take my seat,
And give God thanks before I eat;
Must for my food in patience wait
Till I am asked to hand my plate;
I must not scold, nor whine, nor pout,
Nor move my chair or plate about;
With knife, or fork, or napkin ring,
I must not play—nor must sing;
I must not speak a useless word,
For children must be seen—not heard;
I must not talk about my food
Nor fret if I don't think it good;
My mouth with food I must not crowd,
Nor while I'm eating speak aloud;
Must turn my head to cough or sneeze,
And when I ask, say, "If you please;"
The table-cloth I must not spoil,
Nor with my food my fingers soil;
Must keep my seat when I have done,
Nor round the table sport or run;
When told to rise then I must put
My chair away with noiseless foot,
And lift my heart to God above
In praise for all his wondrous love.

God's No.

"Mother, did God ever say 'No' to you?"

Arthur had been sitting quietly by the window with his book in hand—not reading, but thinking very earnestly for some minutes—when suddenly he startled his mother with that question

Mrs. Morrow looked a little astonished at first, then a grave sad smile came over her face, and then she answered: "Yes, dear, a great many times."

Arthur seemed only half satisfied. "Why, mother, I don't see; how do you mean?"

"What made you ask the question, Arthur?"

"Why, you see, I was walking from school to-day, and I came round by Dr. Edward's place to see the flowers: everybody said they looked so beautiful after the rain. And when I came up, I found little Alice Reed standing close against the fence, with her curly head between the railings, looking at the flowers as if she was almost hungry for some of them. You know her, don't you, mother? Poor Mrs. Reed's little girl, who lives in the old tumble-down house around the corner."

"Yes."

"Her father gets drunk so often, and don't do any work; they are very poor. Well, when I stopped and stood by her, she looked up to me and said, "Oh, isn't it beautiful?" and her eyes shone so. Then, just for fun, I said, Alice, why don't you live in such a fine big house, and have such fine flowers?" She shook her head and answered, 'Because God says, No.' It sounded strange; I could not understand her at first, and she looked as if she felt perfectly willing to let other people have pretty things, and do without herself. I have been thinking about it ever since; wasn't it queer for a little thing like her to say?"

"It is just what we all ought to learn to say, Arthur, and say with just that little girl's faith and quiet content. We should be much happier if we did. It is very hard, sometimes, because we are apt to forget that God loves us so well, and always does what is best for us."

Arthur went and sat down by the side of his mother, and said, "Mother, please tell me how God said, No to you."

"He said it many times, my boy, before I learned that it was his tender, wise voice speaking for my good. I worried and was impatient at crosses and disappointments; but oh, how much brighter sorrow seemed when I once learned that God wrapped it as a covering around his love, that I might open wide the hand of faith and find my treasure!"

"Once, Arthur, I had a little daughter of whom I was very proud; I said to myself, 'I will teach her everything good and noble; I will take such care of her; and by-and-by she will grow up to be a comfort and a pleasing companion to me,' but God said 'No' He took away my darling, and disappointed my desire."

The next time that God's 'No' broke in upon my joy, was when your dear father died. I felt the sorrow coming, and I prayed that my boy might have a father spared to train and to guide him as he grew to manhood. But God said 'No' again; and oh, it was hard, at first, to feel that it was the voice of Love speaking! It was so dark, I could not see the wisdom and mercy of such a trial, but God knows best."

Arthur's head sank lower, and his tears fell fast as he listened.

"Again, I said to myself, We will not leave the old house, though there are only us two; we will keep the pleasant rooms and the beautiful grounds just the same; and as Arthur grows up, he will learn to love the trees which he planted and the vines which he trained. But God said 'No' to me. The handsome house had to be sold into other hands, and we came away from the place we loved so, to a more humble home. But God has been gracious to us, and we have been very happy here—you and I, Arthur. Poor Mrs. Reed and little Alice have wants and sorrows that we know nothing of."

"But mother, it seems to me that there are some people whom God never says 'No' to; at least, they seem to have everything they want."

"Ah, we cannot tell, my boy; only God himself can see into every heart, and understand the secrets of every life. Sometimes his 'No' is spoken very low, and only one in all the world can hear it—and that may be the one we count perfectly happy and wanting nothing."

"Does God ever say 'No' to me, mother?"

"Yes, but sometimes you do not recognize it as his voice. God has been very good to you; but he has begun to say his 'No' to you in slight things, so as to prepare your faith and patience for the greater trials which must come in after life. Last week, when you had planned a pleasant excursion with the boys, and were anticipating so much joy, it stormed. You only kept saying, 'It's to bad! I don't see what it rained for, this time!' and you were so unhappy that it grieved me to see you. Now, you should remember that it was the voice of a kind God, refusing you a pleasure because he knew it to be best that you should not have it; and you should have said, calmly and contentedly, as little Alice did, 'God says No."

"But, mother, it is so hard—don't you think it is—to be always contented with every thing that comes?"

"Yes, Arthur, we are like little children who cry for pretty things which they cannot have because mamma says 'No.' We reach out our hands for some pleasure, and we say, 'Oh, if I can only have that, I shall be so happy!' But God knows better. He puts out his hand and takes away the object we long for, and his loving voice says 'No.' And oh, Arthur, if we could only learn to lay our hands upon his bosom, as a little child rests on his mother, and to feel peaceful and trustful, that all things will work together for our good, how much happier we should be!"

Arthur looked up in his mother's calm face, and felt that she at least had learned to cast all her care upon Him who careth for us! And he resolved to learn the lesson, too. Will you, my young friends? Youth is the time to begin; before the evil days come, anchor yourselves fast to God by faith. Learn to feel that whatever God sends is the best for you, and what God takes away is best for you not to have. Remember that "God, in cursing, giveth better gifts than man in benediction;" that God's 'No' is more full of love and tender mercy than the sweetest blessings of the most generous earthly voice."—Selected.

Temperance.

—Hon. Nehemiah Perry was elected Mayor of Newark, N. J., because of his opposition to Sunday liquor selling.

—A temperance alliance has been organized in the seventeenth ward of the city of Brooklyn, which maintains a free reading-room, open every night, with over one hundred different papers and publications on file.

—Tom. Foley, who fills the responsible position of Alderman in Chicago, and is a notorious liquor and billiard hall keeper, has been appointed by Mayor Colvin chairman of the committee on public schools.

—Judge Aldrich, of Worcester, lately appointed by the Governor to the bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, recently remarked, that, "During the two months and a half which he had presided over the sessions of the criminal court of this county, he had observed that at least seven-eights of the cases had their foundation in the use of intoxicating liquors." He added that; "if he could have his way in bringing about a remedy, he would commence at the other end of the crime"—that is, with the liquor-sellers.

—Statistics of temperance in New York shows that the vice is on the increase, and what is worse that intemperate women are more nearly irreclaimable than intemperate men. The number of men committed to the workhouse, from January 1873 to January 1874, six times for drunkenness, was 108; number of women committed six times, 3,702; number committed seven times—men, 28; women, 602; number committed ten times—men, 181; women, 1,157; number committed one hundred times—men, 1; women, 29; total committed in four years—men, 560; women, 9,006, or eighteen females to one male.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, April 2, 1874.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE is devoted to opposing Secret Societies, but no great question of reform will be ignored in our columns. Articles for publication and items of interest will be thankfully received, and should be addressed to the Office Editor, at 11 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

A "Glorious Success;" or, "It Might Have Been"—Which?

Two thousand extra copies of this number of the Cynosure will be sent to canvassers for the paper, and we hope for great results. Our subscription list can be doubled during April and May if each one will TRY TO DO SOMETHING, for several have promised elubs. Every reader of the Cynosure can surely get us a three months subscriber or two, at fifty cents each, with a LITTLE effort.

As fast as our list increases we shall try to make the Cynosure more and more valuable—shall we have YOUR encouragement, readers? Perhaps you have tried before with little or no success and so hesitate about trying again. Do not forget that in spite of past failure you may now have complete success, for the cause has made great progress in the past year, and you can NOW offer a large handsome paper, for three months at fifty eents, or a year for two dollars. Will you not try and see what you can do AT ONCE? Subscription papers and samples will be sent free to those who order them, but we hope that you will try to get at least one subscriber without waiting for these.

THE PUBLISHERS.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE.

The readers of the Cynosure will without an exception be delighted with the transformation of their paper. Its fine appearance is not due to new type but to a better arrangement of the old, which must now speak for fresh-nibbed pens and in new departments. These are the improvements that will be valued most.

Beginning with the table of Contents, which beside being a sharpener of the mental appetite serves the useful purpose of an index for reference, we come to a place of observation where as from a watchtower we have an out-look upon the tumultuously busy times. Not unfamiliar names come next, as the mental kalicdoscope is turned; and in the argument, the experience, the cherished friendship for the dead Sumner, and the genial and honest rhyme we are instructed and fortified against the deceptions of an invidious foe. No less will the farmer, and the laboring man—and that means nearly all of us—be thankful for the help from other sources to a better understanding of our dangers and their sole remedy. The trumpet notes of our reform will claim of course the first notice of the men of zeal, our Joabs and Benaiahs, and will be worth reading by any rare individuals who have little or none of their spirit. The Home Circle is the teaching place of nations and will be so esteemed in the future issues of the paper; and with it is the Children's Corner. We have not much to say of our editorial pages, but in them. The sterling words of our fathers—a generation fast passing to revered graves,—the news of Christian work and progress, the passing events, the cheerful notes from everywhere and every mail will be found to be weekly more interesting.

"Of new things some are over new,"— but such are not our Sunday-school column and departments for in and out-door hints, nor will they be; neither we hope ever too old. The publication of permanent and valuable documents will be a feature of the new paper, which being intended for wide circulation are here given first to our readers.

Altogether we are pleased, though not satisfied, with the present number. "The path of the just shineth more and more unto the perfect day," and so, God grant, may the Cynosure.

A CHICAGO PHYSICIAN THREATENED.

The theory of the lodge is that the higher degrees have in their discretion both vengeance and protection for those below. True or false, the writer below believes it. We call the attention of our readers to the following extract from what purports to be a letter to the editor of the Chicago Times, concerning the painful and revolting matters between him and the physician who attended his deceased wife; not to keep alive what were best forgotten, but to fix the public mind on what deeply and seriously concerns us all. The letter purports to have been written by a Freemason of the thirty-second degree, and is a threat of Masonic vengeance on the physician, Dr. Johnson, who, it represents, is a member of the same order. The writer professes to speak by authority, and "on the part of our order." His letter concludes thus:

Whether or not the Masonic order will take official cognizance of his abominable offense, I cannot now say, nor, were I officially aware that it would be done, would I be permitted to make the fact public. Should the fraternity try him, as it should, and punish him as he deserves,—were such a punishment possible,—the fact could never come to the knowledge of the public.

I can only say, that the Masonic fraternity of this city, in its sentiments, repudiates, with loathing and horror, the sacrilegious crime of this man. He has sunk himself, by his attack upon the character of a dead woman, into an abyss of Masonic contempt and abhorrence from which no human agency, and no time, will, or can, ever extricate him. I desire, in the defense of the chivalry, decency, and dignity of our beloved and all-powerful order, to put these facts on record. Having done this, I have only to add that I assure the world that our order knows how to punish; and though the processes are secret, they are none the less swift or inexorable.

THIRTY-SECOND.

I have put in italics the portions of the extract which particularly demand public notice, only observing that though the writer of this letter may be deemed from his writing a weak and extravagant person, the view he takes of the power of the Masonic order to try and "punish" American citizens in secret, according to its discretion, is sustained by the standard writers of the order in this country and in Europe.

Take, for instance, the following from Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, eighth edition, 1869; title, Powers of Grand Lodges: "MAINE. To inflict such punishment on the delinquent and guilty as may appear just and proper." The Rhode Island Grand Lodge claims, however, to "punish" in the same words; so others.

The punishments open and published to the world in this Digest, are only the ordinary repremand, suspension and expulsion. But this Times letter-writer notifies the world that there are 'processes" of punishment, "secret," "swift," and "inexorable," and the history of the lodge from 1826–31 has shown the world that the rule and limit of those "processes" are the sole secret discretion of the lodge when it has its victims in its power.

Are the people of Chicago generally aware that a voluntary society exists among them, claiming the right to inflict death on its members for violating its by-laws, limited only by what may seem to the lodge-leaders prudent and safe?

MORTIMER M. LEGGETT.

Some months since the public were startled by learning that a student of Cornell University had been killed while undergoing initiation to a college society. Various accounts of the matter were published, some exaggerated, and others partial. Many papers discussed the matter and took different views of the subject. It has now passed from general notice. What reason exists for recalling it? The good and sufficent one that the truth has not been made known. The whole truth cannot be told now. Those who can tell, will not, and those who are willing to do so, cannot. The facts here stated were ascertained from gentlemen of Ithaca, and the inquests which the coronor held.

First, then, the young man, blindfolded by a black cloth, was allowed to fall from the cliff by men who were conducting him, and probably drunk at the time. He was taken to the third story of a brick block and kept there until he died. He was taken, or rather his body was, slung over a man's shoulder like a bag of meal, at 2 o'clock at night to the undertaker's, where he was encoffined. The members of the secret society which killed him, then tried to get his coffin on the cars without an inquest, but failed.

Second, professors and students alike tried to prevent any investigation of the matter. One of the professors, on the morning after the killing, came to the editor of the Ithaca Journal and asked him to make no mention of the matter; saying, "The boys were after a few grapes when the unfortunate thing happened; don't say anything about it." When the first inquest was held, students, members of the society, stood there and refused to answer questions until instructed by a professor as to the answer they should make. On this first examination, witnesses sworn to tell the truth and nothing else, endeavored to hide the fact that the young man was being initiated into their secret society, told nothing about the blind-fold; in short, while answering as this professor directed them, did their utmost to hide the truth they were sworn to tell.

The young men who went over the cliff with Leggett were guarded by the members of this secret society; professors and reporters excluded from their rooms and no one free from the contemptable oaths of secretism permitted to exchange a word with them until the inquest, when of course their secret professor had them instructed in the testimony they should give. (This is an inference from facts known, and not stated absolutely.)

When the second inquest was held many things were learned, but still the evidence was evidently untrustworthy to the last degree. One young man, a senior, said that he never knew of an accident on such occasions; and when asked about a whiskey bottle that was found on the ground, said it was customary to have a bottle of whiskey in case of accident, showing that accidents were expected at that time. Several of the young men testified it was no part of the plan to frighten the candidate, that initiation was made as pleasant as possible, that none had been drinking, etc., when a child would know by looking at the place they selected for their work, that this testimony was untrue.

Third, after these facts became known in Ithaca, the faculty took no effective measures to prevent their recurrence. They indeed passed a few silly and contradictory resolutions, but did not root out the secret society that murdered Leggett, nor any others. President White, who is known only to the public as a small politician, made a rambling, incoherent speech to the students, at one moment endorsing Dr. Crosby's article on secret fraternities, and the next, saying that eminent doctors of divinity were Kappa Alpha's; saying that he had by a word abolished one society, and then coming to the lame and impotent conclusion that it was impossible to abolish them all. Vice-President Russell seems to be a kindred spirit, for after sitting during an hour and a half in a hall were Prof. Blanchard was speaking, and more than a hundred of his (Prof. Russell's) students indulging in conduct which would have been a lasting disgrace to a like number of Barbary apes, he took the platform without asking or receiving permission; entered on a defense of one of the young men connected with the killing of Mr. Legget; talked of the "moon careering through the azure heavens;" and then said that he had not a word to say in regard to the conduct of the students at that time. Prof. Wilder made a good stroke for the right, but fights alone; in short, the society which murdered the young man whose name heads this article, and others like it, control Cornell University.

So long as this is the case, of course Ithaca must endure the presence of a smoking, drinking, howling, swearing set of young barbarians who lack nothing but brains to become a low grade of Indians. We are far from asserting or believing that all Cornell students are of this sort; that too many are is painfully evident. Let us hope that the future may bring to Cornell better days.

UTTERLY UNRELIABLE.

Who are utterly unreliable? The writers and speakers who defend and extol Freemasonry, be they members, or be they not members of the lodge, Whether they are generally intelligent and truthful or not, yet whenever they approach this mysterious subject they become at once mysteriously unreliable.

The "Jack" Masons are unreliable because they set out with discrediting the testimony of the whole cloud of witnesses who have renounced Masonry and disclosed the secrets, which stamp indelibly upon the institution a character of evil that admits of no vindication. The "Jacks" do not pretend to justify Masonry as it is described by all seceding Masons. But when they deny the testimony of seceding Masons, they assert their own entire ignorance of what Freemasonry really is. Masons do not tell them the secret things of the order, and if seceding Masons do not give them truth they are wholly incompetent judges of the institution they defend. Their good opinions of the order is simply a prejudice based not upon the testimony of Masons as to facts, but upon their mere assertion of opinions, while the facts by which alone the correctness of those opinion can be determined are kept secret. The "Jack" Mason therefore is a mere creature of prejudice, a blinded partizan, a facile dupe in the hands of those who use him for their crafty purposes and dirty work, while in their hearts they despise him as a servile simpleton for thus "judging a matter before he hears it; or, hearing the truth, rejects it from love of deceit, or of the thrift which follows fawning.

But when Masons defend Masonry, an objector may say they surely know whereof they affirm, and to say they are utterly unreliable is to deny that a Mason can be a good man or anything but a liar on this subject. Far be it from us to bring any such sweeping and indiscriminate accusation against Masons. We never deny that many who are called Masons are good men and true. But good men and true in the evangelical sense of these words are not real Masons any more than bad men and false are true Christians. "They are not all Israel that are of Israel;" so they are not all Masons that are in the lodges. Many enter, and finding nothing satisfactory or congenial to a Christian spirit, yet not detecting the real iniquity that is so plausibly concealed in this vast system of counterfeit good, they simply stay away from it; like Washington, scarcely visiting the lodge once in fifteen years. Seeing nothing very good or very bad, they wish well to the members and are willing to be thought well of by them; and perceiving no reasons for testifying against the lodge as weighty as those which demand their silence, they simply stay away and say nothing. These men are not at heart Masons. They have been deceived by the counterfeit and are but partially undeceived. They do not advocate Masonry, yet they do not tell what they know, nor frankly what they think. Masons and the world may construe their silence as approval of Masonry, and hence their responsibility is fearful; but to those seeking knowledge of the truth in the matter they are wholly unreliable. Other good men may be more fully deceived and therefore verily think that Masonry is the good thing it claims to be, and in that view may advocate and extol the system. Yet they are unreliable, not merely because they are decieved on the subject; not merely because they consider themselves under oath ever to conceal from the world every point and iota of fact which distinguishes Masonry from all other systems, and without a knowledge of which no man can form an intelligent opinion of its moral character; but because these witnesses are all at loggerheads and disagreement with known facts, and with themselves and with each other. Among intelligent and honest witnesses there is usually substantial agreement. This is notably the case with all the thousands of seceding Masons from Pritchard to the latest seceder in this year of grace, 1874. This striking disagreement of witnesses on one hand and the perfect agreement on the other is, we think, conclusive, and ought to banish all doubt as to which side has the truth. If any one will take Pritchard's Masonry Dissected, published in 1730, and compare it with Priests' Jachin and Boaz, published in 1762, and then with Morgan's Masonry Exposed, published in 1826, and then with the disclosures of Allyn and Stearns, and the still later ones of Richardson, Duncan, Tapley and others; all the disclosures in fact, except the spurious editions corrupted and altered by Masons for the express purpose of breaking the force of this agreement, they will find the testimony of all these witnesses a harmonious unity, consistent with all known facts, with themselves and with each other.

Then turn to the testimony of the advocates of Masonry. Hon. John W. Forney, in a recent eulogy of Freemasonry in Philadelphia, expressed a strong desire that the great Centenial celebration should be committed to the care and direction of the mystic brotherhood; for the reason, among others, "that there is no association on this continent more intimately connected with the history and growth of our country." But where in our history is it even mentioned? It might indeed be mentioned in connection with the attempt of that distinguished Mason, Benedict Arnold, to surrender by the aid of Masonic secrecy our army at West Point; or with the successful defiance of the power and laws of New York to punish the murderers of William Morgan; but how either would associate the order with the growth of the country, and entitle it to distribute for the benefit of its clan the $10,000,000 appropriation asked of Congress for the Centennial we are unable to see. Still more palpably at variance with known facts is his assertion in the same connection, that "there are no Anti-masons now." "Now, nobody is willing to admit that he ever opposed your organization." How beautifully this harmonizes with known facts! Rather, how clearly it shows that Masonic orators are accustomed to humbug their hearers and to set a greater value on falsehood for their harangues than upon truth. Forney is not ignorant himself, he only presumed his hearers to be so. When the great men of an association will talk thus recklessly on historical facts, is it too much to say they are utterly unreliable?

Rev. Mr. Muller, in his Masonic address in Rochester, declared that Masonry was no substitute for religion; nay, that it was not even religious. Rev. Dr. Mayer, in his oration at the dedication of the Masonic Hall in Wellsville, O., said, "Masonry is truly the great art to promote the perfection of mankind;" and he asks, "Is it not a religion? A religion! No, my brethren, we may rather call it THE religion. It is entitled to this sublime distinction through its aim to make man's life happy and godly, and his death enviable and peaceful. It is certainly the true religion of mankind."

Thus their doctors disagree and they often contradict themselves as flatly as they do each other. V. G. Edwards, in a public Masonic address in Syracuse, said that Masonry embraced men of all shades of religious belief, but acknowledged the supremacy of the Decalogue and took the Bible for its guide in all things. Men of all shades of belief cannot acknowledge the supremacy of the Decalogue or take the Bible as their guide in any thing. Thus this Mason contradicts himself and contradicts Chase, a standard writer on Masonry, who says, "Masonry has nothing to do with the Bible."

Many Masonic writers claim that Masonry dates as far back as Enoch. Still more place it as far back as Solomon. But Dr. Dalcho, one of the highest Masons in Morgan times, denied that either Adam or Noah, Nimrod or Moses, Joshua or David, Solomon or Hiram, or the Saints John, were Masons. "To assert they were Freemasons," he says, "may make the vulgar stare, but will rather excite the contempt than the admiration of the wise." While Steinbrenner, the Masonic historian, says expressly that Freemasonry dates no farther back than A. D. 1717.

Such illustrations of the utter disagreement of Masonic witnesses may be multiplied indefinitely. To say therefore that they are utterly unreliable is to put it in the mildest form consistent with any reasonable appreciation of so pregnant a fact. It is a fact that ought to satisfy all men as to where truth and right are in this controversy; that of a truth a deceiving and lying spirit is the all-pervading spirit of Freemasonry.

Where Shall Our Anniversary Meeting be held Next Year?

One friend has mentioned Richmond, Indiana.

Indianapolis has also been suggested.

The conditions which make a place desirable for such a meeting are:

First, Railroads accessible from different parts of the country.

Second, A home sentiment which is not hostile to the interests of the Association.

Third, Daily papers are desirable, as their reports add to the usefulness and extend information of the Convention.

Will not all who have an opinion on this subject communicate with Pres. Blanchard as soon as convenient?

LECTURES.—Parties desiring lectures on the secret orders from President Blanchard, or Prof. C. A. Blanchard, can have them by application, provided one hundred dollars are raised to aid in paying the building debt of Wheaton College. Any person desiring to aid the College or secure lectures, can address either the above-named gentlemen, Wheaton, Ill.

OBERLIN COLLEGE sends an opinion on secret orders which appears on our first page. The practice of the institution on this question is of national repute; nor can much be said of the history and present condition of the College not already well known to the public. It is forty years since the town was begun, and now in a community of 4,000 people—without a dram bar—is a Christian college with six departments: Theological, Collegiate, Scientific, Female, Preparatory and Musical, with an attendance of 1,371 pupils, 723 males and 648 females. This great success comes of devotion to God and truth.

WHEATON COLLEGE.—This institution, so well and favorably known to the readers of the Cynosure, has never been more prosperous than at present. Its faculty now number some fourteen members. Its students are more numerous than hitherto; this year about two hundred and fifty earnest and able young men and women. The Illinois subscription toward the payment of its debt has now reached eighteen hundred dollars. More and better than all, souls have beeen converted and spirit as well as mind strengthened for the battle of life. Its spring term begins Thursday, April 9th, at 8½ A. M.

NOTES.

—In making up the forms this week it was a puzzling question to fix upon the proper volume and number. A somewhat arbitrary compromise has been struck between the fortnightly and weekly editions, thus: up to September 7 th, 1871, when the first number of the weekly appeared, there had been seventy-nine issues of the fortnightly. The present whole number is made by adding this to the whole number of weekly issues. The paper will have been published seven years next August so we are now in the sixth volume. The current number of the weekly has been retained that the volume may be complete when fifty-two papers are issued.

—Charles P. Sumner, father of the late Senator, was sheriff of Suffolk county, Massachusetts, instead of Essex, as recently stated in these columns, Any who are interested to know his opinions on Freemasonry can find them in the Cynosure, September 5–19, 1872. They were drawn from a personal acquaintance with the institution, and will be interesting at the present time.

—Rev. Milton Smith, an active member of the first convention (Aurora) in the present movement against the lodge, died recently at Wheaton. A member of the Wesleyan church, he faithfully maintained its testimony against the slavery and lodge systems "through evil as well as good report." The Wesleyan church at Wheaton had just before suffered another severe loss in the death of its pastor, H. R. Will.

—An error in the notice of Old Books, for sale by J. C. Rownd, last week requires notice. Robinson's Proofs will be sent post paid; Barreul's Memoirs of Jacobinism at the cost of purchaser, by mail or express according to order. These works should be brought into active service without delay.

—Elder Isaac Jackson and Mrs. Mary T. Jackson have been appointed delegates to Syracuse by the Vernon Co., Association of Minnesota.

Lodge against Law.

RICHARD RUSH'S LETTERS, 1831.

I did not sit down to write a dissertation on Masonry, nor am I going to give myself to that task. I dwell not upon its remote origin and long history; upon its curious titles, upon its ceremonies of oriental mould and celestial exaltation. I dive not into its claims to science, to philanthrophy, or to religion. All these I leave for good or bad, for censure or commendation. My concern at present is with none of these. I purposely turn away that there may be no diversion from the scene I am surveying. I am in a field by itself. There my astonished sight beholds two figures; the state with the broken scepter of the laws in her hand on one side, and Masonry with a veil over her face on the other. My vision is distinct, though the spectacle is so protentous. I go not beyond the narrative that presents it. Keeping to that I am guarded against mistake or confusion. I have here immovable ground under me. I take post as upon the verity of a legal record. A few facts are all that I want, and these I have. I desire to render the case irresistible by its concentration and its simplicity. I believe Morgan was seized, carried far from his home by Masons, and by Masons murdered. I believe that this was the result of a conspiracy, engendered and carried through under circumstances of peculiar deliberation, malignity and terror. Yet to this very hour, the nefarious deed remains unpunished. I have watched the pursuit of justice. I see how she is disheartened, fatigued, worn down by efforts continued throughout years, to clutch these worse than Calabrian banditti. I see her at fault; I see her countenance in despair. Masons know the whole tale of blood. Who can deny this? Masons conceal it. Who can deny this? Can any sentient, reasonable being say that Masonry is not at the bottom of the evil. True, there are depraved Masons who act in this manner and I do not mean to judge all other Masons by them; but Masonry, corporate, existent Masonry is the root. The abandoned fiends of the order, who know the truth, conceal it on system. They are wicked through principle. They confound crime with virtue; murder, with Masonic merit, Like imps of Pandemonium, they rejoice and dance in their sin. Like the crew in the Mask of Comus, they are unconscious of their "foul disfigurement." The deeper their guilt the more they make themselves invulnerable. You can no more grasp them, than if they sink into the earth or mount into the air. A spirit inexorable as death destroyed the life of this citizen; and like a spirit it became invisible. It is here—it is there—it is gone; nobody can see it; but society feels it. It is the spirit of night. The magistrate strikes, but it is into vacuity. He follows up the blow, again and again, but it falls upon a shadow. Is all this nothing? Is it to be forgotten; to be mentioned with indifference; to be sneered at as fanfaronade? If the press has turned deserter, and gone over to the enemy whose profligate cohorts have overthrown the laws, is that a reason why the people should not be true to themselves? Is the whole army to be given up because the sentinels have skulked? If so, where is our intelligence; where our estimate of the popular dignity; where our republicanism; where our quick, our exalted sense of the country? Where, we may ask, had fled our Jefferson's sagacity, when he told us a republic was the strongest government upon earth, since it was the only form under which, on a breach of the law everyone would fly to its support as a personal concern? Had he heard of the opposing spirit of our day that could spurn the laws? Had he heard of the spirit, creeping in darkness, that could not only cover the guilty with an armor impenetrable, but try to throw odium on those who cry out for retribution? Solon being asked which was the most perfect popular government, replied, That where an injury done to any private citizen is such to the whole body. The blood of a murdered Roman, of one single Roman, could once rouse that whole race of freeman as by a voice from above. It could call down a just vengeance against all who caused the deed. More than once it changed their government. It expelled the Tarquins; it overthrew the Decemvirs. It kindled a holy enthusiasm which nothing could appease, until the guilty authors were blasted and consumed, that thus the wounded commonwealth, a name sacred in Roman eyes, might have its propitiatory sacrifice. It was so that Roman glory, that work of ages, as Tacitus describes it, that toil of patriots, and statesmen, and legislators, and warriors, was founded and kept pure. But in our boasted republic the blood of an American, who was taken from his home; bound; tortured; agonized; borne by the conspirators along the high-roads, with an impudent cavalcade of carriages and horsemen; cast into a fortress over which had floated the sovereign flag of the Union; and at last immolated by harpies belonging to an organized and powerful institution, who conceal their crime under the horrible delusions of their mystic tie—all this is to go for nothing?

The institution is not to blame; no, it is no fault of the institution! The immolation is to cause no public dismay. We are to sit still in stupid gaze; some beholding it with folded arms, others in derision! The press is silent; or the press scoffs. The institution even turns complainant. It positively grows belligerent; it shows battle. It will not be "persecuted." It will have no noise made; none of all this flash—and rhodomontade—and bluster. The small number who are for driving the conspirators into the toils, and permanently breaking up their den to save the future from all possibility of similar tragedies are denounced, ridiculed! They are infected with "Anti-masonic excitement,"—they are demagogues, office hunters; they were getters-up of a groundless party, without use or motive, or object. Was ever an intelligent community so treated before? Was ever the understanding of rational men so trifled with? Did ever corporate hardihood in any age or nation assume a front so brazen faced? Let it go on. It works its proper office. In this manner let it perpetuate its power of defeating the laws. In good time we shall have some other "affair," some fresh peccadillo, some new variety in the dramatics of mystery, for an evening's amusement and editors' gibes!

LESSON XV.—APRIL 12, 1874.—THE GOLDEN CALF.

SCRRIPTURE LESSON.—EX. XXXii. 1-6, 19, 20. Commit all; Primary Verse 5.

1 And when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods, which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

2 And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden earrings, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me.

3 And all the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron.

4 And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf; and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the Lord

6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt offerings, and brought peace offerings; and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

19 And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.

20 And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

Qualifications for Teachers.

1 Untiring activity.

2. Pray for and with the class.

3. The baptism of the Holy Spirit.

4. Prayerful and careful preparation of the teacher, with always a pleasant recognition of the scholar, with a daily exemplary life.

5. The most important of all is, to mind your business. Success will follow.

6. Punctuality in attendance on the part of the teachers.

7. Professing Christians should have a more catholic spirit toward all who love the Lord Jesus.

8. In order to obtain success in our work we, as teachers, should adopt the following maxims:

Punctuality in attendance.

The pure love of Jesus in our hearts.

Constancy at the throne of grace, interceding for those under our care; at the same time practicing what we preach.

9. A deeper work of grace in our hearts, and a stricter obedience to the command, "Go work in my vineyard to-day."

10. Promptness of the teacher one great element of success—to be always at his post, or appoint a substitute.

11. As the virtue of the electric wire is not in the wire itself, but in its connection with the voltaic battery, so the power of the Sunday School teacher is not in the fervor of his manner, the order and arrangement of his teaching, but in his living connection with God, and his capacity to act as a connecting link between God and the human soul.

Let us pray earnestly and always, that this capacity in our Sunday School teachers may never be weakened or destroyed, and our success is sure.

12. To succeed in our work, we need more faith in it, (i. e.) must regard our work as appointed and sustained by the Master of the vineyard.

Must be consecrated to our work. Every member of the church should seek a place, as pupil, teacher or officer in the Sunday School Must labor for a worthy end. Be more anxious for spiritual life and growth than for increase of the members of our schools.

Must have thorough preparation, or a careful study of the topics taught, and the best means of illustrating them, but relying more upon the Holy Spirit's presence than any mental culture.

Must work from proper motives whatever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of Jesus.

13. Superintendents qualified for the work by natural gifts, to interest, to guide, direct and control teacher and scholars, in firmness, meekness and love; consecration to God of his entire self, and by prayer for the guidance of the Holy Ghost, that all may be for the glory of God in the salvation of souls.

Teachers qualified to teach Christ, from an earnest love to Christ, and a desire to win souls to him.

Parents to realize that children have souls as well as bodies that need caring for, and that God will hold them strictly accountable for the moral training of the child. The trust cannot be delegated to another.

The church fully aroused to her responsibility in regard to Sabbath School work, and recognizing it (the school) as a part of herself, a moral vineyard in which the tender plants (the souls) must be tenderly cared for, trained to forms of beauty (won to to Christ) and finally transplanted into the church.

—A reason for beginning early in the preparation of a lesson is suggested by the S. S. Times in the interest of pupils who may lack the means and appliances of study:

The time to begin preparation is about two weeks previous to any given Sabbath. One object of this is that the teacher may be able to furnish his pupils a week beforehand with such suggestions and information as may be a help to them in studying the lesson. Many a child comes poorly prepared to school because he does not know how to catch the main thought of the lesson. A stimulating question, some illustrative fact, a passage of secular or biblical history written on a slip of paper and put in the Bible of each scholar will often prove a key to the lesson that looks difficult and unpromising.

Home and Health Hints.

How Plants Purify the Air.

Plants gain their nourishment by the absorption through their roots of certain substances from the soil, and by the decomposition, through their green portions, of a particular gas contained in the atmosphere—carbonic acid gas. They decompose this gas into carbon, which they assimilate, and oxygen which they reject. Now this phenomenon, which is the vegetable mode of respiration, can only be accomplished with the assistance of solar light.

Charles Bonnet of Geneva, who began his career by experimenting on plants, and left this attractive subject to devote himself to philosophy, only in consequence of a serious affection of his sight, was the first to detect this joint work, about the middle of the eighteenth century. He remarked that vegetables grow vertically, and tend toward the sun, in whatever position the seed may have been planted in the earth. He proved the generality of the fact that, in dark places, plants always turn toward the point whence light comes. He discovered too, that plants immersed in water release bubbles of gas under the influence of sunlight. In 1771 Prestly, in England, tried another experiment. He let a candle burn in a confined space till the light went out, that is, until the contained air grew unfit for combustion. Then he placed the green parts of a fresh plant in the inclosure, and at the end of ten days the air become sufficiently purified to permit the re-lighting of the candle. Thus he proved that plants replace gas made impure by combustion with a combustible gas, but he also observed that at certain times the reverse phenomenon seems to result.

Ten years later, the Dutch physician, Ingenhousz, succeeded in explaining this apparent contradiction. "I had just begun these experiments," says that skilful naturalist, "when a most interesting scene revealed itself to my eyes. I observed that not only do plants have the power of cleaning impure air in six days or longer, as Priestly's experiments seem to point out, but that they discharge this important duty in a few hours, and in the most thorough way; that this singular operation is not due at all to vegetation, but to the effect of sunlight; that it does not begin until the sun has been some time above the horizon; that it ceases entirely during the darkness of night; that plants shaded by high buildings, or by other plants, do not complete this function, that is, they do not purify the air, but that, on the contrary, they exhale an injurious atmosphere, and really shed poison into the air about us; that the production of pure air begins to diminish with the decline of day, and ceases completely at sunset; that all plants corrupt the surrounding air during the night, and that not all portions of the plant takes part in the purification of the air, but only the leaves and green branches."—Popular Science Monthly.

Brine for the Preservation of Butter.—To three gallons of brine strong enough to bear an egg, add a pound of nice white sugar and one tablespoonful of saltpetre. Boil the brine, and when it is cold strain carefully. Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each roll, separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with a string. Pack a large jar full, weight the butter down and pour over the brine until all is submerged. This brine will keep really good butter perfectly sweet and fresh for a whole year. Be careful not to put upon ice butter that you wish to keep for any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and, using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to a depth of at least four inches. This excludes the air, and answers very nearly as well as the first method suggested.

Omelette.—Beat six eggs very light, the whites to a stiff froth that will stand alone, the yolks to a smooth thick batter. Add to the yolks a small cupful of milk, pepper and salt, lastly stir in the whites lightly. Have ready in a hot frying-pan a good lump of butter. When it hisses, pour in your mixture gently and set over a clear fire. It should cook in ten minutes at most. Do not stir but contrive, as the eggs "set." to slip in a broad-bladed knife under the omelette to guard against burning at the bottom. The instant "hiss" of the butter as it flows to the hottest part of the pan will prove the wisdom and efficacy of the precaution. If your oven is hot, you may put the frying pan in it as soon as the middle of the omlette is set. When done lay a hot dish bottom upward on the top of the pan, and dextrously upset the latter to bring the browned side of the omlette uppermost. Eat soon, or it will fall.

Farm and Garden.

Crop Statistics.

The National Crop Reporter publishes the estimates of its correspondents in relation to the percentage of last years crops of corn, oats, hay, and Irish potatoes which will be consumed during the current crop year, the estimates having reference to the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin. In addition there are also very full returns in relation to the fruit prospects in the same States. The following is an abstract of the leading points:

CORN.

The total production of corn in 1873 in the States named was nearly 515,000,000 bushels, of which amount nearly 65 per cent., or 333,000,000 bushels, will be used at home. Kansas consumes 90 per cent., and Illinois 51½ per cent. of the production in the respective States.

OATS.

The production of oats last year in the same States was placed at 168,500,000 bushels, of which nearly 62 per cent, or 104,000,000 bushels will be required for home uses. The States showing the heaviest and lightest percentage of consumption are the same as in the case of corn.

HAY.

In the item of hay, the local consumption in the eight States is averaged at 83 3-10 per cent., the total production last year being something over 10,500,000. This percentage represents nearly 8,900,000 tons. Indiana rates relatively the lightest consumer, and shows a surplus of about 23 per cent.

POTATOES.

Out of the 28,000,000 bushels of Irish potatoes produced last year in the States named, there is an estimated consumption of nearly 78 per cent., or about 21,666,000 bushels.

FRUIT.

In regard to the condition of the fruit-buds March 1, there is hardly an exception to the most flattering accounts from all localities. There were a great many trees killed last year in various ways, but at present in all living trees the buds are, as a rule, in the best possible condition for a large crop, with favorable weather in the future.

Rhubarb.

The Germantown Telegraph says a good word for rhubarb:

There are a large class who are fond of this. It is among the earliest green things; and, though no one classes it among the choicest of horticultural gifts, in the abstract, yet on account of its early growth it will always be esteemed.

Its earliness being one of its valuable points, a place should be selected for it where it will get all the advantages of early spring suns. Some people help it by putting barrels over the roots. This keeps out the cold, and as the rhubarb is stimulated to grow by a very little heat, the natural warmth of the ground brings it up if the frost be kept out. Then the barrels help to blanch it a little, and it is not quite so sour as when left to grow naturally in its own way. Rhubarb is poor stuff when stringy, and it is the aim of good growers to have it as pulpy as possible. Therefore the soil is to be made very rich indeed—as good as manure can make it. When grown in this way, even the outside is tender, and it may be cut up for use without even peeling, as is so often done. Some varieties are, however, more tender than others. There are, however, four popular kinds which, when well grown, are all of about equal value. These are the Victoria, Linnaeus, Magnum Bonum, and Prince Albert.

Rhubarb is very rapidly increased by cutting an old "crown" to pieces. If these are split downward. on a line with the growth of the root, every piece of root will grow, though it be split into a score of pieces; but pieces of root will not grow unless there is a portion of the "crown" with it. The crown is the upper portion or leaf-bud, underjust ground.

If very large stocks be desired, the plants should not be set too close. A root to every four square feet is enough—that is to say, the plants should grow two feet from one another every way. As the rhubarb is a gross feeder, if they be put closer than this they will likely starve one another.

OUR MAIL.

Wesley Lamon, Princeton, Ind., writes:

"Times are hard with me, and comparatively few take or appreciate the noble Cynosure, yet it seems next to impossible to get along without it. I have taken it several years, and like it better now than ever; and when I read that it would soon be enlarged, I 'thanked God and took courage.'"

Joseph Pershing, Green River, Ill., writes:

"I wish you to continue sending me the Cynosure. I do not see that I can possibly do without it."

Merchant Kelly, Bentonville, Ind., writes:

"Do not stop sending it (the Cynosure) to me. I would not do without it for $25.00 a year. * * I take several other papers, but would rather quit taking all of them than the Cynosure."

S. C. H. Smith, Belpre, Ohio, writes the following:

"My time expires the 19th of this month, but I don't see how I can possibly do without so valuable a paper, and such a welcome friend in my family. I have not the money at present; will send you in April, so please continue. When I get your enlarged paper I think I can get some subscribers. I hope so at least"

We hope all our readers who have not the cash at hand when their subscriptions expire would write us a few words similar to the above. Do not allow your names to be removed through carelessness or procrastination. We thank those who are renewing so promptly.

S. B. Kimball, Wheaton, Ill., writes:

"So noble a cause must be sustained.

J. Williams, Majority Point, Ill., writes:

"I expect to patronize the Cynosure as long as it advocates the principles it does at present."

C. D. Coppock, Quarry, Iowa, writes:

"I am living in a settlement where Masonry is trying to control both church and state, by robbing the gallows and states prison of its dues, and that under the pretense of being a moral and benevolent organization—and they are snaring many innocent young men and leading them to the devil as fast as they can. Through the kindness of a friend in Ohio, I received a copy of your paper. Hence the reason why I send you this (an order for the Cynosure and Anti-masonic books, tracts, etc.) I shall probably want more tracts soon, for I think that we will have some lively times here."

J. W. Turner, Laclede, Mo., writes:

"It is the man that is face to face with the enemy that can appreciate the Cynosure. I feel more than ever what a great work the National Association is doing."

D. Crawford, Crestline, Ohio, writes:

"I value your paper above all papers I have ever taken. I intend to take your paper and lend my support to the great and good cause it represents while I live."

Religious Intelligence.

Three hundred new converts have just entered Temple Street Church, Boston.

Ninety-three persons were admitted to membership in Plymouth Church, St. Louis, Mar. 18th.

A Congregational church, with the Rev. C. A. Towle, pastor, has been organized in South Chicago.

An interesting revival work has commenced among the students of Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois.

The Methodists have six churches in the City of Mexico, in which about 2,000 worshipers meet each Sabbath.

Mr. Gladstone reeently lectured on "The Uses and Abuses of Scripture Quotations," before the London Open-Air Missions.

The Union Biblical Institute of the Western and Canada Conferences of the Evangelical Association has been started at Naperville, Ill., in connection with Northwestern College.

Rev. B. M. Amsden, pastor of the Congregational chureh at Manchester, Iowa, reports revivals in the neighboring churches at Strawberry Point and Edgewood.

The Baptist Year Book reports 20,520 churches, 12,598 ministers, and a total membership of 1,633,939; being an inerease in membership during the year of 48,707.

The Protestant Episcopal Communion in the United States comprises forty-one dioceses and nine missionary jurisdictions; fifty-two bishops; 3,095 priests and deacons; 2,700 parishes, and 260,000 communicants.

The Rev. E. M. Boring, formerly financial agent of the Home for the Friendless, has been appointed to the pastorship of the Methodist Episcopal church in Woodstock, Ill., lately vacated by Rev. N. Fanning.

The International Sunday-school Lessons for 1875 have been selected and announced. The first quarter they are in the Book of Joshua; for the seeond, in Judges and Samuel; and for the third and fourth, in the Gospel of John.

Bishops Weaver and Glosbrenner of the United Brethren in Christ have had the pleasure lately of taking part in the dedication of two churches in and near Georgetown, D. C.

The Teiescope, church paper of this denomination, still publishes an extended list of revival notices; the list numbered forty-eight last week.

The New York Conferences of the Wesleyan church will all be held during March and April. Bro. Crooks, the publishing agent, hopes soon to raise the full $30,000 needed for the church Publishing House in Syraeuse. Over $17,000 are already subscribed.

A letter to the Herald and Presbyter says that Mr. Hammond's visit wrought a great clearing of the moral atmosphere in Alton, Ill. The reeling drunkard is seldom seen and the profane oath is rarely heard in the streets.

Fellowship meetings among the Congregational churehes of the West have in several eases been the starting point of a work of graee. Sueh has been experieneed at Morris and Sycamore, Ill., Markesan, Sparta, La Crosse and West Salem, Wis.

Mr. Morgan, an English evangelist, has been holding meetings in Indianapolis, in Episeopal churches. The effect of his work is to eause the elergymen and bishop to remove their gowns and go to work among the people in earnest, at the rolling mills and Reform Institute.

Dr. Isaae Jennings, one of the early settlers of Oberlin, for sixteen years a college trustee, and somewhat widely known for his theory as a physician of allowing "nature" to cure disease without the aid of medicine, died at Oberlin the other day at the good old age of 86, having stood by his medical theories to the last.

At the twenty-second annual session of the Pittsburg Conferenee of the Evangelieal Assoeiation, a membership of 7,068 was reported; those newly converted number 1,442, and 1,256 have been reeeived to membership. The East Pennsylvania Conference of the same church reports 14,381 members and 3,005 eonversions.

A religious exchange says nothing struek the European delegates to the Alliance so unpleasantly as the vanity and sacrilege of fashionable music in American churches. On their return, however, they eommend us for almost everything else—the music, they cannot but express their disgust at that.

It is said that $60,000 are annually expended for the salaries and traveling expenses of the Methodist Bishops. This amount is raised from church collections, instead of drawn from the profits of the Book Coneern, as was done until May, 1872. Since that time $100,000 have been disbursed to the Bishops and $40,000 reeeived from the churches.

The Illinois Central Presbytery recently passed resolutions upon such amusements as "public and social dancing, card-playing and attendance at theatres and circuses;" advising that they be shunned as bringing a reproach upon the Christian name and a violation of the command, "Abstain from all appearance of evil," and that persons openly devoted to sueh pleasures should not be fellowshiped.

The Rev. John Morrill, who died, Feb. 16, at Pecatonica, Ill., at the age of 77, was a veteran Congregationalist preacher. He organizedthe First Congregational Church at Rockford, when the nearest post-office was at Chicago. He organized the Congregational churches at Belvidere, Byron, Ill., and many other plaees in that region of eountry. During the last week of his life he had been laboring in a revival in progress in the Methodist church of Pecatonica.

The Brooklyn Congregational Council adjourned after midnight, Saturday night. As some feared the real grievanee which called it together was not touched. Plymouth church had determined that Mr. Beecher should not be discussed, and carried their point. The deeision is accepted as satisfactory by all three churehes. Drs. Storrs and Buddington were told that they were right in calling the Council, but some of their letters were objeetionable. Beecher's ehurch was wrong in its treatment of Tilton, but not enough for a withdrawal of fellowship by sister churches; but if the offense was repeated it would be a suffieient reason for such action. Thus ends another act in this disgraeeful drama.

News of the Week.

The City.—Anna Diekinson delivered her seeond lecture on the Soeial Evil question, in Robert Collyer's Unity Church on Sunday. The passage of the aet forbidding any city council or board of health licensing prostitution, took all the wind from the sails of the gentry who wanted to introduee the system here, and of course deprived the speaker of much of the outside interest attending her first lecture.

The uneasy and turbulent mass known as Internationals, communists, etc., met last Sunday afternoon in North Chicago to anticipate the town elections of next week with a ticket of their own. These are the same men with the inevitable leaders of last winter. Escaped from the rigors of European society they know only enough of Ameriean liberty to abuse it and scout its author, Jesus Christ. The threadbare speeches against oppression were repeated and nominations made. On Monday a large body, disaffected toward the Sunday nominations, held a eaueus of their own and a still further secession is expeeted. The doctrine on the labor question, in another column, would help these men.

The reunion of the old abolitionists of the Northwest will be held in Chieago, June 9th, and will continue three days.

The Sunday Afternoon Leeture Association is the latest contrivance to stand between the multitudes of Sabbath breakers and God's law. It provides at nominal expense lectures for all elasses on popular and instructive subjects, but presumably not religious, and so simply interjects another excuse for delay between the soul and its God.

The Country.—Reports from Miehigan state that the prospects for a large fruit crop are very eneouraging.

The Illinois Legislature adjourned on Tuesday, after being in session 203 days at an expense to the State of $304,500, and passing 255 bills out of 2,168 introduced. The compulsory edueation aet and railroad bill were most notable of any brought up; the former failing to become a law, and the latter, though possessing some good points, being probably a damage to the interests of the State.

One of those fearful calamities incidental to our large cities took place in New York last week, A four story tenement house took fire and their retreat by the stairway being cut off, four persons perished.

Gearhart, the ex-Treasurer of Cherokee County, Iowa,, was senteneed to thirty days' imprisonment at Fort Madison, for loaning the funds of the county.

Charles Francis Adams wrote a letter to the anti-inflation meeting in New York on the 24th ult, in whieh he expresses the opinion "that Congress transcended its authority when it assumed the right to issue promises to pay money whieh it did not at the same time provide any means to pay—and then undertook to force the people to take them at a rate higher than they were really worth."

The city authorities of Boston have invited Senator Carl Schurz to deliver an oration upon Charles Sumner, in Faneuil Hall, and Mr. Sehurz has accepted.

Both Houses of the Illinois Legislature have passed the bill to forbid the licensing of houses of prostitution. The vote was 112 to 6. This action is an inestimable boon to the decent eitizens of the State and Chieago in partieular; and is worth following by Missouri, whose metropolis is in a continual ferment over the nuisance.

The Massachusetts Legislature have been balloting a week for a successor to Sumner. The last vote stands: Dawes, 95; Hoar, 78; Curtis, 76; Adams, 15; neeessary to a ehoice, 138. The Dawes' party are united and are supported by Ben Butler and the manufaeturing, high-tariff interests of the State.

Last week some 1,500 men employed in the Erie R. R. shops at Susquehanna Depot, Pa., struck and took possession of the shops and track, stopping every freight and passenger train. Ninety engines and 1000 ears were run on the side traeks. On Saturday Gov. Hartranft ordered the State militia under Gen. Osborne to take eharge of affairs and quell the rioters, who seriously threatened to blow up buildings and take life. The cause of the trouble is the delinquency of the company to pay the hands. Two months pay, $102,000, was due. On Monday and Tuesday the men were paid off and most of them discharged.

Congress.—On the 23d ult. the House passed the "inflation" bill fixing the amount of legal tender notes now issued, or to be issued, at $400,000,000; the Senate is yet diseussing various propositions of the bill.

In the appropriation bills there has been a reduetion of $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 from the estimates of the Departments, and it is believed that there will be a saving of $25,000,000 as compared with last year.

The Distriet Investigating Committee continues to unearth swindles of greater or less amount in sewer and fenee building, street paving, etc.

Sec'y Richardson was before the Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday, but was very reticent. He pretended to know little or nothing of the infamous Sanborn eontracts. Commissioner Douglas testified that the collection of delinquent taxes was by these contracts now in the hands of three persons; before, any citizen could give information; and that the regular collectors were amply sufficient.

Foreign.—The Roman Catholic Bishop of Bologne was arrested Mar. 31st, for violating the German ecclesiastical laws.

The London Times aeknowledges the existenee of a financial panie in that city resembling those of New York and Vienna.

Ineendiaries are burning up hundreds of acres of sugar-cane in Cuba. Military detaehments are sent out to arrest them.

The steamship Nile has sunk between Hong-Kong and Japan with all on board, some eighty persons, ineluding the Japanese eommissioners to the Vienna Exposition.

Sermon on Masonry,

BY

REV. W. P. M'NARY,

Delivered in the United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind.,

Sabbath, December 8th, 1873.

NOTE.—This sermon is published in pamphlet form by EZRA A. COOK & CO. Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per doz., post paid.

"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light. . . . Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Eph. v. 11–14.

The testimony of the United Presbyterian church declares "That all associations whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members aught not to have fellowship with such associations.

The number of oath-bound secret societies in this country is legion, and each one has its own peculiarities, so that it would be impossible to make an argument against the whole series in the bounds of one discourse. I will therefore confine my remarks principally to the society of Freemasons, which is the common father of them all; but we may occasionally refer to other societies that have copied the objectionable features of Masonry, when our remarks will apply to them. Inasmuch as we do not desire to speak often upon the subject, we would like to go over the whole ground, and in doing so we can do but little more that state our objections catagorically, together with some authorities in proof of what we may assert. We will not be able to make an elaborate argument on many points, but will conscientiously endeavor to keep within bounds of the truth, and will hold ourselves ready to prove any statement which we may make at any time or at any place.

We wish it distinctly understood that we speak against Masonry as an institution and not against Masons as individuals. I believe there are many earnest Christians in the order, strange as the fact appears to me, and many of them are my warm, personal friends. I would not therefore wound their feelings on any account, much less injure their character. No! I would take each one of them by the hand and say to him, my brother, you have got into an institution that is unchristian in its character, and immoral in its influence, and your connection with it is a reproach to your Christianity and dangerous to your soul, come out of it my brother as you love your soul.

I. THE FIRST OBJECTION TO MASONRY IS ITS PROFANE, ENSNARING AND UNLAWFUL OATHS.

In illustration of this objection we will make some quotations from these oaths. The Entered Apprentice is taken into the lodge half naked, is make to kneel before the Master and place his left hand under the "Bible, compass and square," and his right hand upon them, and swear by and on these three symbols, that he will obey the constitutions, keep the secrets of Masonry, &c., and closes in these words, "Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across from ear to ear, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea where the tide ebbs and flows every twenty-four hours; so help me God."—[Light on Masonry, p. 27]

The Master Mason swears upon the Bible, compass and square, as before, using these words among others, "That I will support the constitution of the Grand Lodge of the state, and conform to all the by laws, rules and regulations of this or any other lodge of which I may at any time become a member. That a Master Mason's secrets given to me in charge as such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election. That if any part of this solemn oath be omitted at this time, I will hold myself amenable thereto whenever informed. That I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, I knowing her to be such. Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my body severed in two, and my bowels torn out and burnt to ashes and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, my body quartered and dispersed to the four cardinal points of the universe; so help me God.—[Light on Masonry, p.73.]

The Royal Arch Mason swears, as before, using these words: "That I will assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong. That if the secrets of a Royal Arch Mason are given to me in charge, as such they shall remain as inviolable in my breast as in his own,—murder and treason not excepted."—[Light on Masonry, p. 142.]

(It is said by some that this last clause, and other clauses that might be objectionable to conscientious men, are sometimes omitted, but that the clause which says, "if any part of this solemn oath be omitted at this time, that I will hold myself amenable thereto whenever informed," is never omitted. There is no doubt, however, but that these words were in the original form of the Masonic oath.)

The oath of the Thrice Illustrious Order of the Cross, contains these words: "That should I know another to violate any essential part of this obligation, I will use my most decided endeavors, by the blessing of God, to bring such person to the most condign punishment, agreeably to the rules and usages of the Ancient fraternity."—[Light on Masonry, p. 199.]

In the Knight Templar degree, a candidate is made to drink wine from a human skull, saying these words: "May all the sins committed by the person whose skull this was, be heaped upon my head, in addition to my own, should I knowingly and willingly violate this, my solemn obligation."—Light on Masonry, p. 183.]

Now, we have many objections to these oaths, among which are the following:

1. No one has a right to administer an oath except an officer, either of a church or state, and all extra-judicial oaths are wrong. —Matt. v. 33: "Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths." James 5. 12: "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by earth, neither by any oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation."

2. An oath is an act of religious worship, and to swear by the "Bible, compass and square," is both profanity and idolatry.—Deut. vi. 13: "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name." Isa. lxv, 16: "He that blesseth himself in the earth, shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth," etc.

3. No person has a right to swear to obey a code of laws, or to keep secrets, not knowing what these laws and secrets are, for he thereby forswears himself, and blindly gives his conscience into the keeping of fallible men.—Jer. iv. 2: "And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they glory." Mark vi. 23: "And he swear unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom."

These objections (the 1st and 3,) apply to all oath-bound secret societies, and we regard both the taking and administering of such oaths, a very heinous sin.

4. These oaths place the members under unlawful penalties, and bind the members to help to execute these penalties, which is a crime, both against the state and the conscience of the members. And these penalties are no dead letter upon the Masonic statute book. Rev. Moses Thatcher, a seceding Mason, says that he has "reliable, historical evidence of not less than seven individuals murdered under Masonic law."—[See Finney on Masonry, p. 121.]

5. To swear to keep the secrets of other men, and to protect them from punishment, whether they be right or wrong, is a crime against the state and the conscience of the individual.

6. To agree to be bound by any part of an oath that may be omitted, and consequently unknown, is putting the conscience into a snare.

II. OUR SECOND OBJECTION TO MASONRY IS THAT IT SUBVERTS JUSTICE.

The Masonic fraternity is a society of men composing part of community, leagued together for the purpose of helping each other secretly. A GREAT RING IN SOCIETY. It is therefore, in its very nature, opposed to justice. This remark applies with equal force to secret societies in general.

Every person who has anything to do with politics or with business; every person who was in the army; every student of the university; every person who has not lived with his eyes shut; has seen, that when a member of a secret society has the appointing power he will always appoint a member of his own fraternity in preference to any other, without reference to merit, if he can do so without compromising himself. They are, therefore, of necessity, "partial men" in community. This partiality is felt by community, especially in the trial of violators of law.

Masonry swears its members to keep the secrets of each other, and to fly to the relief of a brother, and to extricate him from difficulty, whether he be right or wrong. Experience proves that they regard these oaths as paramount to their civil oaths. I quote from John Quincy Adams' letter regarding the Morgan trial: "Look at the government of New York, struggling in vain for five long years to bring the perpetrators of the murder to punishment. See the judges, sheriffs, witnesses, jurors, entangled in the net of Masonry, and justice prostrated in her own temple by the touch of her invisible hand." * * "Go to the records of the court; you will find witnesses refusing to testify upon the express ground of Masonic obligations, avowing that they considered those obligations paramount to the law of the land."

III. OUR THIRD OBJECTION TO MASONRY IS ITS FALSE PRETENSES.

Masonry may indeed be regarded as falsehood reduced to a system.

Its long list of false pretenses and the falsehoods which it puts into the mouths and ears of its members for the purpose of deceiving them, and the world through them, show from what parentage it has sprung.

1. Masonry claims to be an ancient institution, which it is not. Every intelligent Mason who has made any inquiry on the subject, knows that Speculative or Freemasonry, was organized in London in the year 1717, and all Masonry which existed before that time was practical stone masonry, with which Freemasonry has no similarity whatever.

2. Masonry teaches its members that Solomon was its first, Most Excellent Grand Master, and that St. John was one of its zealous patrons. (See Mackey's Manual, p. 55.) All of which is a falsehood and an impious slander on the characters of pious men. (This can be proven by Masonic authority, quoted in "Finney on Masonry," pp. 171–2 as follows:

Dr. Daleho, the compiler of the book of constitutions for South Carolina, says: "Neither Adam nor Noah, nor Nimrod, nor Moses, nor Joshua, nor David, nor Solomon, nor Hiram, nor St. John the Baptist, nor St. John the Evangelist, were Freemasons. Hypothesis in history is absurd. There is no record sacred or profane, to induce us to believe that those holy men were Freemasons; and our traditions do not go back to those days. To assert that they were Freemasons may make the vulgar stare, but will rather excite the contempt than the admiration of the wise."

3. Masonry pretends to reveal important truths, and to impart valuable instruction to its members, and induces its members to go on from degree to degree, by promising them "more light." But hundreds of seceding Masons testify that there is no important truth taught in its whole course, and that at every advancing step they were humbugged and disappointed.

4. Masonry pretends that its secrets never have been, and never can be revealed.

Let me here say concerning this book called "Light on Masonry," which I hold in my hand, and from which most of these quotations have been made, that it was written by Elder David Bernard, a minister who has been in good standing in the Baptist church for fifty years,—a man of sincere piety and known integrity. He had taken fifteen degrees in Masonry at the time of the Morgan murder, and being convinced that it was wrong, and that it was his duty to make known its secrets, wrote the first fifteen degrees, and presented his exposition to a convention of about forty seceding Masons, and it was by them approved. A committee was then appointed to write an exposition of the other seventeen degrees, for Bernard's book; and that committee having completed its work, presented their exposition to a convention of about one hundred seceding Masons, and it was by them approved as a verbatim et literatim exposition of thirty-two degrees of Masonry. Mr. Bernard is still living, and at a convention held in Syracuse, New York, last year, asserted that he was now over eighty, and had not many years to live, and desired to give his dying testimony to the truth of that exposition.

Here is Morgan's revelation, which I hold in my hand; and the best evidence that I can produce of the truthfulness of the exposition, is the fact that he was murdered by Masons for revealing their secrets.

Here is Finney on Masonry, written by Rev. C. G. Finney, D D., President of Oberlin College, who took three degrees of Ma sonry, and then left because he was convinced of its unchristian character.

Here is Mackey's Manual, written by Albert G. Mackey, M. D., "Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States." I purchased it because it is said to be the highest Masonic authority that I could get; and I see, by comparison, that its ceremonies exactly agree with Bernard, Morgan and Finney, as far as he dares to make those ceremonies public.

(It has been frequently asserted since the above was spoken, that these were perjured men, and that their testimony would not be taken in any court. But if they are perjured men, then they have told the truth in their exposition; and as to their testimony not being taken in court, I know of a case of two men who committed murder. One of them, after being incarcerated, confessed the whole affair, but being a felon, his testimony could not be taken in court against the other, and the other man was consequently acquitted, and the one who confessed was hung; but everybody believed the testimony of the felon all the same as if it had been taken in court. Now, when conscientious men find themselves ensnared by a wicked oath, and forbidden to tell the truth, and from love of the truth renounce that enslaving oath, as it is every man's duty to do, and come out and publish the truth, and that too in the face of the most cruel and persistent persecution, such men ought to be regarded as moral heroes and champions of truth, and will be believed by all the unbiased world, notwithstanding that sophistical quibble.)

John Quincy Adams asserts in his letters, that about 45,000 out of about 50,000 Masons, left the order at the time of the Morgan excitement, and none of all these 45,000 seceding Masons ever denied the truth of the expositions made by Morgan and Bernard. In the face, therefore, of all this testimony, I wonder that the face of a Christian Mason does not blush when he hears his officers assert that the secrets of Masonry have never been revealed.

5. Masonry pretends to be a benevolent order. According to Mackey's Manual p. 217, it excludes all old men in dotage; young men in nonage; all women and deformed persons. (See Finney, p. 186.) Mackey's Manual further declares, (p. 227,) that the Wardens "shall consider of the most prudent and effectual methods of collecting and disposing of what money shall be given to, or lodged with them in charity, toward the relief only of any true brother fallen into poverty or decay, but of none else."

Now, when a company of strong, able-bodied prosperous men club together, excluding the poor, the weak, and all women, and promise to help each other and none else, Would you call it benevolence?

(This remark applies with equal force to the order of Odd-fellowship. The language of its ritual is, if any different more exclusive than that of Masonry.) I believe it is true that some Masonic lodges do give assistance to persons outside of their order, but I call your attention to the fact that they never learned to do so by the teaching of Masonry, and if such things are ever done, it is because the spirit of Christianity predominates over Masonry, in such lodges.

The fact that Masonry is growing wealthy out of the monthly dues of its members, that it is building costly edifices, and furnishing them with magnificent furniture, that its officers are equipped with the most expensive regalia, and are treated to the most sumptuous feasts, and that the magnificent Masonic Temple that was dedicated in Philadelphia last June, cost $1,475,000, proves that the largest share of their contributions are appropriated to the support of the "dignity of the order," rather than to the cause of benevolence.

6. It pretends to be a charitable institution. Our Saviour teaches the true principles of charity in the fifth chapter of Matthew: "Love your enemies, do good to them that despitefully use you and persecute you, &c."

We have also a beautiful definition of charity in the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians. "Charity suffereth long and is kind, charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, &c." But what does Masonry teach? The oath of the Thrice Illustrious order of the cross contains these words: [Light on Masonry, p. 199.]

"You further swear, that should you know another to violate any of the essential points of this obligation, you will use your most decided endeavors, by the blessing of God, to bring such persons to the most condign punishment, agreeable to the rules and usuages of our ancient fraternity, and this by pointing him out to the world as an unworthy vagabond, by opposing his interests and deranging his business by transferring his name after him wherever he may go; by exposing him to the contempt of the whole fraternity, and of the world, during his whole natural life," &c. Hundreds of men who have come out from the order bear testimony that they have received just such persecutions as that. The whole Anti-masonic world knows by sad experience that the spirit of the institution is a spirit of malice towards all who dare to oppose it, and yet it stands before the world with brazen face, and vaunteth itself, boasting of its charity.

7. It pretends to be a moral institution. We claim that this pretense can be shown to be false under five counts.

(a). We have just now shown that it inculcates a spirit of malice toward its enemies. (b.) It teaches selfishness and an unscriptural system of benevolence in opposition to the teaching of Christ, which is "Do good unto all men, especially unto them that are of the household of faith." (c.) It inculcates falsehood by requiring its members to declare in their application for membership that they do not apply from any "mercenary motives." By putting into their mouths and requiring them to repeat all these false legends concerning Solomon and Hiram Abiff, and by placing its members, by solemn oath, in such a position that they are under the necessity of practicing habitual deception in order to conceal the secrets of the order. We may illustrate this last statement in this way:

Suppose I say to a Master Mason, Is this in substance the oath of a Master Mason? (reading it to him,) a question I have a right to ask. He will be placed in such a position that if he denies that it is, he tells a falsehood; if he admits it, he violates his oath; if he evades the question so skilfully as to deceive me, in so far as he deceives me he is guilty of deception, and in so far as he does not deceive me, he has revealed the secret and violated his oath, and this constant effort of the society to publish false pretenses and conceal facts, places its members under the necessity of practicing habitual deception. (d.) It teaches obscenity. The manner in which Masonry administers its oaths, at least in the first degrees, is so obscene that I cannot describe it here, and the explanation given by Mackey in his Manual of one of the symbols of Masonry if written here would be liable to be suppressed as obscene literature. [See Mackey's Manual, pp. 56 and 57.] [See also Mackey's Lexicon, pp. 416 and 417.] (e.) It practices idolatry and profanity. It worships the "Bible, compass and square;" it administers its oaths and applies titles to fallible men which belong only to God, and thereby worships man and profanes God's holy name. The difference between the profanity of the troops out on the plains and that of Masonry is, that one is reckless and impulsive, while the other is deliberate and systematic.

We have now enumerated what we regard as the minor objections to Masonry, and we will proceed to lay before you that objection which we regard as of greatest importance to the Christian church. We do not, indeed, expect the following argument to have much weight with Jews or deists, or irreligious persons, but it is a matter that ought to have great weight in the mind of every Christian man.

IV. OUR FOURTH OBJECTION IS, THAT MASONRY IS A RELIGION—AN ANTI-CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

That Masonry is a religion is evident from the fact that it claims for itself every thing that any religion has ever claimed, and more than the Christian church claims.

1. It claims to be divine. In the hymn used at the dedication of lodges, we find these words: (Mackey's Manual, p. 186.)

"Hail Masonry divine,
"Glory of ages shine."
"Thou art divine."

In the hymn used at the laying of a corner-stone, [Mackey's Manuel, p. 180,] we find these words:

"When earth's foundations first were laid,
By the Almighty Artist's hand,
'Twas then our perfect—our perfect laws were made,
Established by thy strict command."

2. It claims perpetuity. The following question is asked the candidate, which he is expected to answer in the affirmative: (Mackey's Manual, p. 149,) "Do you admit that it is not in the power of any man, or body of men, to make innovations in the body of Masonry?"

3. It claims that members are God's chosen people. [Mackey's Manual, p. 196.] "For they be thy people, and thine inheritance, for thou didst separate them from among all people of the earth, to be thine inheritance." The Master, in his address to the lodge, calls all outsiders "The profane world," "cowans," (dogs). Of course he includes his own wife, and the pastor of his own church, if he is not a Mason. Mackey says that all lodges should open with prayer, and gives as a reason that secular associations open with prayer, and it is more proper that "religious associations" should observe the custom. [Manual, p. 11.] When a member joins the association, he is said, in the language of the Manual, "to consecrate his life to the service of God."

According to Mackey's Manual, the lodge is "always opened in the name of God."

4. It claims that its lodge rooms and temples are temples of God. According to their manuals, their temples are always "dedicated to the service of God."

At the dedication of the Grand Masonic Temple in Philadelphia, on the 28th of last June, the Rev. John Chambers, D. D., made the dedication prayer, and used these words, taken from the manual, "We have assembled" · · "to dedicate this magnificent Masonic temple to the glory and honor of the one living and eternal Jehovah." The cxxii. Psalm was then sung—"I was glad when they said unto me, let us go up into the house of the Lord," &c. The old heathen rite of pouring on corn, wine and oil, was then performed, and the following words used, which by comparison, we see were taken from this manual: (Mackey's, p. 194,) "In the name of the Supreme and Eternal God, the Grand Architect of Heaven and Earth, to whom be all glory and honor, I dedicate this Hall to Freemasonry."

5. It claims that its officers are HOLY.

Andrew Rubeno, in his address at Philadelphia, giving a charge to the High Priest of the Chapter, used these words:—"Let the High Priest of every Chapter, upon whom the HOLY order has been conferred, remember that he has been made such, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life, for he testifieth, "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchesidec."

How a Christian man could stand by with the insignia of his order upon him, and listen to such blasphemy from one of his own officers, I do not know.

6. It claims to be a saving religion.

In the language of Masonry, it takes the rough ashler, cuts, hews and polishes him, and prepares him to be built into the grand temple above. In their ceremonies they put the candidate symbolically through the whole course of salvation,—the new birth, the enlightenment, sanctification, death, resurrection and ascension to glory.

Salem Town, a celebrated Masonic author, in his book, says: [See Finney, p. 20.] "In advancing to the fourth degree, the good man is greatly encouraged to persevere in the ways of well doing, even to the end. He has a name which no man knoweth, save he that receiveth it. Then the Freemason is assured of his election and final salvation." · · "Hence opens the fifth degree, where he discovers his election to, and his glorified station in the kingdom of the Father." · · "Then in the eighth degree he beholds that all the heavenly sojourners will be admitted within the veil of God's presence, where they will become kings and priests before the throne of his glory forever and ever."

In the degree of the Knights of the East and West the candidate is conducted to the "Vacant Canopy," which is at the right hand of "The All Puissant, who represents Jehovah," (the presiding officer.) The sound of the seventh seal, and the conducting of the candidate to the "vacant canopy," is the representation of the end of the world, and the glorification of ALL TRUE MASONS at the right hand of God, having passed through the trials of Freemasonry, and "washed their robes in their own blood."

7. It has its priests, altars, sacrifices, libation, symbols, rites, ceremonies, prayers, hymns, sermons, benedictions and its hopes and promises of future salvation and glory. It has everything that any religion has ever had, Jewish, Mohammedan, Hindoo, Mormon or Christian, EXCEPT TRUTH.

8. It claims more than the Christian church ever claimed, for it claims to be the one only true and eternal religion which "embraces within itself all sectarian systems," such as Christianity, Mohammedanism, &c.

The Christian church does not claim to do anything of itself, but by the word and Spirit of Christ. But Masonry claims that by its own inherent virtue without any external influence it can

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonio Revelation.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abdnction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationa ist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscenees of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The anthor belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to he, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are aequainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his accont is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y,., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are suffieiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Reseue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

The Christian Cynosure.

With enlarged size, added ability and the earnest co-operation of all who desire a pure church and a government in the hands of unselfish, honest men, the Cynosure will greatly increase its circulation during the coming year.

Men of average integrity need only to understand Masonry and kindred institutions to seek their extermination. Women who desire temperance and purity cannot regard with complacency an institution which is hostile to both.

Christians who abide in Christ will use all the wisdom and grace God has given them in their efforts to overthrow an institution which substitutes artificial lights for the true "Light of the world."

The institution of Freemasonry is rooted in human selfishness, sustained by false professions, accommodates its principles to the basest natures and by casting out Christ and at the same time professing to save souls from death, it leads our nation towards heathenism.

Ignorance of this subject in thinking men and women is the chief obstacle which those who desire to blot it out of our country, have to contend with. Will you not use all possible exertions in enlarging the circulation of the Cynosue, that this ignorance may be dispelled?

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

All who canvass for the Cynosure are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent, or twenty-five per cent in books, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100 for the Cynosure during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

A good time to canvass for the Cynosure in some localities is just after the mail comes in. A good place, the post-office.

One hundred and six subscriptions were received at the Cynosure office last week. This number includes renewals six and three months subscriptions. We hope these are only the first fruits of a great harvest.

We wish to see the principles of the Cynosure, which are the principles of the Bible purifying every community; triumphant at every local, general and national election, and strengthening every true Christian church in our land. Will not all our readers who have this same earnest desire do what they can to send the Cynosure throughout the length and breadth of the country?

A friend from Maine sends a specimen copy of the Cynosure to two hundred Baptist ministers in his State. There are now only five Cynosures subscribed for in Maine, but a little leaven, if it keeps working will leaven the whole lump.

Employment for Elderly People.

An elderly lady, a short time ago, bought $12.60 worth of Anti-masonic publications at our wholesale rates. She had no family to care for except a nephew, a young man who worked out through the day. On receiving the books she took copies to her minister to interest him in them. She has thus far been very successful in selling them. We think elderly men and women whose heart is in this work, whose strength is not sufficient for severe labor, might do much good and find pecuniary profit in selling our publications.

We prefer, except in extraordinary cases, to have the cash sent in advance. From five to ten dollars would give you a good assortment of books at our wholesale rates. Send for catalogue of our publications.

Topics of the Time.

GOD HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH LAW.—This statement was lately made by a clergyman and reflects the general lack of thought on this question: What is the foundation for human law? In answering this question two positions are assumed. One party say, God's will is the foundation for all human laws that have a right to exist, and no law however enacted is binding which contravenes that law. The other party say, Human laws rest on human consent and God has nothing to do with them. The first party wishes to have the authority of God recognized in our National and State Constitutions. They wish to have laws enacted and enforced against profanity, intemperance, Sabbath breaking, and other like things, which are to be prohibited, not primarily because they injure men, but offend God. The other party differ in this respect. All are hostile to a legal recognition of God or Christianity. Some are in favor of laws against the moral evils mentioned, basing the law not on Divine will, but human reason enlightened by that Divine will, while it is safe to say a very large majority of this party are hostile to any law prohibiting sins against God. Of course if God has nothing to do with law the last named division of this party are right while the first are illogical. If God has nothing to do with law we have only to vote that the "back pay steal" was an honorable act and instantly Ben. Butler ceases to be a thief and becomes an honest man. If this view prevail we have no foundation for law, but the shifting quicksand of public opinion and what is crime to-day may be virtue to-morrow. This is foolish and absurd. God has everything to do with human law. He is the author of national as much as individual life. "By him kings reign and princes decree justice." By his power the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. Is it wise to disown his authority until it is exemplified by our national destruction?

SUMPTUARY LAWS.—The Chicago Tribune lately contained an article on the temperance movement declaring that it had not banished liquor from any of the Ohio towns where it has been progressing. In the same number was an editorial denouncing sumptuary laws; saying that their result had been and would continue to be failure. The conclusion derived from the facts and fancies stated is that we must have good wine, ale and beer, prosecuting such persons as sell contrary to the regulations in such cases made and provided. In the first place a sumptuary law is one which restrains or limits the expenditure of citizens for apparel, food, furniture, and the like, and as no prohibitory legislation has sought this end, it is mere folly to talk about sumptuary laws when temperance laws are meant. These laws are not to restrain or limit the expenses of citizens for clothing, food and furniture, but to prevent men from selling a poison to their neighbors which makes it impossible for many of them to expend anything for these necessary articles. If the Tribune does not know that alcohol is a poison, and that crime and poverty result from its use, it learns very slowly. To say that this poison is left out of certain beverages and other cheaper poisons are used in its place, does not prove that intoxicating drinks are anything but slow poisons even when pure, and every intelligent man knows that they are. Admitting then that law and prayer have both failed to entirely remove this wholesale poisoning of the race, shall we adopt the Tribune's remedy and seek to purify the poisons which men are to drink?

Or to put the case in another way, because laws against murder and stealing are violated in every part of the country, shall we abolish those "sumptuary laws" and make others requiring men who rob and kill to do so in the most scientific and gentlemanly manner? How would it do to require every man who cuts his fellow's throat to administer chloroform before putting in the knife, and send a man to state's prison, if, in picking a pocket he should tear the pants of the man he was robbing, while the mere act of murder or theft is unpunished because laws have failed to prevent such things? To do this would be just as sensible and effective as to attempt to regulate the devilish traffic in ardent spirits which is meaner, more cowardly and more destructive to life and property than highway robbery and midnight assassination.

OFFICIAL CORRUPTION.—From the little that becomes known of official dishonesty the immense whole may be imagined but can never be described. Lay aside the Credit Mobilier and "back pay" swindles, and a long list of suspicious occurences leap into view which are almost discouraging. Ku-klux-klanmen are sent to prison and pardoned by our President. Paymasters are convicted of embezzlement and by his word are released from punishment. Counterfeiters and circulators of obscene literature have only to appeal to him and prison walls refuse to hold them. A citizen of Washington owns property assessed at nineteen thousand dollars and on it is compelled to pay a tax of eleven thousand. It is proved that a few favored ones have been by a special arrangement permitted to collect taxes due the United States, retaining fifty per cent. for the collection, when responsible parties offer to do the same work for fifteen per cent., and the men who get the contract have the work done for twelve and one-half per cent., retaining thirty-seven and one-half per cent. for their trouble in "seeing" the Secretary of the Treasury. Added to all this is the plea, born of ignorance or dishonesty, to flood the country with paper money, to impoverish the industrious and enrich the idle. These things however should only arouse the American people to the importance of carefully watching the men who are in office.

Among other things the men who are office seekers should be lain immediately on the shelf. To ask an office should be a disqualification for it. Probably every Senator of the United States begged or bought his way to the chamber. Hon. Charles Sumner being the last of those men who used to be sought by others for the important offices they aspired to fill. So long as office seekers are elected to such positions we must have such inferior men as now disgrace the seats once occupied by Webster, Hale, Calhoun and Clay. We do not demand that our officials be graduates of colleges or members of the church. We do ask that they be strangers to the wire-pulling, soul-debasing political arts which are the ladder on which our present race of political men have climbed to power.

THE BROOKLYN COUNCIL.—Theodore Tilton accused Henry Ward Beecher, his pastor, of adultery. Mr West, a member of Plymouth church, preferred charges against Theodore Tilton for slandering H. W. Beecher. At a church meeting held last October, Mr. Tilton was present and said that he was not, and had not bee a member of that church for four years. He said also that he had no wish to avoid any responsibility by reason of that fact, and if the pastor, Mr. Beecher, had any charges to make against him, he would answer. Mr. Beecher said that he had no charges to make against brother Tilton, and by an almost unanimous vote the name of Mr. Tilton was stricken from the roll and the charges against him were dropped.

Two neighboring churches thought this mode of settling such grave charges was inconsistent with church fellowship and addressed a note of remonstrance to Plymouth Church. That body replied that they had better mind their own business. A lengthy correspondence ensued and finally these two churches, (Dr. Storr's and Dr. Budington's) asked a council of one hundred and more Congregationalists to decide whether members of churches could leave at pleasure, even when under charges of a serious character, without any vote, censure or acquital by the church; and whether they ought to fellowship Plymouth Church. The questions were six in number, but were substantially as stated. The council decided that members could not sever their church relations in that way, and that the churches were right in their protest against such practices in Plymouth Church. They also decide that if Plymouth Church continued to act in this way no church fellowship could exist between it and other Congregational churches. They, however, expressed the hope that Plymouth Church would change its course and no such withdrawal of fellowship be necessary. All which is very well so far as it goes. The real question has not been, and could not by this council be settled. It is among the hidden things which will yet be made plain.

--TEMERANCE ELECTIONS.—City and town elections this week in several interior States were generally warmly contested, temperance being quite generally the issue. Clinton, Geneseo, Champaign, Jacksonville, Mattoon, and Monmouth, Ill.; Council Bluffs and Keokuk, Iowa; Cleveland and Dayton, O.; and Adrian, Mich. are reported as anti-temperance; but in most of the Ohio elections the cause was victorious.

OUR COLLEGES AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

WHEATON, Ill., Dec. 26th. 1873.

Wheaton College was chartered in the hands of Wesleyan Methodists and conducted by them as the Illinois Institute for about twelve years. It was then re-chartered in the hands of the present Board with the pledge to keep the testimony of the Wesleyans good against slavery and secret societies.

Soon after I came here, in 1860, I received a note from the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Illinois, inviting me to visit him at his office in Chicago. As the College was committed to oppose, and Grand Master Blair to uphold the lodge, I did not call as invited, supposing no good could come from a private interview between such parties.

Awhile after, the Master of the local lodge in Wheaton expressed to me the hope that the College rule against secret societies would be ignored, as an infringement of parental rights; and stating that if any student was expelled, under the rule, the College would be prosecuted. He was told that the rule must be enforced until repealed.

Soon afterward, fifteen students were induced to unite with a Good Templar's lodge; two of whom, adhering to the same, were suspended. Application was at once made to our Circuit Court for a mandamus, requiring our trustees to restore the student and revoke the rule. The case went in favor of the College. It was taken by the Master of the Wheaton Lodge to the Supreme Court of Illinois, where the decision of the lower court was sustained, and the College saved from the gripe of the lodge.

From the above and other circumstances, I am led to the conclusion, that the assault on Wheaton College was made in the interest of the Masonic order, and after consultation with its leaders, and perhaps at the expense of the Grand Lodge of this State. The rule of the College is carefully drawn and properly interpreted. It simply prohibits attendance on lodge meetings, and other acts of membership during connection with the Institution.

After this recital I need scarcely add that the Faculty of Wheaton College are a unit in favor of the rule adopted by the trustees prohibiting membership in secret societies, either in the College or outside. We object to the secret orders, not merely as societies which are secret, but to the secret religious ceremonies which they all practice, more or less, from the largest to the least. Such rites, practiced by members of a body taken promiscuously from the community, professors of religion, and men making no profession, is nothing less than moral and religious system in which personal piety is not required, nor general justice, but only fealty to a clan. We regard the whole system, therefore, as opposed to true religion and just government, and of course hostile to God and man.

J. BLANCHARD,
President Wheaton College.

John G. Stearns.

Conclusion of his funeral address, delivered by Rev. Charles Ayer from the text: "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."—Rev. xiv. 13:

When our brother and father, whose remains we put away to-day, gave me this his text, he spoke highly to me of this rest, saying, "O, will it not be sweet! My brother, I have not a cloud." He was converted when fifteen years old, and so has been in the battle sixty-three years. Every day of that period has marked the advance or retreat as the battle has been waged. Now rest; now he is sanctified; now he has peace. The heart trained in the conflict with sin now emerges from the dust and faintings of the war into a delightful change of employments, and in uttermost and unmingled felicity serves God without sin day and night forever.

The third reason we have here for the happiness of the departed believer is, he is full-handed when he enters the presence of the Lord. His works follow with him.

They follow with him as a record, for the remembering love of our Lord will not lose a sigh of his disciple, but he will hold all their lifetime for him as a possession of his heart.

They follow with him as character, for every endeavor for the Lord and his people and his truth is holiness. Holiness is not a state, but an achievement. The holiness of patience and prayer works permanent good in the soul; the holiness of patience and prayer, of self-immolation and self-forgetfulness, of good works and of benevolence, of Christian courage and independence,—all holiness has wrought permanent work on the spirit, has adorned the spirit, and every decoration the dead warrior wears, and every scar of battle is but the outward sign of inward personal honor. Here many, unconscious here, will wake there with glad surprise to see themselves so much more like Christ than they had ever thought on earth; for, in addition to their cleansing in the blood of Christ, and their clothing in the righteousness of Christ, their worn out and battered armor will show them to have there the character of conquerors and kings.

Their works will follow with them as reward. Every holy deed on earth finds its counterpart in heaven. When the Lord comes and sees the faithfulness of his steward, he bestows upon him the honor and station for which he is morally qualified. He holds in esteem and puts His bounty on his work of faith and labor of love and fight of afflictions.

Their works follow with them as trophies. When the Roman general came home from the wars he was sometimes honored with a triumph, but when they come to their home, the Lord has a triumph. They will be kings and priests, but will cast their crowns and ephods at the Saviour's feet. They will have something to render to him. Their own souls will be trophies, and their souls' deeds and endeavors will be so much more. The martyrs will bring the flames of fire; the apostles their preaching; the praying mothers will bring their children; the humble soul his faith amid doubts and fears and sins; and the old preacher his gospel preached for three-score years of discipleship; and all will ascribe the strength and the honor to their Lord and King.

I will not go out of my text to find more reasons for the happiness of the departed believer. I have mentioned the three furnished by our scripture. He is happy because of his life-union with Christ; because his life with Christ is now unmingled with the burdens and evils of his life here on earth; and because the good of this life on earth is now transfigured into eternal good in heaven.

Father Stearns finds and will find his works follow with him. He has preached the Word of God in various fields and with various success, interrupted by intervals of sickness, since he graduated from the theological school at Hamilton in 1822. He was born in N. H., Nov. 22, 1795, and, so had lived 78 years. He was ordained in Waterville, N. Y., in the year in which he left school; married in the same year, and began his pastoral work at Syracuse when twenty-seven years of age.

If I were to speak of what seems to me to characterize him, I should speak of the lofty practical religious tone of his life, and of his undoubted Christian courage. What will be for the glory of God, was the inquiry of his life. And even if he wrote a fugitive piece for a secular newspaper, he never obscured this constraint of his own soul. This great aim of life—to glorify God—is theoretically accepted by every disciple of Christ; but with him it was practical, and his conscience urged him or restrained him under the guidance of this great law of doing all to God's glory. I think we should find this, and not desire for fame or or reward, it was that made him an author, and that put him so often into conterversy. He was an uncompromising Baptist; but more, an uncompromising Christian. His life was, for much part of it, a life of protest. He protested in books which were published against the form and law of the Presbyterian church, but coveted at the same time the fellowship of their Calvinism. He protested in the same way against the Methodist church, but claimed to have the same heart as they to spread the free Gospel. He protested against the doctrine of salvation as upheld by Universalists, but announced his joyful faith in the infinite love of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. He wrote and published on the Sovereignty of God and Moral Agency; on Immortality; on Regeneration; on the Primitive Church; on Baptism; on Universalism; and was constantly preparing something for the religious or secular periodicals of the day; and in nothing he wrote or printed does he seem to forget the honor of the Lord his God.

The same great abiding, ruling principle of life led him to publish his book on the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. This book exhausts the subject. It has passed to the seventh edition. It brought him many enemies, and cost him many friends. He wished me to say after his decease that he had no regrets for the course of his life with respect to Freemasonry, and the work he had endeavored to do to counteract and overthrow that institution.

He rises before me as a man of heroism, who could and did ever hold up what was to many the ensign of weakness, unabashed by the multitude of opposers, or the coldness of his friends; and held up this banner with the truly heroic spirit, and for the glory of God.

Father Stearns was the honored one in a class of seventeen, the first class of the Hamilton Theological Seminary of Madison University. His knowledge of English literature and of the classic tongue there obtained, stood him in good stead throughout his long and laborious life, Sixteen of those seventeen are now beyond the flood. All were ministers of Christ. All have died in the faith which they preached. Jonathan Wade and Eugenio Kincaid, two eminent pioneer missionaries, were of that class. Kincaid alone remains now waiting for his call. Kincaid and Stearns have been of late exchanging through the mail messages of veteran experiences and affection. What a happy meeting those seventeen will keep on the other side!

Give me the wings of faith to rise
Within the vail, and see
The Saints above, how great their joys.
How bright their glories be.

Mr. Moody in England.

Mr. Spafford, recently returned from England gives us the following information concerning his work. When Mr. Moody was preparing to leave this country about a year since, he corresponded principally with two men who were to make arrangements for him and assist him in his work in the British Isles.

When he landed at Liverpool a letter was placed in his hands stating that both of these men were in their graves.

A stranger, with all the human aid, on which he had in a measure relied, cut off, he felt that this was a voice of God to him telling him not to make flesh his arm. He went boldly forward, but was looked upon him with suspicion. The Christian, a paper with scarcely eleven thousand subscribers, was the only paper that dared to mention him or his work. From facts subsequently brought out, it appeared that the people feared that Mr. Sankey, his companion, and that Mr. Moody also, were actuated by mercenery motives.

Still they went prayerfully and earnestly to work, and had precious meetings, which were not without fruit. They could not, however, unite the ministers in cordial co-operation with them, and after a while Mr. Moody said, "We will go to New Castle; if we cannot unite the clergymen there in a general effort for salvation, I will go home." God heard prayer; the clergymen joined Mr. Moody in working for the salvation of souls, and a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit followed.

From this time on, the obstacles to successful work seemed removed. The tide had turned. The papers, both religious and secular, were glad to publish anything concerning their meetings.

The most striking manifestation of God's power in bringing about union Christian effort, was at Edinburgh. That city, in which intellectual attainments were at a premium, and where intellectual pride had run strong partitions between different sects, was fused into one glowing flame of love to Christ and an outpouring of God's Spirit came like a pentacostal shower.

Mr. Moody's prayer in public soon after he started out in the Christian warfare was, "O! Lord, make us humble." We believe it is his prayer still.

A memorial fund for him was started by a friend, and before he heard of the movement, had reached one thousand pounds more or less, (from $4,000 to $5,000.) As soon as he heard of it he told the manager of the enterprise that he would not take one cent of the fund. His work had been too precious to allow even a suspicion that he labored for gain, to rest upon it.

The circulation of The Christian, the paper which first aided him in his work, has increased from 10,000 to 40,000 since last June.

Points of Difference.

BY REV. G. H. HUBBARD.

This necessary and positive declaration is made by the Saviour himself: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Not long ago the remark was addressed to us personally, "You must be a radical; it is not as well for you." Perhaps not, but we have a kind of belief that it will be as well for the world. To be radical may incur the displeasure of some, but there is a definite idea that it pleases God. This conclusion is reached by the fact that Christ's doctrine and style of preaching was all radical, and God declared from heaven that he was well pleased; so much so as to command all to hear him, which does not show displeasure. And can it be that those whom God has commissioned to proclaim his council, and judgments, and truths, are displeasing in his sight, when preaching the same Gospel with the same spirit?

It is said again that you "disturb the church and the world," but what are we to do with the utterances of Christ when he says that a "man's foes shall be they of his own household;" and that other also, "I come not to send peace, but a sword." The preaching of Christ disturbed men, it disturbed a dead, formal church; and when Paul inspired by the spirit of his Master went out preaching the truth, it disturbed men and they declared that "these that turn the world upside down have come hither also." There is a point of difference between the preaching of the Saviour, and those who for fear of disturbance would shut the lips and withhold the truth.

Then too we think that some things are radically wrong, and need a radical remedy, to secure a radical change. Now among the radical doctrines taught by the Saviour is the one quoted first at the head of this article, and we propose in brief, to contrast sectarianism with the Gospel and things pertaining thereto, and in doing so look only at patent facts.

One serious objection to secret organizations lies in the fact that they are used as a substitute for the church, and religion itself; that it absorbs the attention, the time, the energy, the money, and leaves room for nothing else; that it destroys religious interests and absorbes religious men. That the lodge is run on this basis there can be but little doubt, as facts could be produced to prove this if necessary, for they take the precedent and place of religious meetings. Now the interests of religion are first or they are nothing. Men may be compelled to attend the lodge, but they choose to do so. The preference of even the professedly pious is for the meetings of the lodge, and one of the worked out, demonstrated results, is the substitution of these meetings for the meetings of the church: not only to put these meetings thus, but create a disrelish for prayer and other spiritual meetings. The result is fatal to souls. Then also it is possible to be a stumbling block to a weak brother, and by the momentum given him by the example he may swing clear past the point of return and be lost.

The work and organization of the lodge seem to be purely selfish: which is altogether unlike the Gospel and church work. While the Gospel is designed to bless all, and the Christian church labors for all, the lodge embraces only the chosen few. While the Gospel is free, "without money and without price," and the invitation is free, to all, the halt; the blind and poor; the good in the lodge, if any there is, is guarded by a fee, which is the key that alone can unlock the treasure house of knowledge to one seeking it at the shrine; neither does the invitation to its benefits include the poor, halt or maimed, those most in need.

The spirit and the work of the Gospel from first to last, including all its true workers, is benevolence; laboring for and seeking those who can make no adequate returns for the labor bestowed or the benefits received. Christianity is for the masses. The workings of the lodge seem to deny one of the fundamental principles of the Gospel, the brotherhood and equality of man. It is the brother of the lodge and not the poor bruised sufferer that fell among thieves. The Gospel is pre-eminently full of brotherly kindness toward all the race and we are required as often as we have opportunity to do good, even to all men.

Finally, the principles of the lodge are in direct antagonism to the Gospel. The Gospel is to be preached as far and as wide as men are found, and all its principles and truth to be as fully proclaimed as possible, to cause men to fully understand every excellence and every good it embraces, as far as it is possible to convey or understand, though to understand it fully it must be experienced. The commission to Christ's ministers embraces all this, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," as also does the instruction he gave them: "that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops." Not only giving the truth publicity, but going where the family were wont to meet, amid the concourse of men, and there proclaim all you have heard or known. The very fact of the Saviour's coming was to reveal, to bring to light what before was not fully known: the love of God and the way of salvation; beginning with the enunciation of the angel over the plains of Judea; fulfilled in the life of him who said, "in secret have I said nothing;" and culminating in that sublime expression of Jesus himself: "I am the light of the world, he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

One other point of antagonism, the concealment of light. The claim is frequently made by lodge men that they have light or knowledge that others have not, yet refuse to impart it. Now the whole body of Christians are forbidden to hide their light "under a bushel," or in the lodge-room, but put on a candle-stick, on the hill-top, where it cannot be hid from the view of the most careless observer. "Let your light so shine." Mark you! Let it shine. Give it an opportunity.

If there is anything clearly established, it is the fact that concealment and the Gospel are not companions, and that there are points of difference between them as great as there is between light and darkness.

Was John Wesley a Freemason?

To the Editor;

A few weeks since there appeared in your columns a statement which has, before and since, been the rounds of the press, to the effect that Rev. John Wesley was a Freemason. So specific is this article that it gives in the introduction the name of the paper (Christian Age, of New York,) from which it was taken. And states that "Rev John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, was initiated into the secrets of the order on Oct. 30, 1738." It gives the number of the lodge as 367, and the place as Downpatrick, Ireland. it tells of a dying man, Mr. Martin, as speaking of "John Wesley as a brother Mason."

I have four reasons for believing the statement a fabrication:—

1. Its authenticity. "The Christian Age, a readable and reliable paper published in New York," in which it is claimed to have first appeared, is unknown in Rowell's American Newspaper Directory, "containing a list of the newspapers and other periodicals in the United States and Territories, the Dominion of Canada and British Colonies."

2. Early Wesleyan principles. We find the disciplinary provisions of Wesley's societies so strict, that his members were not allowed to marry unconverted persons, nor to associate in fellowship with the "worldly minded," which would not, as we see, allow fellowship in a Masonic lodge. Then when Mr. Wesley had been dead about ten years, according to that Methodist giant, Jacob Stanley, President of the Wesleyan Methodist churches of England, those Methodists who had joined the secret societies known as the "Friendly Odds," "Druids" and "Loyal Britons," were either compelled to renounce their adhesion to the same, or be expelled from the Methodist societies. He says: "The ministers were obliged to do this to stop the plague: it being an imitation of Masonry," [See British Methodist Magazine, pp. 66 to 71, 1813.]

3. A case of alibi. The statement from the Christian Age, et al., is that "John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, was initiated into the secrets of that order on October 30, 1738, in lodge 367, Downpatrick, (Ireland)." Now turn to Wesley's Journal, October, 1738, and you will find that on the 22d of October, of that year, he preached at Bloomsburg; on the 25th at Bassingshaw, on the 27th at St. Atholins, on the 29th at Islington and at London Wall, and on November 3 I at St. Atholins again.

Any one acquainted with the geographical configurations of the "fast anchored isles" on which these things occurred, is aware that London Wall is now one of the thoroughfares of the great metropolis, and that the other places named are some of the suburban villages of that place. They will further discover that Downpatrick is the flourishing shire town of the county of Down, on a little gulf or neck of the Irish Sea, and is some three hundred miles from the place where Rev. John Wesley witnesses that he was preaching the gospel, when the Masons claim to have "initiated him into the secrets of their order." True there is nothing said of his whereabouts on the evening of October 28, 1738, though on the 27th and 29th he preached in the neighborhood of London. Now contemplate two hundred miles or more on the Irish Sea in a rude shallop of a hundred and forty years ago, and four hundred miles in the lumbering coaches of those days, and fancy, if you can, the going and return of Rev. John Wesley on such an errand, at such a distance, in such a length of time. Our Masonic friends want to fix that matter up a little,

4. Mr. Wesley as a witness. [See Wesley's Journal, vol, iv. page 398, New York, 1850]

Friday, June 18, 1773.—I went to Ballymend, and read a strange tract, that professed to discover 'the innermost recesses of Freemasonry,' said to be translated from the French original, lately published at Berlin, I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be true, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry! And what a secret is it, which so many concur to keep! From what motive? Through fear or shame?"

If Rev. John Wesley had been a Freemason, would he not have said more than "I incline to think it a genuine account?" He would have known whether it were true or not, and there is not a doubt but he would have said so if he said anything. Who can believe that the "Founder of Methodism" could have been such a hypocrite as to have "played possum" about a thing he understood so well, as if he had been made a Mason in 1738. Again, had he been a Mason, and in full sympathy with the institution, would he have admitted the supposed truthfulness of the Masonic obligation, by saying, "I wonder the author is suffered to live?" Had John Wesley been a Mason in good standing, would he have asserted as probably true, that tract which showed Masonry to be an "amazing banter on mankind," and if true, that Masons must be induced through "fear or shame" to keep its secrets? If "John Wesley, the founder of Methodism," were a Freemason, what kind of a Freemason was he? If he had not been a Freemason, what should we think of those men who are seeking to make him appear to be what he was not?

We do not intend by this to censure the Journal for giving as current intelligence, that which is going the rounds of the press, but the person who started the "yarn." And we write with the fullest apprehension of Benjamin Franklin's assertion, that "A false hood will go from Maine to Georgia before truth gets her boots on." Respectfully, L. N. Stratton.

Religion and Politics.

As an illustration of the difference between the precepts of religion and American politics, we send you the following slip cut from one of our leading daily news-papers:

MR. SUMNER AND THE SOUTH.

LOUISVILLE, March 12.—The Courier-Journal to-day contains a long and feeling double-leaded notice of the death of Charles Sumner. Among other things, it says: Fifteen years ago the news that Charles Sumner was dead would have been received with something like rejoicing by the people of the South. Ten years ago they would have hailed it as a message from heaven telling them that an enemy had been removed from the face of the earth. To-day they will read it regretfully and their comment will be 'He was a great man. He was an honest man. As he has forgiven us, so have we long ago forgiven him.'"

From this slip it would appear that the people of the South disliked Senator Sumner so much fifteen years ago that his death would have been responded to with something like rejoicing. Ten years ago, or about the time of Lincoln's death, it would have been hailed as a message from heaven, gratifying the bitter, vengeful feelings of the South by the removal of their worst enemy. But now the South forgives him because he has forgiven the South; and it is confessed that he was a great, good, and honest man.

Such is the spirit of politics; it hates its enemies, and would rejoice at their death; and if it forgives them it is for value recieved.

We all know what the spirit of the Christian religion is. It teachss us to do good to our enemies, to love those who hate us, and not to confine our good deeds to those who do good to us, as the heathen do, and as Masons teach. We are not to forgive men simply because they forgive us, or bestow favor upon those only who can give the true grip.

We do not write, Mr. Editor, for the purpose of showing anything peculiar in the South; but to point out the wide difference between the politics of the United States, and the religion which it professes. The one breeds hate, war, and revenge; the other friendliness, peace and forgiveness. War must needs come, but we need not entertain a personal hate against him who opposes us. The execution of the laws of war as well as of peace, has nothing to do with hatred, revenge or forgiveness, but should have its course irrespective of these qualities. Mr. Sumner had no right to forgive any one for violating the laws or the rights of the people of the United States. Nor, as a good, true, and honest man had he any choice but to oppose slavery to the extreme end. Are we, American citizens who oppose Masonry, to be hated, have our deaths prayed for, be regarded as odious to heaven itself and worthy of its especial wrath, and finally, when such rage shall prove futile, vain and bootless, are we then to be forgiven for having raised our voice against an enormous wrong? Are the advocates of crime, error and falsehood to forgive us for opposing them?

We think it would be more generous and sensible in our adversaries to follow a Christian spirit, do away with Masonry, and then there would be no need of forgiving us. ANTI MASONS.

Reform News.

—The General Agent returned to Chicago on Monday morning. He has a few appointments near this city during the week and will then work toward New York State.

—Elder J. L. Barlow is preparing to take the field in May with the support of the New York State Association.

—Bro. J. P. Anthony has sent an interesting report of the lectures of Rev. J. M. Bishop in Adams and York counties, Pa., of which an account from Bro. Wickey, of Mt. Top, appeared last week. Extracts will be ready for next number.

—The way these brethern Bishop, Anthony, Wickey, and Weidler went to work is certainly an excellent one. Three places were visited and light poured in on some hitherto sightless eyes by these brethren, who went together, in the Gospel way, and so strengthened each others hands. Why may we not hear of many such meetings?

—Bro. Caldwell has found a genuine sensation it seems. Further news from that quarter will be looked for with interest.

—It is unquestionable that there are plenty of cases as aggravated as that described by Bro. Stoddard. Is there any reason why they should not be reported for the "good of the order" of Patrons?

—Elder Isaac Jackson of Minnesota has given a number of lectures, and circulated many books and documents in Minnesota during the past winter. He has been encouraged in this work by the fact that several have been kept from the lodge by the entrance of the truth which gave them light.

From the General Agent.—A Grange Trial.

PRAIRIE CENTRE, Ill.,
March 31st, 1874.

DEAR BRO. K.:—The Patrons of Husbandry have been operating at this point for some time, and if the tree is known by its fruits, this sprig from the old trunk of Masonry is a "Upas" to ferment, rather than a "Tree of Life" to heal discords and promote the welfare of the community.

Beguiled and ensnared by arts in which the experts of secrecy are so proficient, some of the more substantial and intelligent men and women joined the lodge as "charter members," but soon learning the heathenish character of its ceremonies and the deistical tendency of its religion, they lost all sympathy with, and confidance in the movement. They had embarked in the enterprise in the hope and expectation of benefiting the agricultural interests of the community, and not simply to have a "good time;" and when they found that the "chief feature of instruction was simple nonsense, and that the time was consumed in leading men blind-folded over blocks of wood, laid upon the floor to teach them to travel on plowed ground, and such like foolishness, they became disgusted.

Having paid their $25 for a charter, and the services of an authorized proficient, to "just give them a start," they proceeded to elect their officers. Rev. J. S. Palmer was chosen to the office of chaplain, and notified to prepare for his installation. Examining the ceremonies he found that he was to be installed "as the medium of this (Prairie Centre) Grange, to hold converse with the Master of the Great Grange above." This he resfused to do, believing and declaring it was anti-Christian and wholly unauthorized in the Scriptures. This, with some other irregularities, such as disrepect for the "gate-keeper," and speaking in public against their great goddesses, "Ceres, Flora, and Pomona," so awakened the ire of the craft that they resolved to rid themselves of the man who had the insolence to speak irreverently of their gods, or dared to utter his sentiment in public without first obtainng a permit from the lodge. Accordingly, charges were preferred against Bro. Palmer by somebody, and he was cited to appear before an august assembly of "Patrons" and answer for his conduct. He was accused of saying to the "gate-keeper," "Jerusalem," instead of something else, which was the "password;" also, of saying that he believed the grange to be detrimental to the peace of the community and the best interests of the people, and worst of all he not only refused to be himself installed chaplain, but as a trustee he would not consent that the heathen rites of installation should be performed in the church. These were certainly grave offenses and must not pass unpunished. The lodge could not brook such insolence. It would never do. "Our craft" is in danger from such excessive liberty. This turbulent spirit must be subdued, and taught to venerate the gods of the grange, reverence its officials, and obey its edicts, or be "totally expelled from the order, without the possibility of reinstatement," and be "forever disgraced among those who were his brothers and sisters."

Bro. Palmer was duly notified and summoned to appear before that august body against whose dignity and deities he had dared to speak. With shutters closed and "gate" securely tyled, the secretary proceeded to read the charges against Bro. P. and the by-laws of the lodge, when lo! it appeared that the accused had been guilty of no infraction of this instrument. But this sapient tribunal was not to be baffled for want of law to justify their action. Palmer was obnoxious, and beside, two Patrons, devoted to the worship of their tutular deities, had wagered an oyster supper with an equal number of "cowans," that he (Palmer) would be expelled, and it would never do to desert the faithful. This would be a violation of that clause of the "obligation," by which they had pledged themselves to "render a brother or sister of the order, such assistance as they may be in need of," and a flagrant neglect of that paramount duty to promote the pecuniary interests of each other. It would moreover be a reflection upon the "gods" of the grange to allow this prediction of expulsion to fail, and they would thereby become obnoxious to their displeasure and subject themselves to trial in the higher courts, and expulsion from the favor of their titular deities; and besides, this whole thing must be "nipped in the bud." The safety of the craft depended upon the suppression of its principles, and this favorable opportunity of making salutory impression must not be lost. Neither would it answer to institute trial and bring Bro. Palmer face to face with his accusers, for as he had violated no written law of the order they must abandon law and proceed in a more direct and sure way. A trial would imperil and might defeat their object. Witnesses and facts might prove troublesome, and like other irresponsible secret cabals they resolved themselves into an inquisition to make, apply, and execute their own laws.

Bro. Palmer after hearing his accusations was permitted to speak and then retire. The result of this inquisitorial session has not been officially announced to the accused, but inasmuch as the indiscreet "cowans" who wagered an oyster supper, on the result, have been called upon and paid their forfeit it is generally believed that Bro. Palmer was expelled. Rumors to that effect have been afloat in the community and when these sons of the gods shall claim to publish the facts there can be little doubt but that the accused will find himself driven from the warm embrace of the grange, to suffer on alone in this unsympathetic and "heartless world."

This man of grave offenses is one of the oldest and most respected residents of La Salle county, having been a citizen for over twenty-seven years. His integrity and ability has endeared him to a large circle of friends, and the case has awakened much interest in this and other communtties where he is known. He has the sympathy and approbation of the better classes and will probably survive the shock. He has extensive agricultural interests and is heartily enlisted in the Farmers' Movement. He has notified the "Worthy Master" that when they get through with their mummeries and heathen rites and are ready to proceed to business like men of common sense, he is ready to cooperate with them. Whether this offer will be accepted or whether these men "behind the screen" will proceed to defame his character, derange his business, and destroy his reputation, in addition to expulsion, remains to be seen.

Bro. Palmer, however, feels but little concern. Having acted the part of a man and a Christian he feels satisfied to abide the result. Bro. P. is an old anti-slavery veteran and thorough reformer. He appreciates the value of a good paper in his family, and besides being a subscriber himself from the first, he has sent the Cynosure to many friends and neighbors. He expects to attend our Anniversary at Syracuse and has taken a life-membership in the National Association. May God raise up many such friends to the truth. Your Bro. in Christ,

J. P. STODDARD.

From the Ohio Agent.—Is this Another Masonic Execution?

CAREY, Ohio, April 2, 1874.

BRO. K.—I have just returned from Fulton Co., O., where I spent five days, I trust to good account for our cause. While there I gave five lectures, and preached twice on last Sabbath. On Tuesday we held a meeting for organizing the county, which proved a grand success. In organizing we consumed most of the day, having a session in the forenoon and also in the afternoon, in which a suitable constitution and by-laws were prepared and adopted, also appropriate resolutions, which will be given in due time by the secretary elect. We also met at night for our last lecture of the series delivered in different parts of the county.

But I took my pen for a different purpose than to report our meetings, as others will see to that. It is this: to record an event of brutality rarely equalled in the annals of history. A few days previous to my visit to that county, several little boys, playing along a stream of water called Bean Creek, in the vicinity of Morenci (a town just in the edge of Michigan and adjoining this State on the north of Fulton Co., O.,) discovered a box in the stream partially out and partially under the water. They were induced from curiosity to examine the box, and succeeded in raising it out of the sand and mud, in which it seemed to have been buried, and worked it to the shore, but were unable to raise it upon the bank of the stream, it being so heavy. They then went up into the village and reported what they had discovered, whereupon the citizens thronged the spot immediately. The box was taken up on the bank and opened, and the contents proved to be a man in a nude condition with every mark of Masonic vengeance upon his person. His body was severed in the midst, and his entrails taken out and wrapped up in paper and found in the box with the body. The left breast cut open, the heart and vitals taken out and missing. The throat cut across and the tongue torn out, the skull smitten off and the face flayed, and otherwise mutilated so as to render his identity impossible. It appears from current report that the citizens applied to an officer of the law, a justice of the peace, and urged upon him as a duty to notify the coroner, that a jury might be appointed and a lawful inquest held over the dead body. The justice refused, and others interfered, claiming that it was a body sent to a doctor of the place for professional purposes, and placed there for speedy decomposition. So the body remained all day on the banks, no one daring to interfere, as an inquest had not been held over the same. The people being stirred and excited to their utmost tension over the matter, three young men concealed themselves near by when night came on, to see what disposition, if any, should be made of the body. And the result of their discovery is reported that they recognized three men, all Masons, who appeared, dug a hole in the edge of the stream, and then kicked the body into it and covered it up. That this report is correct no one but the fraternity seems to doubt. I saw one man, a minister, who visited the place next day and saw the box still on the side of the stream. Another, whose name I shall not now give for prudential reasons, but also a minister living in Morenci, who saw the body with all the mutilation and marks of vengeance before given. I had fear for Elder Baird, as he had been at Morenci lecturing but a few weeks previous, until I saw his article in Cynosure of last week, which, however, is without date or place. D. S. Caldwell.

The Work in Fulton County, O.

Delta, April 2d, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:

We have just organized the county. On the 26th ult., Bro. Caldwell came full of fire on this great subject, and lectured in the Poppel Grove U. B. church on the evening of the 26th, and at the Whitaker School-house on the 27th; again at the Grove on the 28th, Saturday evening. A meeting was then appointed at Poppel Grove on Tuesday, to organize. On the Sabbath Bro. Caldwell preached two excellent sermons. On Monday he lectured at Spring Hill in the United Brethern church. On Tuesday we met to organize. We had not a very full attendance, from the fact that Bro. Caldwell came before we had expected him and we could not get word to the different parts of the county in time for the meeting. But all went off smoothly, except a few ripples in the secrecy element which proved that their stronghold was stirred up. After the second lecture at the Grove, one Oddfellow on his way home could not contain himself and he "boiled over," but an "anti" was there to take care of him. At Spring Hill a Mason was too closely pressed, and when Bro. Caldwell, in the course of his remarks, gave the "grand hailing sign of distress," he denied its correctness, but he had the wrong man to deal with for Bro. Caldwell told him that by saying that was not right he simply said all the rest was correct, and he thought himself to have done remarkably well to make only one mistake in the whole lecture. The people seemed to think so too. The Mason seeing he lost his jewel looked sorry and confused. Though he professes to be a Christian, yet in his rage, while talking to the lecturer after the meeting, he used very profane language, but to no purpose.

I wish to remark that Elder Baird must have stirred the Masons to a blood pitch, for since he left Morenci, Mich., the body of a murdered man has been found bearing marks of mutilation indicated by the penalties of Masonic oaths. Wm. R. Bundy.

Correspondence.

Discipline Enforced.

About two years ago, a member of the United Brethren church, on my district, joined the Freemasons. He was dealt with according to discipline, which resulted in expulsion from the church. In connection with our last quarterly meeting on that field of labor, he made application for re-membership in the church. He came forward to the altar and stood up like a hero and publicly renounced the lodge and was received into the church. How much better for the man and the church is such a course, than the one usually pursued by faint-hearted pastors. At this same meeting there was two other Freemasons converted. One of the latter also renounced the lodge before a crowded house and joined the church; and as his case seems to be a little peculiar, I desire to give it to the readers of the Cynosure.

He made a profession of religion about twenty years ago, and joined the Baptist church. For one and a half years he was faithful; after which he joined the lodge and became very wicked.

At the above meeting he became very penitent and gave good evidence of being reclaimed.

About one week after his conversion, his pastor saw that he was in a distressed state of mind. He was approached by the pastor when the following conversation ensued:

Pastor.—What is wrong?

Convert.—I am a ruined man; I am all tangled up with secrecy; I cannot serve two masters; I want to be free, but see no possible chance. I have written to the lodge desiring to wipe off the slate, but they will not release me. Their letter to me had this statement: "Within the last three months we have received hundreds of similar requests, but we propose to release none."

Pastor.—What secret society do you refer to?

Convert.—I do not propose to tell. There are very few in this section of country, but the association extends all over this and the old country, especially France. If I am ever summoned to appear anywhere I must go, and if I refuse I will be taken.

Pastor.—How can they compel you when it is not the voice of the government.

Convert.—But it extends into the government and has become the voice of the government. That is where they will get me into trouble if I join the church. What questions touching secrecy do you propose to ask me, if I present myself for membership?

Pastor.—That you state publicly yourself, or through me, that you will withhold your presence and dues from the lodge so long as you are a member of the United Brethren church.

Convert.—Here is my trouble, if I am called upon I will be compelled to go.

Pastor.—Do you desire to be free?

Convert.—Yes, I do.

Pastor.—You do not ask us to violate our law to accommodate secret society men?

Convert.—No, I give you credit for your position.

Pastor.—Is the oath in the society referred to by you, similar to the Masonic?

Convert.—I have taken the Masonic oath, and know all about it; it is bad enough, but it is nothing in comparison to the other.

When he uttered the last sentence he shuddered and gave it with emphasis. He stated that his father had been a member of the society referred to for over forty years; "I joined about ten years ago and in 1871 became a full member. It has cost me over $200.00 so far. At one time I drew $53.00 of the society as dividend."

I was present when this man presented himself for membership in the church, and heard him, through his pastor, renounce the lodge and state that he thought it his duty to join the U. B. church. I should like to know what secret society he had reference to.

The power of Masonry is waning. The cause is moving slowly but steadily, and permanently. Thank God for men that will say what they think to be right irrespective of popular opinion.

S. P. Hoy.

Note.—The nameless society referred to in this letter is not known to any of the editors of the Cynosure.

The Convention of 1875.

A friend says: "Let the meeting of the National Association be held at Lansing, Mich., next year." Are there any remarks from others on this subject.

We hope the very best place will be recommended before the Convention assembles at Syracuse.

OUR MAIL.

—J. R. Wright, Wales, Ill., sends us our first list of twenty-five three months subscribers with $10.

John Pike, Snohomish City, Washington Territory, writes:

"You have my sympathy. Secret societies, I believe, are sapping the very foundations of our free government."

E. J. Chalfant, York, Pa., writes:

"I am to see the Cynosure is to be enlarged. I know it will take better and be more respected when it is improved as you design. So go ahead and we will make it pay. Send me one extra copy for a year from this time.

This style of a letter is just what the publishers need to strengthen their faith. The last two sentences, "We will make it pay," and "Send me one extra copy," are the words that clinch the nail.

Rev. E. L. Harris, Delavan, Wis., writes: "I am delighted with the idea of enlargement. It (The Cynosure) is entirely too small for my reading. For though I take several other papers they are all too time-serving for me. I should have made an effort to raise a list for you, but I have been sick for three months. There are a number of true friends in this region but as they are all under the influence of the "Let alone policy" ministers and have no leader, the cause suffers. Continue to shed light on all the dark places in church and state and God will bless you."

A friend in California speaking of the grange, says: "Their boastings remind me very much of Goliah's, and I think they will find that God has his little David yet; and with the enemy's own weapon will slay him."

W. J. Phillips, Lodi, Ill., a recent graduate of Wheaton College, writes:

"I want the Cynosure as long as I stay in America. I have circulated quite a number of tracts this winter, and hope to reap some benefit to the cause before I leave. in the way of new subscribers."

John Baird, Columbus City, Iowa, sends the subscriptions of six persons for a year, one for six months and one for three months, and writes:

"We are happy to send you so respectable a club list from this region where secretism has the ascendency." We are glad to receive this club. This with a few others we have received we trust are only the forerunners of a great host.

Merchant Kelley, Bentonville, Ind., sends four new subscribers, and writes:

"I assure you I will get as many subscribers as I can. On my way to the post-office I got the two last named."

He furnishes us a fresh illustration of the fact that the harvest is plenteous; and that laborers who work in season and out of season will be remembered."

F. Manter, Wayne, Maine:

"If the 'woman's work of love' or 'the prayer cure' for intemperance succeeds, why not inaugurate it for the anti-secret cause?"

He also suggests plans for making the Cynosure more valuable which will receive our consideration and for which he has our thanks.

Ladies, do not wait to see you are successful in the temperance cause before you oppose secret societies. Is not Freemasonry acknowledged as a powerful foe to the cause of temperance. From our standpoint one legitimate way to oppose intemperance is to make it unpopular for men to take refreshment at night unaccompanied by their wives or other respectable ladies in the company of "brethren" who are known to indulge in the use of intoxicating drinks.

H. M. Dice, Danville, Ill., writes:

"I have been an Odd-fellow of the fifth degree and would say that Bernard reveals it verbatim as I learned and practiced it in the lodge."

Oliver Macy, West Milton, O. A young man writes that he is working in this cause, renews his subscription and wishes us success in our "labors against the powers of darkness." We love to see young men in this work.

T. B. McCormick, Princeton, Ind., sends four new subscribers, orders tracts, and writes:

"I am glad to hear that the paper is to be enlarged and wish I could do more for it."

S. H. Erwin, Walla Walla, Washington Territory, writes us an interesting letter. Says that the people there, ministers and others, with a few exceptions (he mentions Rev. Mr. Fee and Rev. P. B. Chamberlin as exceptions) are bound by secret organizations; and that the legitimate fruit of these societies is seen everywhere. Intense selfishness. The golden rule seems to be reversed.

J. M. Bishop, Chambersburg, Pa., sends ten six months subscribers and writes:

"Hold on to your faith in God." We feel that there is nothing more reliable for us to cling to.

J. W. Allen, Ripon, Wis., sends for fifty cents worth of Cynosures to distribute at his next town meeting. Is not this plan worth following at all meetings where thinking people assemble. Send for the papers as long before hand as is necessary, in order to be sure to have them on hand.

John Glendenning, Albany, Mo., writes:

"The Anti-masonic party is increasing in numbers and in strong material, generally taking a firm stand."

He says it is an exciting time in Missouri now and he will send us more news when things settle a little. Missouri is beginning to talk about a State agent; has a political, Anti-masonic paper now in the field. There is a great work to be done in that State. We pray that those mustering hosts may be filled with the Spirit of Christ,—that perfect reformer, and that through him they may gain a glorious victory.

Forty Years Ago.

Brief Sketch of Orders that Have Influenced Governments.

SOLOMON SOUTHWICK, 1828.

Time would fail me, were I equal to the task, to trace the progress of secret societies from the plains of Egypt, Judea and Palestine, through the Grecian and Roman republics and empires; and to depict in their true colors, the evils which have invariably flowed from those dark and corrupt sources. Nor can I for the same reason, though the theme well suit the occasion, pursue the entire thread of such combinations in modern Europe. But there is one fact in history, which is too striking, and too full of instruction, to be overlooked. Whilst Freemasonry has ever been the most dangerous, the most pernicious of them all, it has attracted the least suspicion, and excited the least alarm, on the part of either the governments or the people of any nation.

The Cabal and the Star Chamber of England, whose proceedings were conducted in secret, and whose oppressive and pernicious influence was wide and deeply felt, soon roused into action the free spirit of our British ancestors, and could not withstand the current of popular indignation.

The Spanish Inquisition, it is true, has had a longer reign, but has not been less an object of jealousy and of hatred on the part of a large portion of those states in which it has exercised its authority. Between this dark and tyrannical conclave, and that of Freemasonry, there has been a perpetual war upon the vulgar maxim, I presume, that two of a trade can never agree. The High Priest of the Inquisition, surrounded by his sack and daggers; and the Great, Grand High Priest of the Black Bannered Fraternity, with Holiness to the Lord inscribed on his mitre, and VENGEANCE emblazoned on his breast-plate, have long been rivals in the trade of trick and deception; have long contended in the dark for the supremacy of the European States; have long ran the race of iniquity in the fields of pious fraud and midnight conspiracy; and whichever of them may finally triumph on foreign ground, may the Lord, of his infinite mercy, preserve our beloved country from the fangs of either.

The Illuminati of Germany, and its next of kin, the Jacobin societies of France, were the sources of wide-spread iniquity and corruption, and these together, by finally leaguing with Masonry reached the ne plus ultra of turpitude and crime, treason and murder not excepted, brought one of the mildest and most virtuous of princes that the annals of monarchy had ever known to the guillotine, and gave to atheism, anarchy and confusion the reins of empire, and the plentitude of mad misrule, and malignant and despotic power. But for the malign influence of these dark and mysterious combinations, France, instead of becoming an aceldema—instead of seeing her fields blighted by carnage, the streets of her cities running with blood, and the vultures preying upon the flesh of her unburied dead—instead of seeing the return of her ancient monarchy in its most rigid forms, might at this day, perhaps, have enjoyed the mild sway of a reformed government,—a government limited in its power by the acknowledged sovereignty of the people, and restrained by constitutional prescriptions from overleaping the bounds of justice, equity and moderation.

Let us now revert to certain periods in our own history, and inquire into the temper and disposition with which certain societies, plans and propositions, not Masonic, but supposed to have been pregnant with secrecy and design, have been received among us.

The first society which created suspicion or alarm as to its supposed secret and dangerous designs, was that which sprung up at the close of the Revolution, composed of officers of the Revolutionary army, and called by its founders the Order of Cincinnati. No sooner was the society announced than the minds of many were agitated with fears and suspicions that it aimed at the creation of a nobility, the establishment of a government founded on the inequality of mankind, and subversive of that liberty for which the Revolution was entered into. In vain did the advocates of this military combination or order appeal to the people for the purity of their motives and the propriety of their designs; in vain did they disown the principles imputed to them; in vain did they protest that their only object was to brighten and strengthen the chain of friendship, to cement the bonds of brotherhood formed amid the toils and dangers of the revolution. For the jealousy of freemen, once aroused, is not to be allayed but by the clearest explanations or the entire extinction of the exciting cause. On this occasion it was not allayed, although laurel-crowned warriors and popular orators and favorites came forward to explain and defend the motives and the aim of the Cincinnati. On the ground of their merits the most eloquent appeals were made to the people. They were justly represented as the gallant military leaders of the Revolution. Their swords had gleamed in battle from a hundred hills, and as many valleys had resounded with their shouts of victory or death—death or liberty! The dungeons of the Sugar House and of Old Jersey Prisonship had echoed and re-echoed to their groans when oppressed by hunger, thirst, disease and the pestiferous effluvia of a confined atmosphere. The frozen plains of Abraham, and the burning sands of Monmouth, had drank their blood, freely and profusely shed to secure the liberties of their country. Such were their perils, their sufferings and their services, and what was their character? It was that of highminded honorable men. They were not, it is true, the Washingtons, for we have never had—we never can have—but one Washington; yet he, the matchless hero and sage, was among them; he was their leader; following in his train as the members of this heroic band were such men as Green, Gates, Pinckney and Hamilton, men without fear and without reproach. And yet such men were not to be implicitly trusted by enlightened freemen. Virtuous precaution, as well as green-eyed jealousy, imputed secret designs of a baneful tendency to their association. The cry of Aristocracy, Nobility, Military Usurpation and Monarchy was raised against them. Nor, I repeat it, was this clamor confined to the illiterate multitude or to the unprincipled and selfish demagogues, but it came from the lips of the virtuous and venerable sages, and the pens of more than one such were employed in portraying the anticipated evils of this newborn and courtly Order. Among others, the eloquent Edanus Burke, of South Carolina, a distinguished actor in the Revolution, pronounced it "the modern Pandora," the "Hydra-headed monster" and likened it to the famous Trojan Horse, from whose bowels were to issue the myrmidons of tyranny and despotism, ready armed to seize upon the citadel of our liberties and trample in the dust the glorious fruits of the Revolution. The blaze of his eloquence scorched and nipped in the bud this military combination, and from the day of its birth to the present time it has been withering in the shade of popular neglect. It is now rarely heard of, although the probability is that the fears of Mr. Burke and his co-patriots were extravagant if not groundless.

Resolutions of a Baptist Council.

We have received an account of the doings of a council composed of ministers and delegates from the Baptist churches in Malone, Jay, Essex and Georgia, Vt., held at Plattsburgh, N. Y., March, 1831; Elder S. Marshall, of Malone, chairman, and Elder Joel Peek of Jay, scribe. This council was called at the request of brethren of the church in Plattsburgh, aggrieved on the subject of Freemasonry, who had seceded from Elder Turner and the majority of the church. The following were the resolutions passed in reference to the subject of Freemasonry:

Resolved, That we consider speculative Freemasonry a wicked and corrupt institution, opposed to the genius of the gospel and condemned by the Word of God.

Resolved, That, in our judgment, it is the duty of every Freemason who is a member of the church, to renounce all connection with the institution and no longer consider himself bound by its laws, customs, obligations or usages, and that he give satisfactory evidence of the same to the church; and that in case he will not do this he forfeits his standing in the church.

Resolved, That we consider the grieved brethren and sisters who called this council, and all other grieved members of the other party who fellowship the doings of this council on Gospel grounds; and as such, we feel in duty bound to fellowship them as the Baptist Church of Christ in Plattsburgh.—Vermont Telegraph.

MOST Christians keep their religion in a lump, laid by for great extremities. Spread it! My brethren, spread it! Take care of the small occasions, and the greater ones will take care of themselves.

The Misdirection of a Soul.

Robert Burns is the greatest of Scottish poets. His genius and perfect naturalness are a never-failing charm. There is a fact in his history, recently stated by one of his country's greatest pulpit orators, which explains what else would be difficult to understand. He was piously educated, and through all his life had great respect for religion.

Before his fame as a poet had aroused the enthusiasm of his countrymen, while he was quite a young man, his principal and only pleasurable employment was, to use his own words, "looking backwards and forwards in a moral and religious way." He loved to walk alone upon the hills, and muse upon his destiny amid the sublimity of lightning and storm. The description given of the heavenly state in the last three verses of the seventh chapter of Revelation, acted upon him like the harpings of eternity. Urged by conscience, touched with fire of truth, he went for counsel to a neighboring clergyman, who proved himself to be a careless as well as a free-thinking shepherd of souls. He could not understand his case, so he counseled him to dismiss such gloomy thoughts, to dance and mingle in gay society, as the best corrective of his despondency. His serious reflections vanished, and he was lost to religion and to God.

Here was a loss more fatal than a train of cars thrown off the track by a wrong switch; or than if some Great Eastern had been wrecked by following false lights on the Irish coast. A greater than Cowper or Montgomery, in the line of poetry, was made a baleful star in the intellectual constellation, and when, as one of the first magnitude, he might have guided countless souls to Christ, he became but the illuminator of conviviality and dissipation; and after a few fitful years, went down to the grave a disappointed man, with a ruined constitution.

Christian, in the Pilgrim's Progress, was exposed to a similar danger. When inquiring the way to the Celestial City, he was met by Mr. Worldly-wiseman, who nearly accomplished his ruin under the burning mountain to which he directed him, When the soul comes to a crisis in its history, as most souls do, it seeks some friendly evangelist to counsel it safely. When an immortal being stands at the junction of two roads, the one leading to heaven and the other to hell, and is in doubt as to which he should take, and yet desires to follow the right, the wrong counselor assumes fearful responsibility. The misdirected soul may retort to the author of his ruin, "I inquired of you the way to life, and you turned me into the road of death!" —Selected.

Dr. David Livingstone.

This distinguished missionary explorer died in Lobisa, in the interior of Africa, in August last. His explorations had led him into marshes, in crossing which he had been obliged to wade, with the water at one time for three hours above his waist. Ten of his party died through these exposures.

Dr. Livingstone was born at Blantyre, near Glasgow, Scotland, in the year 1817. His parents were in humble circumstances. Of his father he says: "He was too conscientious ever to become rich, but by his kindness of manner and winning ways he made the heartstrings of his children twine around him as firmly as if he had possessed and could bestow upon them every advantage."

David was obliged at an early age to earn his own support by work in the cotton mills of Blantyre. But even at that time he was possessed with a genuine love of learning. By hard labor he purchased the means of satisfying his mental appetite, pursuing his studies at Glasgow during the winter months, and resuming operations in the mills during vacations. We have heard from the lips of an old Scotchwoman how she had seen him reading from his book as he followed the motions of the spinning "mule."

As he grew to manhood he determined to devote himself to the missionary work. He acquired a medical education, and attended one or two courses of theological lectures; and in 1840 was ordained as a medical missionary under the auspices of the London Missionary Society.

He soon left England for Port Natal. There he met with his distinguished countryman, the missionary Moffat, whose daughter, after a few years, became Livingstone's wife, and accompanied him in some of his subsequent exploring tours, dying in 1862 of fever contracted on a journey.

After studying the language for two years, in 1843 he founded a missionary station at Mabosta. At this place, and a station fifty miles north of it, he labored for the next six years. He afterwards was stationed at Kuruman, making, however, many journeys of exploration.

In 1856 he returned to England, having added to patient and successful missionary labor geographical discoveries of great interest and value.

After publishing his "Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa," he returned to his field of labor and exploration in 1858, conducting an expedition up the Zambesi.

In 1864 he returned to his native country for the last time, and 1865 found him back in Africa ready to continue his explorations of the interior. He has been hidden in the wilds of that country ever since.

His contributions to geographical knowledge have been extensive. And he has shown to a utilitarian age the spectacle of a man, for humanity's sake and for Christ's sake, pushing into untraveled regions, undergoing great hardships, and at last meeting his death, that he might open up a dark continent to the light of the gospel.

"I view the end of the geographical feat," he says, "as the beginning of the missionary enterprise. I take the latter term in its most extended signification, and include every effort made for the amelioration of our race, the promotion of all those means by which God in his providence is working, and bringing all his dealings with man to a glorious consummation."—Ex.

Children's Corner.

"Look Before you Leap."

Many little folks are apt
To get a hearty thump,
Because they do not look before—
They take the final jump.

Close beside the stony wall,
The thorns and briers creep:
So 'tis always safe and best—
To look before you leap.

When entering life's rugged road,
Be sure aright to start:
In paths of virtue ever go,—
And never from them part.

The Promise.

In the winter, on a very slippery day, a boy was helping an aged lady down some steps.

"Aren't you afraid of falling down," said he?

"No, dear," said the old lady; "I'm as careful as I can be; and there's a promise in the Bible that helps me: 'He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken.'"

"He didn't keep mine," said the boy; I fell down once, and broke my leg."

"Perhaps that was because you did't ask Him, my dear. Suppose Mr. Brown should promise in the newspaper to-morrow that he would give a suit of clothes to every child in New York. Now, if you just read the promise and go about your play, and don't think any more about it, it won't do you a bit of good. But if you go to his store and say: 'Mr. Brown, you promised a suit of clothes to every child in New York; please give me mine;' that would be trusting his promise. And that's the way we must trust God's promise. Try them, and be sure that in some way he will more than fulfill them."

That Kiss of my Mother.

George Brown wanted to go some where, and his mother was not willing. He tried to argue the matter. When that would not do, instead of saying, "I should really like to go, but if you cannot give your consent, dear mother, I will try to be content to stay," he spoke roughly, and went off slamming the door behind him. Too many boys do so. George was fourteen, and with his fourteen years' experience of one of the best of mothers one would have thought better of him. "But he was only a boy. What can you expect of boys?" So say some people.

Stop! hear more. That night George found thorns in his pillow. He could not fix it in anyway to go to sleep on. He turned and tossed, and he shook and patted it; but not a wink of sleep for him. The thorns kept pricking. They were the angry words he spoke to his mother. "My dear mother, who deserves nothing but kindness, and love, and obedience from me," he said to himself. "I never do enough for her; yet how have I behaved? her oldest boy! How tenderly she nursed me through that fever!"

These unhappy thoughts quite overcame him. He would ask her to forgive him in the morning. But suppose something should happen before morning? He would ask her now, to-night, this moment. George crept out of bed, and went softly to his mother's room.

"George," she said, "Is that you?" "Are you sick?" For mothers, you know, seem to sleep with one eye and ear open, especially when the fathers are away, as George's father was.

"Dear mother," he said, kneeling at her bedside, "I could not sleep for thinking of my rude words to you. Forgive me, mother, my dear mother, and may God help me never to behave so again!"

She clasped the penitent boy in her arms and kissed his warm cheek. George is a big man now, but he says that was the sweetest moment of his life. His strong, healthy, impetuous nature became tempered by a gentleness of spirit. It softened its roughness, sweetened his temper, and helped him on to a true and noble Christian manhood.

Boys are sometimes ashamed to act out their best feelings. O if they only knew what a loss it is to them not to do so!—Mother's Magazine.

Bad Wages.

"I have left my place, mother," said a poor boy one day when he returned from his work.

"Why have you left?" said the mother, "was your master unkind to you?"

"No, mother, he was kind enough," said the boy.

"Didn't you like the work?" asked the mother.

"It was the wages I did'nt like," said the boy solemnly. "My master wanted me to sin, and the wages of sin is death."

His master had expected him to lie about the goods, and deceive and cheat the customers; but the boy said—

"No, sir. I can't do such things; I will leave your service first." And he did leave it; and he was right about it too. Such boys will make mothers' hearts glad, and will find that the Lord takes care of those who trust in him and will not work for Satan, nor earn the wages of sin.

Such trials do the faithful good. It may seem hard to suffer because we will not sin, but the rough sea makes the sailor, the hot furnace makes the pure gold, the strongest faith comes from the hardest trials, and they who suffer for Christ's and conscience' sake shall be blessed here and crowned with joy hereafter.—Little Christian.

Better than Gold.—We often hear little boys telling of the wonders they will do when they grow to be men. They are looking and longing for the time when they shall be large enough to carry a cane and wear a tall hat; and not one of them will say that he expects to be a poor man, but they every one intend to be rich. Now, money is very good in its place; but let me tell you, little boys, what is a great deal better than money, and what you may be earning all the time you are waiting to grow large enough to earn a fortune. The Bible tells us that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." A good name does not mean a name for being the richest man in town, or for owning the largest house. A good name is a name for doing good deeds; a name for wearing a pleasant face and carrying a cheerful heart; for always doing right no matter what the consequence may be.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Mennonites of the United States and Canada have raised $20,000 to aid their Russian brethren in their proposed migration to this country.

—The success of Mr. Moody's labors in Glasgow does not abate, now having progressed several weeks. The revival in Edinburg is still going on deepening and widening.

—The Observer says that an Association of thirty Baptist clergymen and a large number of laymen have been formed with its headquarters in Brooklyn, N. Y., "to promote freedom of conscience, and the right to open communion."

—Another religious daily journal has been started in New York. It will not compete with the Witness, although like that, an undenominational journal. It will be printed in German and its supporters will probably be largely among the Lutherans.

—The Plymouth Congregational Church of this city are discussing plans for a new building. The church edifice formerly occupied was sold after the great fire to the Roman Catholic Bishop Foley, and is now St. Mary's Cathedral.

—The anniversary of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Chicago, was held on Thursday last. Twenty-nine students have been in attendance during the year and six graduated. The aggregate receipts for the year have been $33,111.87, and Elder C. E. Spring has secured $20,000 in subscriptions for additional buildings.

—A church is being built by the Anti-masonic members of the Methodist church of Marengo, Ill., in which Rev. Mr. Fanning is expected to preach. One member bears about one-fourth of the cost. Mr. Boring who takes Mr. Fanning's pulpit in Woodstock is said to be a high Mason.

—Edward N. Kirk, D. D., pastor of Mount Vernon Congregationalist Church, Boston, died suddenly on Wednesday, April 8th. He was president of the American Missionary Association and was officially connected with many other religious, educational and benevolent societies, and his death will be very generally felt and mourned by the religious community.

—A lady writing from Sapivi, Nesperces Reservation, says that many of the Indians travel ten or twelve miles on Sunday to attend church, and a more attentive and devout congregation cannot be found in any civilized community. In prayer they are very earnest and display none of the hesitation and backwardness which may sometimes be witnessed among the white race.

—The statistics of the Moravian Mission for 1873 shows 90 mission stations, of which 74 are in America, 12 in Africa, 2 in Asia and 2 in Australia. The missionaries numbered 322, including missionaries' wives and agents. They have also 1,533 native helpers, 21,969 communicants in the territory supplied by mission labor. The total receipts of the Board for the year amounted to $99,000.

—Dr. Schauffler, of the A. B. C. F. M., writes that at length a Bohemian service in connection with the mission in Prague has been arranged, and that on Sabbath Dec. 7th, a chapel for this service was opened for the first time. The chapel is a few rods from the spot where, four hundred and sixty years ago, John Huss lived and preached.

—A new religion has sprung up in Persia, known as the "Zurdani." Its followers believe in no prophet, but only worship the Almighty, with no religious ceremonies. The principal doctrines are praise of the Supreme Being, truth and virtue. It is opposed greatly by the followers of the Moslem faith.

—The Third Presbyterian Church of Chicago which has for many years worshiped in a fine large church on Washington and Carpenter streets, is now agitating the question of removal south-westerly to a more central location with respects to its members. The pastor, Dr. Kittredge, has been with the church three or four years, and in that time the congregation has increased by about 900.

—Minnesota has 182 Baptist churches, with 5,987 members. There are eight associations. The members are of many nationalities—American, German, French, Scandinavian, Danish, African. They have only fifty-six houses of worship, but are building twenty more. There are 120 ordained ministers in the State, but not so many in active service. There are forty-eight young men just entering the ministry.

—An incidental, but useful result of the women's temperance reform is that it is teaching the women how to pray in public. A conservative Presbyterian lady of wealth and position had prayed in one day nine times in public, and a Methodist friend remarked to her, subsequently, that she would expect hereafter to hear her voice in the social prayer-meeting.

—The Bishop of Manchester having, at the Church Congress, expressed his astonishment that in the days of Christ "the poor heard him gladly," while now they were the classes most difficult to reach, a correspondent of the Church Herald suggests a solution to the difficulty, and says: "I could not but wonder as I listened to him that he did not understand why this was. The poor heard Christ gladly because he understood them. He lived among them. He knew what it was to be hungry and to have nowhere to lay his head, and therefore was able to sympathize with the poor in tempations and trials. Christ gave up his glory to save man. And if English bishops really want to reach the great masses of the poor, they must copy somewhat Christ's example."

—Another name is added to the consecrated band of lay workers like Moody and Burnell. Major D W. Whittle has given up his business and devoted himself wholly to the greatest and noblest of labors, the salvation of immortal souls. On the 1st of April he resigned his place as general agent of the Elgin National Watch Co., and a salary of $5,000 a year. Prof. P. P. Bliss has also resigned his offices as chorister of the First Congregational Church and superintendent of its Sabbath-school, one of the largest in the city, to travel with Mr. Whittle and aid his meetings with the power of song; as Mr. Sankey is helping Moody in Scotland. What a commentary is it upon our clergy when the Lord thus thrusts out men into his vineyard, and what a rebuke to the mercenary motives which, it is too often and too well known, actuate them!

News of the Week.

The City.

—The Baptist Council on the case of Rev. Florence McCarthy closed last week with the decision that the hand of fellowship should be withdrawn, and the Union Park Baptist Church were recommended to dissolve relations with him. The decision is probably just, but various irregularities in obtaining it create sympathy for McCarthy. Mr. Gordon, of the Western Avenue Church has resigned peremptorily because of the difference of his views from those of his people. Rev. Mr. Ravelin of Temple Baptist Church criticised the action of the Council severely in a late sermon. McCarthy himself proposes to start an independent church, in which, he told a reporter, the sine qua non for membership would be regular contributions.

Congress.

—The tax-gatherer Sanborn is now before the House committee of Ways and Means and is explaining that interesting business.

—The House Committee on War Claims has agreed to allow the claims reported by the Southern Claims Commission. They amounted to between $600,000 and $700.000.

—The Senate finally disposed of the finance question on Monday by adopting the inflation measure. The House has yet to adopt the bill as amended by the Senate, which it will not be slow to do; and only the President's veto is now considered in the way. Of this there is slight hope. The most influential and able members of the Senate, irrespective of party, rose as the final vote was about to be taken and protested against the act, but a headlong majority, led by Morton and Logan carried their end. This act authorizes increasing the greenback currency $44,000,000, and a further increase of $46,000,000 by the National banks.

The Country.

—Gov. Dix has declined to interfere in the case of Lowenstein, and the culprit will be hanged on the 10th of April.

—Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., has just received from a friend the generous gift of $50,000, to be made immediately available for educational purposes.

—A swindler, by representing himself as a wholesale seller to the country merchants, succeeded in cheating several Cincinnati merchants out of $100,000, and has escaped.

—The trial of Sanborn and others on conspiracy to defraud the Revenue department came off in Brooklyn last week, before Judge Benedict. The counsel for defendant made the plea that the indictment was defective and the judge on this pretext ordered the jury to bring in a verdict of "not guilty." As this will prevent another indictment for the same crime, there is a just ingdignation throughout the country.

—The Erie strike at Susquehanna depot is settled, and trains having been running regularly several days, about 500 hands were re-employed.

—The Brooklyn Board of City Works have decided to engage hereafter its employees by the hour. The pay of laborers is to be fixed at 15 cents an hour, rammers 25 cents, paviors 35 cents, and horses and carts 35 cents.

—Attorney General Dimmick, of Pennsylvania, decided that Good Friday was a legal holiday in that State, and on April 4th business was suspended generally on that day in Philadelphia. The same rule was popularly regarded in New York, and Wall street was nearly deserted.

—A snow storm passed over Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and into Canada on the 5th. In several places near the centre of Illinois and Indiana, it was the most severe of the season, snow falling six, seven, and even twelve inches.

—Boston, April 6th.—The eleventh ballot for a United States Senator was taken to-day in the Legislature, with the following result: Whole number. 194; necessary to a choice, 98; Dawes had 67; Hoar, 57; Curtis, 53; Adams, 7; Banks, 6, and Washburn, Whittier, Phillips, and Pierce received 1 vote each.

—The Connecticut State election on Tuesday, resulted in the election of Ingersoll, Democrat, by several thousand majority; both houses of Legislature are Democratic.

—The Rhode Island State election took place on the 1st. There were no Democratic nominations for State officers, and the vote was light. Henry Howard was re-elected Governor by a majority of 12,269. Charles C. Van Zandt was elected Lieutenant Governor by a vote 7,679 to 6,512 for Wm. F. Sayles, Prohibition candidate. The Legislature is Republican.

—The Suez canal appears to be doing a good business. During the month of January, 111 vessels passed through, paying tolls to the amount of $438,000.

—Low as government authority has sunk in Mexico, such an outrage as that committed by the Catholics upon the missionary Stevens cannot escape punishment. The priest who prompted the murder is on trial for his life, and six of the mob that did the work have been condemned to death.

Foreign.

—Rochefort, a daring Communist editor of Paris, who was transported to the French penal colony of New Caledonia, has escaped in a small boat, with several companions, and is on his way to New York.

—A dispatch from Calcutta, April 4th, says that the condition of the famine stricken districts is gradually improving. Over 500,000 persons in the northwestern portion of Tishart are still dependent upon government aid; the spring crop except in that province is good.

—Under date of March 25, President Gonzales, of the Dominican Republic, announces the failure of the Samana Bay Company to comply with the terms of its lease, requiring pre-payment of the rental, $650,000, to the Dominican Government, and the consequent lapse of all privileges and right granted to the Company.

—The Carlists claim that owing to a revolt in their ranks only half of their forces have been engaged in the recent battles before Bilbao. It is reported that General Santos will shortly march upon Madrid and cut off Serrano's communications. An official dispatch from Serrano's headquarters states that 410 officers and men have deserted from General Santos' command and come into the Republican lines. Up to the 3d inst. there had been no fighting for a week. Both sides are strengthening their positions at Abanto. It is reported that a force of 600 Republicans were surprised and captured at Calaf.

RUM AND TOBACCO.

Last year England collected 34,000,000 pounds sterling, near $170,000,000, revenue on tobacco and spirituous liquors, an enormous but unprofitable revenue, for it is the price of human lives.

It is currently reported that a Chicago widow, who has an income of $100,000, was taken dead drunk from the gutter lately, elegantly dressed and diamond bedecked.

A significant commentary on President Grant's extravagant use of cigars is his portrait on the internal revenue stamps affixed to tobacco packages. What a shock to American honor should a cut of Washington or Lincoln be put to like use!

To make or sell ardent spirits for common use is as wicked as to make and sell poisons for the same purpose. The blood of murdered souls will be required at their hands.—Judge Daggat.

A saloonist attempted to bluff a woman of Dayton with the challenge: "Madam, Christ drank wine, why can't we?" Instantly the reply was given: "Yes, sir: and if you will sell wine made from water you may do so." Bickham gives the moral: "Don't quote Scripture to those women."

The Kentucky Legislature has passed a "local option" liquor law, providing that twenty voters in any township may call for a popular vote on the question, and if a majority so decide, the sale of liquor in the township shall be prohibited.

It is a well-authenticated fact that in Scotland, during the ten years preceding the passing of the Forbes-Mackenzie Act, the quantity of British spirits consumed was 66,000,000 gallons; in the ten years which succeeded the passing of the act, the quantity consumed was 51,000,000 gallons.—London Primitive Methodist.

There is shaking among the dry bones that are habitually moistened with wine. Yesterday a case came before one of the courts, which turned upon the genuineness of a favorite brand of wine. What do you suppose the Sherry drank in the country is made of? Read, ye wine drinkers: "An analysis of a "standard" brand showed that it was composed of forty gallons of potato spirit, fifty-six gallons of water, four gallons of capillaire, and ten gallons of grape juice. The delectable mixture makes forty dozen quarts, which sells in the market at $38 per dozen. Rather a profitable business for everybody, except the consumers—they need stomachs glass-lined and backed with fire-brick. The fact is, but little actual wine is imported. The Sherries are adulterated with sulphuric acid, and strengthened with alcohol, the Champagnes are made of cider and alcohol, Port is a villainous decoction, and so on through the list. Still the fastidious drinker smacks his lips over his sulphuric acid, its price and its foreign name commending it to him. Not one of them can be induced to touch the real wine, made from real grapes, grown in America.—Essex Republican.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The French Assembly has introduced a strange feature in Republicanism. Ithas passed a bill placing the appointment of the mayors of the 37,000 communes France in the hands of the central government.

A recent calculation relative to the principal European languages shows that English is spoken by 90,000,000 persons, Germany 55,000,000, Spanish by 55,000,000, and French by 45,000,000.

Since 1826 only one parliament has existed for more than six years. The longest parliament recorded in English history was that elected in 1661, which existed nearly seventeen years; and the shortest that elected in 1830, which lasted only five months and twenty-six days. The House of Commons now consists of 658 members, of whom 493 are from England and Wales, sixty from Scotland, and 105 from Ireland.

It is stated that the different steam railroads of St. Louis employ 1,250 men on Sabbath; the horse cars employ 358 men, 549 are employed in barber shops, 600 in livery stables, 4,500 in dram shops, 100 in beer gardens, 7,000 in attendance at the theatres, and several hundred in the edditing and carrying of newspapers. But the worst feature of the case is that the patronage of professedly Christian people supports this system of Sabbath desecration.

When George the Third came to the throne in 1760 the national debt of England was £130,000,000. The American war raised it to £260,000,000. The insensate warfare against the French revolution made it £570,000,000, and by the time Napoleon was safely landed in St. Helena the debt amounted to the inconceivable sum of £865,000,000. It may be safely asserted that every guinea of this debt was unnecessary.—James Parton.

—It is estimated in New Orleans that 250,000 bales of hay come thither yearly, sold at from $20 to 50 a ton; nearly all the provisions come from the Northwest; potatoes are $4 to $6 a barrel; sweet potatoes can hardly be had at any price; eggs forty cents a dozen; and everything else in proportion. Gardening near any Southern city is generally very lucrative.

English taxpayers have some pretty little bills to pay for the pleasure of witnessing the farce known as the Tichborne trial. Mr. Hawkins, who is assisting the Crown officers in the prosecution, received a retainer of $5,000, and has $250 per day for his services. Mr. Parry, another lawyer on the same side, had a retainer of $3,750, and gets $150 per day. Three junior counsel had retainers of $1,000 each, and get 150 each per day. The total cost of the trial to the government up to the present time is nearly $2,500,000,000.

The Chicago Tribune shows that the logic of facts and statistics is opposed to Republicanism in Spain, Education, the foundation of self-government, is wanting. The official statistics show that Spain contains an aggregate population of 15,673,070 sonls, of whom 11,837,391 can neither read nor write; 705,768 can read but cannot write; and only a little over 3,000,000 can read and write. There are 422 Justices of the Peace who can neither read or write; and 711,119 Aldermen and 12,479 members of Town Councils who are unable to sign their own names. In such circumstances as these, aside from the natural hot-headedness and blood-thirstiness of the Spaniard, a Republic in Spain is at least an improbability.

According to the recent census the inhabitants of Ceylon number 2,500,000, and are distributed, according to their religious belief, as follows: Buddhist, 1,520,575; Sivite, 464,414; Roman Catholic, 182,613; Mohammedan, 171,542; Protestant, 24,756; Wesleyan, 6,071; Presbyterian, 3,101; Baptist, 1,478. There are 5,345 Buddhist priests, 1,078 Stvite priests, 449 Mohammedan priests, and 862 devil dancers, while the Protestant clergy and missionaries number 217, and the Catholic priests 87.

A scientific gentleman says of railway dust: "On the 24th of May, 1870, while traveling by rail between Laltley and Camp Aill, I spread a paper on a seat of the carriage near the open window, and collected the dust that fell upon it. A rough examination of this with the two-thirds power showed a large proportion of the fragments of iron; and on applying a soft iron needle, I found many of them were highly magnetic. They were mostly long, thin, and straight, the largest being about 1-50 of an inch, and under the power used, had the appearance of a quantity of old nails."

The following is a list of the Chief-Justices in the United States Supreme Court appointed between 1789 and 1874, and the date of their nomination:

John Jay, New York, Sept. 26, 1789.

Wm. Cushing, Massachusetts. Jan. 27, 1796. Appointment declined.

Oliver Ellsworth, Connecticut, March 4, 1796.

John Jay, New York, Dec. 19, 1800. Appointment declined.

John Marshall, Virginia, Jan. 31, 1801.

Roger B. Taney, Maryland, Dec. 28, 1835.

Salmon P. Chase, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1864.

George H. Williams, Oregon, Dec., 1873. Nomination withdrawn.

Caleb Cushing, Massachusetts, Jsn., 1874. Nomination withdrawn.

Morrison R. Waite, Ohio, Jan., 1874.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Mennonites of the United States and Canada have raised $20,000 to aid their Russian brethren in their proposed migration to this country.

—The success of Mr. Moody's labors in Glasgow does not abate, now having progressed several weeks. The revival in Edinburg is still going on deepening and widening.

—The Observer says that an Association of thirty Baptist clergymen and a large number of laymen have been formed with its headquarters in Brooklyn, N. Y., "to promote freedom of conscience, and the right to open communion."

—Another religious daily journal has been started in New York. It will not compete with the Witness, although like that, an undenominational journal. It will be printed in German and its supporters will probably be largely among the Lutherans.

—The Plymouth Congregational Church of this city are discussing plans for a new building. The church edifice formerly occupied was sold after the great fire to the Roman Catholic Bishop Foley, and is now St. Mary's Cathedral.

—The anniversary of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Chicago, was held on Thursday last. Twenty-nine students have been in attendance during the year and six graduated. The aggregate receipts for the year have been $33,111.87, and Elder C. E. Spring has secured $20,000 in subscriptions for additional buildings.

—A church is being built by the Anti-masonic members of the Methodist church of Marengo, Ill., in which Rev. Mr. Fanning is expected to preach. One member bears about one-fourth of the cost. Mr. Boring who takes Mr. Fanning's pulpit in Woodstock is said to be a high Mason.

—Edward N. Kirk, D. D., pastor of Mount Vernon Congregationalist Church, Boston, died suddenly on Wednesday, April 8th. He was president of the American Missionary Association and was officially connected with many other religious, educational and benevolent societies, and his death will be very generally felt and mourned by the religious community.

—A lady writing from Sapivi, Nesperces Reservation, says that many of the Indians travel ten or twelve miles on Sunday to attend church, and a more attentive and devout congregation cannot be found in any civilized community. In prayer they are very earnest and display none of the hesitation and backwardness which may sometimes be witnessed among the white race.

—The statistics of the Moravian Mission for 1873 shows 90 mission stations, of which 74 are in America, 12 in Africa, 2 in Asia and 2 in Australia. The missionaries numbered 322, including missionaries' wives and agents. They have also 1,533 native helpers, 21,969 communicants in the territory supplied by mission labor. The total receipts of the Board for the year amounted to $99,000.

—Dr. Schauffler, of the A. B. C. F. M., writes that at length a Bohemian service in connection with the mission in Prague has been arranged, and that on Sabbath Dec. 7th, a chapel for this service was opened for the first time. The chapel is a few rods from the spot where, four hundred and sixty years ago, John Huss lived and preached.

—A new religion has sprung up in Persia, known as the "Zurdani." Its followers believe in no prophet, but only worship the Almighty, with no religious ceremonies. The principal doctrines are praise of the Supreme Being, truth and virtue. It is opposed greatly by the followers of the Moslem faith.

—The Third Presbyterian Church of Chicago which has for many years worshiped in a fine large church on Washington and Carpenter streets, is now agitating the question of removal south-westerly to a more central location with respects to its members. The pastor, Dr. Kittredge, has been with the church three or four years, and in that time the congregation has increased by about 900.

—Minnesota has 182 Baptist churches, with 5,987 members. There are eight associations. The members are of many nationalities—American, German, French, Scandinavian, Danish, African. They have only fifty-six houses of worship, but are building twenty more. There are 120 ordained ministers in the State, but not so many in active service. There are forty-eight young men just entering the ministry.

—An incidental, but useful result of the women's temperance reform is that it is teaching the women how to pray in public. A conservative Presbyterian lady of wealth and position had prayed in one day nine times in public, and a Methodist friend remarked to her, subsequently, that she would expect hereafter to hear her voice in the social prayer-meeting.

—The Bishop of Manchester having, at the Church Congress, expressed his astonishment that in the days of Christ "the poor heard him gladly," while now they were the classes most difficult to reach, a correspondent of the Church Herald suggests a solution to the difficulty, and says: "I could not but wonder as I listened to him that he did not understand why this was. The poor heard Christ gladly because he understood them. He lived among them. He knew what it was to be hungry and to have nowhere to lay his head, and therefore was able to sympathize with the poor in tempations and trials. Christ gave up his glory to save man. And if English bishops really want to reach the great masses of the poor, they must copy somewhat Christ's example."

—Another name is added to the consecrated band of lay workers like Moody and Burnell. Major D W. Whittle has given up his business and devoted himself wholly to the greatest and noblest of labors, the salvation of immortal souls. On the 1st of April he resigned his place as general agent of the Elgin National Watch Co., and a salary of $5,000 a year. Prof. P. P. Bliss has also resigned his offices as chorister of the First Congregational Church and superintendent of its Sabbath-school, one of the largest in the city, to travel with Mr. Whittle and aid his meetings with the power of song; as Mr. Sankey is helping Moody in Scotland. What a commentary is it upon our clergy when the Lord thus thrusts out men into his vineyard, and what a rebuke to the mercenary motives which, it is too often and too well known, actuate them!

There is shaking among the dry bones that are habitually moistened with wine. Yesterday a case came before one of the courts, which turned upon the genuineness of a favorite brand of wine. What do you suppose the Sherry drank in the country is made of? Read, ye wine drinkers: "An analysis of a "standard" brand showed that it was composed of forty gallons of potato spirit, fifty-six gallons of water, four gallons of capillaire, and ten gallons of grape juice. The delectable mixture makes forty dozen quarts, which sells in the market at $38 per dozen. Rather a profitable business for everybody, except the consumers—they need stomachs glass-lined and backed with fire-brick. The fact is, but little actual wine is imported. The Sherries are adulterated with sulphuric acid, and strengthened with alcohol, the Champagnes are made of cider and alcohol, Port is a villainous decoction, and so on through the list. Still the fastidious drinker smacks his lips over his sulphuric acid, its price and its foreign name commending it to him. Not one of them can be induced to touch the real wine, made from real grapes, grown in America.—Essex Republican.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The French Assembly has introduced a strange feature in Republicanism. Ithas passed a bill placing the appointment of the mayors of the 37,000 communes France in the hands of the central government.

A recent calculation relative to the principal European languages shows that English is spoken by 90,000,000 persons, Germany 55,000,000, Spanish by 55,000,000, and French by 45,000,000.

Since 1826 only one parliament has existed for more than six years. The longest parliament recorded in English history was that elected in 1661, which existed nearly seventeen years; and the shortest that elected in 1830, which lasted only five months and twenty-six days. The House of Commons now consists of 658 members, of whom 493 are from England and Wales, sixty from Scotland, and 105 from Ireland.

It is stated that the different steam railroads of St. Louis employ 1,250 men on Sabbath; the horse cars employ 358 men, 549 are employed in barber shops, 600 in livery stables, 4,500 in dram shops, 100 in beer gardens, 7,000 in attendance at the theatres, and several hundred in the edditing and carrying of newspapers. But the worst feature of the case is that the patronage of professedly Christian people supports this system of Sabbath desecration.

When George the Third came to the throne in 1760 the national debt of England was £130,000,000. The American war raised it to £260,000,000. The insensate warfare against the French revolution made it £570,000,000, and by the time Napoleon was safely landed in St. Helena the debt amounted to the inconceivable sum of £865,000,000. It may be safely asserted that every guinea of this debt was unnecessary.—James Parton.

—It is estimated in New Orleans that 250,000 bales of hay come thither yearly, sold at from $20 to 50 a ton; nearly all the provisions come from the Northwest; potatoes are $4 to $6 a barrel; sweet potatoes can hardly be had at any price; eggs forty cents a dozen; and everything else in proportion. Gardening near any Southern city is generally very lucrative.

English taxpayers have some pretty little bills to pay for the pleasure of witnessing the farce known as the Tichborne trial. Mr. Hawkins, who is assisting the Crown officers in the prosecution, received a retainer of $5,000, and has $250 per day for his services. Mr. Parry, another lawyer on the same side, had a retainer of $3,750, and gets $150 per day. Three junior counsel had retainers of $1,000 each, and get 150 each per day. The total cost of the trial to the government up to the present time is nearly $2,500,000,000.

The Chicago Tribune shows that the logic of facts and statistics is opposed to Republicanism in Spain, Education, the foundation of self-government, is wanting. The official statistics show that Spain contains an aggregate population of 15,673,070 souls, of whom 11,837,391 can neither read nor write; 705,768 can read but cannot write; and only a little over 3,000,000 can read and write. There are 422 Justices of the Peace who can neither read or write; and 711,119 Aldermen and 12,479 members of Town Councils who are unable to sign their own names. In such circumstances as these, aside from the natural hot-headedness and blood-thirstiness of the Spaniard, a Republic in Spain is at least an improbability.

According to the recent census the inhabitants of Ceylon number 2,500,000, and are distributed, according to their religious belief, as follows: Buddhist, 1,520,575; Sivite, 464,414; Roman Catholic, 182,613; Mohammedan, 171,542; Protestant, 24,756; Wesleyan, 6,071; Presbyterian, 3,101; Baptist, 1,478. There are 5,345 Buddhist priests, 1,078 Stvite priests, 449 Mohammedan priests, and 862 devil dancers, while the Protestant clergy and missionaries number 217, and the Catholic priests 87.

A scientific gentleman says of railway dust: "On the 24th of May, 1870, while traveling by rail between Laltley and Camp Aill, I spread a paper on a seat of the carriage near the open window, and collected the dust that fell upon it. A rough examination of this with the two-thirds power showed a large proportion of the fragments of iron; and on applying a soft iron needle, I found many of them were highly magnetic. They were mostly long, thin, and straight, the largest being about 1-50 of an inch, and under the power used, had the appearance of a quantity of old nails."

SERMON ON MASONRY

BY

REV. W. P. M'NARY,

Delivered in the United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind.,

Sabbath, December 8th, 1873.

[CONCLUSION.]

redeem, purify and glorify its members, and thousands of its members believe it to be all the religion that is necessary and resting in it, are content without any other, and must inevitably perish in their delusion.

Yes, Masonry claims to be a religion; Masonry is a religion: let us now inquire what kind of a religion it is.

IT IS AN ANTI-CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

We are fully aware that in the orders of Knighthood there is mention of Christ and Christianity, but with reference to this we have three remarks:

1. That nine-tenths of its members probably never get so far as the orders of the Knighthood or 9th degree, and therefore if it embraced pure Christianity, nine-tenths of its members would die without Christ.

2. Robert Morris, Grand Master and author of a code of laws, says: "The orders of the Knighthood compose no part of the system of Masonry." This is no doubt true, and we are glad to say that much in its favor in view of what follows.

3. That the orders of the Knighthood have introduced Christianity in order to make a blasphemous mockery of the sacred rites of the New Testament as the other orders do of the Old. I use the word blasphemous advisedly, as it is the only word that expresses the truth. According to Webster it means "impiously irreverent."

I will give a few examples of this impiously irreverent use of the sacred rites of the Old and New Testaments, as evidence of the anti-Christian character of Masonry. In the Royal Arch degree the candidate represents Moses at the burning bush. He looks before him and sees the burning bush (a pot of glowing coals with a bush over it) and hears a voice saying: "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet for the place whereon thou standest is Holy ground." He then takes off his shoes and hears a voice saying: "I am the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob."—[Light on Masonry, p. 155.] In the same ceremony they represent the children of Israel after the return from captivity searching and finding the Ark of the Covenant in the debris of the fallen Temple, at Jerusalem.—They open it and take out—1st, the Pot of Manna; 2d, Aaron's Rod that budded—(a peach tree twig that some one had hid there) 3d, the key to the inefitable degrees of Masonry, [Light on Masonry, p. 152.]

In the Knight Templar degree the candidate is made to drink wine from a human skull and say, "This pure wine I now take in testimony of my belief in the immortality of the soul and the mortality of the body, * * * and as the sins of the world were laid upon the head of the Savior, so may all the sins of the person whose skull this was, be laid upon my head in addition to my own, should I knowingly or willingly violate this my solemn obligation," &c. [Light on Masonry, p. 182.]

Is not this a blashhemous mockery of our holy communion?

In the Mark Mastet's degree the Master produces a stone and advances toward the candidate reading Rev. ii. 7: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth save him that receiveth it. [Light on Masonry, p. 109.]

In the degree of Most Excellent Master they all kneel around the room and take hands except the Grand Master, who reads as follows from the 24th Psalm: "Lift up your heads O! ye gates, and be ye lifted up ye everlasting doors, that the King of Glory may come in." Then they all rise up, open the ring and take in the "King of Glory" in the person of the Most Excellent Grand Master. Now we ask all candid persons what stronger evidence could we have of the anti-Christian character of Masonry than this blasphemous and profane use of the most sacred rites of the Christian religion?

But we propose to show that Masonry is anti-Christian from its own rites and authorites. The Bible requires as a condition of salvation, belief in the Lord Jesus Christ. It declares that there is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved, but the name of Christ. It lays down as a condition of acceptance in prayer, that we ask all in the name of Christ. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, believing, ye shall receive."

It teaches that no man cometh unto the Father but by Christ. It teaches that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. It teaches us to do all Christian work and works of charity in the name of Christ, even to the giving of a "cup of cold water." It declares that "he that is not with me is against me." All religions therefore that teach any other way of salvation, are anti-Christian. Now, Masonry, as we have seen, teaches its members that it is a saving religion, and it carefully excludes Christ from all its religious rites.

There are many prayers in this manual, and in other manuals, but not in one of them is there a reference to Christ. Now, I freely admit that a person might inadvertently make a prayer without reference to Christ, whereas the mind might be resting on Christ and trusting in him. But in Masonry it is always omitted, it is excluded by the law of Masonry. I have indeed heard it said that in some lodges composed almost or entirely of Christians, extempore prayers are used in which the name of Christ is mentioned. But it is contrary to the law of Masonry, and when one member objects it must be omitted.

In the ceremony of admission to the Royal Arch degree the Master has occasion to read 2d Thess. iii. 6-18, in which the name of Christ occurs twice, and from which the passage receives all its significance and authority, but that name is omitted in the quotation in the manual. Which proves that they dare not put the name of Christ into any of their ritual.

The Mystic Star, a monthly Masonic journal, published in Chicago, speaking of an address delivered by Grand Orator Kinding, of Iowa, after praising his ability as an orator, said: "We regret, however, to notice a very exceptional expression in Brother Kinding's address, we refer to the phrase 'Earth's Creator and man's Redeemer, Jesus Christ.' This sentiment is purely sectarian, and as such, at variance with Bro. Kinding's usual good taste. It is reasonable to suppose that not a tithe of those he addressed believed in that sentiment."

What is here said of Masonry is true also of Odd-fellowship in a limited degree. It also has a ritual and many religious rites. It has priests, altars, vestments, prayers, hymns and religious ceremonies, from all of which Christ is carefully excluded. Grosh, in his Manual, p. 285, says: "The descendants of Abraham, (Jews) the diverse followers of Jesus, the Pariahs (Hindoos) of the stricter sects, here gather around the same altar as one family, manifesting no difference of creed or worship, and discord and contention are forgotten in words of humanity and peace;" and explains this strong testimony by the fact that they "leave their prejudices at the door of the lodge." Now I ask, can any Christian go into an association where he cannot take Christ with him—where he is compelled to leave that "sectarian prejudice" "at the door," without denying the Son of God?

Mackey, in his Lexicon, p. 404, says: "The religion then of Masonry is pure Theism, on which its members engraft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsehood with the TRUTH of Masonry." But we need not the admission of Mr. Mackey to prove that Masonry is pure Theism, for a religion that excludes Christ and combines and harmonizes all the religions of the world can be nothing else.

But, says the Mason, the Bible is one of our symbols—one of the three great Lights of Masonry; but we ask, What are the others? Why, "the Compass and the Square." So the Bible is placed on the same level with the compass and the square, and has the same authority. Chase, in his Digest of Masonic Laws, 1864, p. 206, says: "To require a candidate to profess his belief in the divine authenticity of the Bible," or "a state of future rewards and punishments, is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry." This we know must be true, because Arabs and Mormons are Masons, but they would die before they would recognize the Bible. Therefore Chase in his Digest, p. 208, speaking on this subject, says: "Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible. If it was it would not be Masonry, it would be something else."

Let me say concerning that branch of Masonry that does accept the Bible as one of its three great lights, that it takes Christ out of the Bible before it takes it into the lodge. And when you take Christ out of the Bible you take the soul out of it and leave only a lifeless corpse. Christ made man and placed him in Eden; Christ led Israel through the wilderness; Christ gave the Law upon Mount Sinai; Christ gave us the Bible, and both the Old and New Testament testify of him. But Christ, the author of the Bible, the giver of the Bible, must stay outside of the lodge—"tiled" out among the "cowans" and "the profane world,"—while the words of Christ, with his name omitted, may be carried into the lodges, as of authority equal to that of the compass and square.

In view of these facts, I ask every candid man to answer for himself, Is not Masonry a Christ-denying, Christ-rejecting religion? Does not every one that goes into the lodge turn his back upon the Son of God? "He that is not with me is against me."

Oh, my Christian brethren! if there be any among you to-day who have become identified with Masonry, let me ask you in all kindness, How can you stand up in the Temple of Christ to profess his name, and consecrate yourselves to his service on the Sabbath day, and then go into the temple of anti-Christ, where you dare not mention his name, on Tuesday?

If there be an adhering Mason under the sound of my voice; if there be one who expects to join that society, I warn you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ of your danger. I pray God he may not lay this sin to your charge, and that is all that I can do. And on that day when we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God, your blood will not be required at my hands.

Concerning the duty of the Christian church in this matter we would simply say that no Chsistian church will receive a Mohammedan into its membership. Why? Because he is a believer in a Christless religion. No Christian church would receive a participating member of the Jewish church into membership. Why? Because he is a member of a Christ-denying church. But Masonry is just as distinctly a Christless and Christ-denying religion as either the Jewish or Mohammedan church. According to its own best authorities, it is a religion of "Pure Theism."

How can a man be a professor of a religion that is "Pure Theism," and be a consistent member of a Christian church? How can a man be a member of a Christ-denying religious association, and be a consistent member of a Christian church? How can a church, which lays down as its corner-stone that Stone which these builders reject, which lays down as its fundamental principal, belief in, and profession of Christ—that Christ which Masonry rejects, receive a member of the Masonic fraternity to its communion?

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

The Christian Cynosure.

With enlarged size, added ability and the earnest co-operation of all who desire a pure church and a government in the hands of unselfish, honest men, the Cynosure will greatly increase its circulation during the coming year.

Men of average integrity need only to understand Masonry and kindred institutions to seek their extermination. Women who desire temperance and purity cannot regard with complacency an institution which is hostile to both.

Christians who abide in Christ will use all the wisdom and grace God has given them in their efforts to overthrow an institution which substitutes artificial lights for the true "Light of the world."

The institution of Freemasonry is rooted in human selfishness, sustained by false professions, accommodates its principles to the basest natures and by casting out Christ and at the same time professing to save soul's from death, it leads our nation towards heathenism.

Ignorance of this subject in thinking men and women, is the chief obstacle which those who desire to blot it out of our country, have to contend with. Will you not use all possible exertions in enlarging the circulation of the Cynosure, that this ignorance may be dispelled?

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorised to act as agents.

All who canvass for the Cynosure are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent, or twenty-five per cent in books, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100., for the Cynosure during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

Our first issue of the enlarged Cynosure was delayed somewhat but we hope hereafter to send out the paper on time.

Our friends will remember that we will give papers to twelve persons for three months, for $5.00; to twenty-five persons for $10.00. We have received several such clubs during the past week. Including these clubs, and the renewals, one hundred and eighty nine subscriptions were received at our office last week. Eighty three more than in the preceding week. We mention this to encourage those who are at work.

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commission." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2.00 a year and requires a great addition to our present mail list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not, as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

Such churches as have testimonies against Freemasonry and other secret societies have found the Cynosure, in those places where it has been read, a great help in intelligently sustaining their position. Shall we not receive from all such churches a large re-enforcement of new subscribers?

EXTRA COPIES.

We send out post-paid more than two thousand copies of the enlarged Cynosure for canvassing purposes. Will not every subscriber who receives them make the best possible use of them? Any one can obtain extra copies of the paper, free, who wishes to use them in getting new subscribers, by writing to us for them.

If persons receiving extra copies, for any reason, cannot use them, we hope they will find some intelligent and efficient friend to work for the paper and put the extra copies where they will bring in new subscribers.

Be on the look out. For what? Opportunities to get subscribers for the Cynosure. There are multitudes of them; but you will not find them without looking for them.

One man in a part of Indiana where money is scarce, has sent in forty-nine subscriptions since last November (only a few of these were for less than six months) and several orders for books. He is not through working yet. Who will compete with him?

Remember, 12, three months subscriptions for $5.00, and 25, for $10.00. But get subscribers for six months or a year where it is possible to do so.

Topics of the Time.

HANGING.—An endeavor has just been made to abolish the death penalty in the State of Illinois, substituting therefor imprisonment for life. This is a natural result of the gospel of sentimentalism which is so extensively preached at the present time. What we need is a rigid enforcement of law, and not a diminution of its sanctions. It is because, by reason of money and grips and signs and cowardice, bad men are allowed to prey upon the good, and the penalties of the law are trodden under foot, that crime increases and life is unsafe. Where law is enforced and people are intelligent, laws will be respected and obeyed. One thing we should do, and that is imprison any man who fails to furnish his children with an education. An immoral or an ignorant people will violate laws made to protect property and life. We have as a nation no hope of salvation save in the education and Christianization of the people. Unless this is done prisons cannot be large enough to hold our criminals, and no penalty can be enacted that will deter from crime. Our course is plain, enforce what law we have, and seek to produce a state of things that will render human laws superfluous, because all are obedient to the divine.

SCIENTIFIC DOGMATISM.—The world has been filled with outcries against theological dogmatism, and for a religion of reason. This is all well enough. If the religion of the Bible is not a rational religion it should be abandoned. Those who profess it, claim that it is not only a rational system, but the only one which has existed, or asks the confidence of men at this time. It would be a good thing, however, if some of these gentlemen who are so anxious that Christians should avoid placing assertion instead of evidence, would direct at least part of their attention to the fashionable scientific dogmatism of to-day. As an example of this loud talk, take the following account of a whale's rib which was found in Maryland 200 feet below the level of the surrounding country. The rib being sent to Baltimore, Dr. John F. King, of that city, thus discuses concerning it:

This skeleton was deposited when the continent was submerged, at a period when the Alleghany Mountains were hidden by the sea, and ages before the eastern shore of Maryland became dry land; in fact, when the Atlantic and Pacific oceans mingled their waters and rolled uninterruptedly across the American continent. It was deposited there long before any quadrupedal animal or man appeared upon the earth—ages before Adam lived.

It is of course to be supposed that this gentleman stood by and saw the whale covered up, as he could hardly speak so authoritatively unless such was the case.

CYCLICAL DELUGES.—It must be quite embarrassing to the gentlemen who have made merry over Noah's flood, to see how steadily scientific research is demonstrating the truth of the Bible story. This thought is suggested by a little work under the title that heads this paragraph. It is an argument to show that there have been deluges at intervals of ten thousand five hundred years in the past, and will continue to be, so long as the astronomical conditions of the earth remain as they now are. At present our summer is while the earth is in aphelion, and because its distance to travel is greater and its motion slower than while in perihelion, our spring and summer are seven days longer than our winter and autumn. By precession of equinoxes and change of the earth's axis, by and by the order of the seasons will be reversed, our summer will come while we are in that part of earth's orbit nearest the sun and our winter when we are fartherest away. At that time our spring and summer will be seven days shorter than our autumn and winter. Until that time the northern hemisphere will continue to grow colder and the southern to grow warmer. When the seasons are fully reversed, about seven thousand years hence, the southern seas will be very much warmer than now; the immense masses of ice about the south pole will be broken up and move north. The center of earth's gravity will move north along the plane of the equator, dragging after it the southern oceans. The northern hemisphere will become the watery one and the submerged continents of the south come to view. This catastrophe, which will of course destroy almost or altogether the inhabited countries of the earth, will be followed in ten thousand five hundred years by another in a contrary direction. Of course we do not affirm that this theory is to be verified, but merely suggest that, when the ablest scholars are demonstrating the possibility of not only one deluge that should cover mountains, but many of them, those who wish to sneer at unscientific statements of the Bible be a little careful about the point of attack.

INFIDEL SCIENTISTS.—Dr. McCosh is credited with the remark that colleges should have for instructors the ablest men in their several departments without reference to their religious views. That is, of two men, one an infidel and the other a Christian, the ablest man should be the instructor, no matter if he should be the unbeliever. Imagine, if possible, an institution made up in this way. Strauss or Renan in Theology; Huxley or Darwin in Biology or Physiology; Tyndall in Natural Sciences; Proctor in Astronomy, and men of like minds in the other departments. Put now young men under the care of such minds four or five years. Let them see the Bible treated as these men are accustomed to treat it. The Sabbath used for lectures on astronomy, and prayer sneered at as a foolish superstition, then let any intelligent man say what the effect must be. If infidels are allowed to control the education of the country because of a little real or fancied superiority in scientific attainment, then the educated men will be infidels.

We admit that such theology as made Princeton (in)famous during the war with slavery, is worse than rationalism or atheism, but that only proves that time serving theologians should be banished from the class room and not that atheists should be put in.

Dr. McCosh is a profound scholar, and very well knows that the Christian movement did not begin by an appeal to science or scientists. He knows that the Reformation began with the Bible and not in the laboratory. He is a Christian, and knows that the soul is of infinite value as compared with mere intellect. Is it wise then to favor the employment of infidels as instructors when they are dangerous just in proportion to their ability? Would it not be wiseer to have young people instructed by men who believe in God, and Christ, and the Bible, and have average ability in their departments, than to put receptive minds under the influence of such men as will use their intellectual gifts to destroy in their pupils that faith which gives the only valuable knowledge to the immortal soul?

THE CHICAGO POST OFFICE.—It seems to be decided by the Masonic brethren that they are to lay the corner-stone of this building on next St. John's Day. This laying of the stone is not supposed to indicate that Masons are to pay for the building, but that they are to occupy it when it is done. The brethren have been cut off from corner-stone laying so far as the churches are concerned, and this is supposed to be an attempt to get up a little excitement for the encouragement of those who are disheartened by the exposures which have lately been made and the initiations which have (not) taken place. Of course we are not within the cable-tow, but we have, nevertheless, a few suggestions as to the entertainment for that day to be provided. In the first place it would be well to explain to the rural brethren that St. John's name is tacked on to this day, not because he was ever a Mason, but because the early brethren wanted to have a good drunk on that day and thought it would make it a little better to call it a St. something. In the next place, a number of experienced craftsmen should show how offices are won by valiant Freemasons. That Grand Master who made a fortune out of the Illinois state prison should tell the rest how to get contracts and how to get rid of an old wife. Then another Grand Master might tell how to get a good berth in the Chicago water works; and still another might tell them that when they get money "on the square" they must never tell, even if they are sworn to do so. He could also explain how to manage a printing steal "to the glory of the Grand Architect of the Universe." Another brother could tell all about dodging a halter at Shelbyville. And then a choir composed of some of "our greatest and best men," say Pike, Mackey, Reynolds and Johnson might sing:—

Great gods of our Masonic clan,
Oh! hear us as we pr(e)y,
Help us to get the offices
And hide the spoils away.

Don't let the Anti-masons know
What we in lodge do plot;
And keep the maimed and blind and poor
Far from the sacred spot.

Oh! let us never, never know
The pain of plans defeated;
But help us steal and drink and sing,
Till in Grand Lodge we're seated.

After this, speeches for the good of the order could be resumed until it was time to go to the dance, which should be a very notable affair, tickets ten dollars, widows and orphans specially invited. By pursuing this or a similar plan it is confidently believed the occasion might be made interesting and profitable to all.

OUR COLLEGES ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

ANNVILLE, Pennsylvania, January 6, 1874.

DEAR SIRS:—Your request, asking my opinion of the influence of Freemasonry, etc., is at hand. Pressure of duties prevents my giving a full or formal statement in reply.

My estimate of Freemasonry may be known from the statement that the United Brethren church, of which I am a member, is utterly opposed to it, and I am with the church on this question. My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that religiously it is a stumbling-block; and that socially and politically the benefaction it offers to one, is a robbery of others.

No secret society or so-called fraternity is permitted within this institution.

Wishing you success in the accomplishment of good, I shall remain yours very truly,

L. H. HAMMOND.

Adaptation, Satan's Master-piece.

BY NATHAN CALLENDER.

No one in the realm of moral government can use this, with the same latitude, as can the angel of the bottomless pit and his unscrupulous emissaries. Moral rectitude circumscribes the actions of the good and sincere of all grades of being, but Satan and his followers can become "all things to all men," in a sense that Paul could not think of doing. Indeed, in a sense in which it would be absolutely impossible that good angels or even God himself should do. How exceedingly flexible in morals and religion is Lucifer and his time-serving tools! See how he can accommodate the most exclusive, anti-social, and misanthropic of systems known among men, to all conditions of society! Who would think that men in general would endure a system of religion, which, by its very terms of membership, excludes nine-tenths of the race of man?

Such a system, is Freemasonry, the universal (?) religion! Will not all men in dotage, all in nonage, all invalids, all females spurn such a trick of the pit as that, from the face of the earth? Then look at the initiation degradations! Will men in the possession of their faculties endure them? Wait before you answer no. Cannot Satan so cut this Masonic coat as to fit everything but a good conscience? Yes, yes; here we have English Masonry, French Masonry, Scotch Masonry, American Masonry, etc., etc., to fit the various nationalities. But how will his satanic reverence fit his Masonic garment to the sons of St. Patrick. O, he will give them Irish Masonry, the Molly Maguires, and then a broader system called Jesuitism. But what will he do for the church and the clergy? Will he recognize the professed followers of Jesus, whom Masonry insults, as enemies and meet them in open conflict? Not he. He will sooner baptize this hell-born child of infidelity into the Christian name! Do not marvel if Satan and his staff do transform themselves into angels of light. So immediately after thrusting the Masonic high-priesthood into the face of our Great High Priest, Jesus, in this nineteenth century, we have an outfit of "Knights of the Red Cross," "Knights of the Christian Mark," etc. "The Holy and Thrice Illustrious Order of the Cross!" Can Satan himself fit this to the Christian clergy and church? Will they put it on? O, yes, many of them will wear it along with the hood-wink, cable-tow, and sheep-skin.

But can satanic genius itself fit a system inherently and supremely selfish to the promptings of benificence and charity? Yes; we must accept the system as pre-eminently benevolent and charitable! Why, it takes nearly one-tenth of the money filched from the poorer classes of its devotees to take care of their own sick and poor and bury their dead honorably (?) oh, honor! where is thy dignity? Then, there is the Temperance cause. Cannot the system, whose birth-place was Appletree-tavern, Covent Garden, London, and whose very inspiration has always been its "refreshments, whiskey, and wine libations; in short a factory to turn out vigorous tipplers by the hundred,—cannot this glorious and "most moral" of all orders do something for temperance?" Masonry answers, Yea, in the secret temperance orders, so-called, all unmistakably Masonic. But need his satanic majesty be reminded of the political world? Must he not cut his Masonic gown to suit both religion and politics, though you know Masonry don't interfere with either (?) Now see how his reverence can adapt himself to all political castes: Masonry Anti-Papal, "Know-nothings;" Masonry Pro-slavery, "Knights of the Golden Circle;" "Ku-Klux;" etc.; Anti-slavery Masonry, Union League, etc.; Masonry in marshal array, G. A. R., and Knight Templars. "Templar Knighthood," says Wm. H. Allen, of Philadelphia, "superadds to the four objects of speculative Freemasonry, . . two new elements, the religious and military." Mark this, "Knowledge is power," says the maxim, and the colleges of the land are the grand source of the higher attainments in knowledge, says experience. Shrewdly does Satan cut his Masonic garment, adroitly fit his cap, and then lays his polluting hand on these grand sources of power, and scores of literary (?) secret societies is the result. Satan never exhibited more diabolical wisdom than when he entered college as a literary gentleman, in the various "College Secret Societies."

"Who killed Mortimer M. Leggett?"

But we cannot follow him in all his secret windings. Besides the conditions of Masonry already noticed, we have Female Masonry, Sympathetic Masonry, etc., etc. Satan, adapting himself to every phase of society, in that master-piece of deception and wickedness.

A Recollection of the Sumner Family.

BY S. D. GREENE.

From a memorandum of my first acquaintance with Hon. Charles Sumner, now deceased. In 1830, soon after I came from Batavia, N. Y., to Boston, Charles Pinkney Sumner, the high sheriff of Suffolk county, Massachusetts, sent me an invitation to dine with him at his residence in Hancock street, Boston; and his note significantly described the viand of which his dinner would consist, viz., tongue.

Thus I went at the hour appointed, prepared to talk. After being seated at the table, (Charles Sumner, then 16 years old, on my right hand, his father at my left in the center of the table, and Mrs. Sumner opposite him,) Sheriff Sumner said, "Mr. Greene, I understand you are a professing Christian, will you crave a blessing?" I did so, thanking God not only for his preserving mercies, but that he would bless the food in readiness to our nourishment and that our intercourse at the present time might be acceptable, agreeable and of lasting benefit.

After the ceremonies at the table were passed, Sheriff Sumner, (no doubt as an introduction to the conversation to be held after dinner,) asked me if I was a Freemason? I told him that I had taken three degrees. "Were you a member of the same lodge with Captain William Morgan." I said, "Yes, sir." "What was your business?" "I kept a hotel and was trustee of the village. Our village was incorporated in 1826, and I was chosen the principal officer to take care of its affairs." "Was you personally acquainted with Morgan?" "I was." "What kind of a man was he?" "A very affable man and truly moral in sentiment." "Was he a drinking man?" "Yes, sir." "Was he a drunkard?" "No, sir, he drank as others do, but he was never called a drunkard till the Freemasons called him so."

We finished our dinners and retired to the parlor; when Mr. Sumner said, "Mr. Greene, I want you to give me, (if you are willing,) the whole history of the kidnapping of Morgan and Miller of your own personal knowledge."

I then narrated to him and Charles and Mrs. Sumner, the facts contained subsequently in my lectures, afterwards delivered, and now published in the "Broken Seal." About 4 o'clock Mr. Sumner invited me to accompany him to the jail in Leveritt street, and showed me about the prison; and at the close he introduced me to Dr. Flint, the prison physician, who was Worshipful Master of the lodge in Boston, and as the doctor took my hand, the sheriff said, "Doctor, here is a gentleman, as the woman said at the well of Samaria, who will tell you all you ever did. He was a member of the lodge of Freemasons of which Morgan was a member, whom the Masons murdered. He is a seceder." At the last word, the doctor twitched his hand from mine, saying "he wanted nothing to do with a seceder." I said, "Doctor, I was acquainted with a Dr. Flint for years; he was our family physician while we lived in Leicester." He was a lovely man, too." The doctor said, "he is a connection of mine.

This seemed to quiet the Grand Master a little, and I said, "Will you permit me to ask you a question or two?" To which he consented. I then said to him, "Suppose you were the mayor of Boston, and you were under oath, would you keep your oath?" The doctor said, "yes." "Doctor, suppose you absolutely knew that there were men coming to set the city on fire, would you set a guard to hinder them?' "Yes," said the doctor. "Suppose that you knew that clandestinely a body of men had murdered one citizen, and actually kidnapped another, would you send a posse and save him if you could?' "Yes," says the doctor. "Well," I continued, "I did no more than you say you would." Handing my hand he took it. I briefly narrated to him what I did. "Do you blame me?" He replied, "No"

Then Mr. Sumner added, "Doctor, you seem to meet Mr. Greene like a north-wester, but he has stood like a sturdy oak in an open pasture, and you have only fanned his leaves."

Mr. Sumner soon after renounced Freemasonry, and published his opinion of the institution. Mr. Sumner would often send me a note inviting me to take a seat with him on the Sabbath in the King's Chapel, and out of politeness I used to consent. Charles from 1830 has been my friend. More anon.

The Works and Word of God Degraded.

BY A PAST ROYAL ARCH MASON.

To any professing Christian Mason of any and all Masonic Degrees:

The writer has not taken his pen without "counting the cost." He has looked to be assailed from "the craft." He is prepared to see himself held up as a "perjured man." Neither fit to live, nor prepared to die. (The very charge implies that the truth is told).

I am greatly strengthened and encouraged by words just from the pen of that eminent and beloved servant of God, Dr. John Hall: "You will denounce me, and would ruin me; but before I took my pen I denounced myself." In this whole matter of my Masonic oath, and my Masonic life, I have judged and condemned myself. You can find nothing in my past life, while the bond slave of Satan, and in all those long years, "led captive by him at his will," that can by any possibility be spread out and magnified in your eye, as they are in my own. "My new Master knows the worst, and knows it from myself." He enjoined me to "forget the things that are behind." I have broken the holy law of God, and "hated instruction." The Son of God in my nature, and in my place, has "magnified the law, and made it honorable." I am standing on the very bank of the river of death. I see ministers of the Gospel, mingling with men in the ceremonies of the lodge-room who have no pretention to Christianity, and a "necessity is laid upon me;" I must write; I must warn you. "Call no man master, one is your Master, even Christ." "Come out from among them, and be ye separate."

Happening a few days since in company with two Presbyterian gentlemen, "dyed in the wool," the elder, who had imbibed Calvanism from the breast of his mother, and who, I fancy holds the "form of sound words" as laid down in the Assembly's Shorter Catechism, it was not a little surprise to learn that a Presbyterian minister, "in good and regular standing," could be found, who believed in Masonry. Now while I am quite sure that this gentleman has forgotten more than ever found a lodgment in my brain, I can teach him, and many others with him, some things about this "honorable fraternity," that if rehearsed where Calvin sleeps, would almost cause a moving among his bones. I am devoutly thankful, that in comparison with the Baptist and Methodist churches, but few Presbyterian ministers have been so stupified and infatuated, in seeking after "secret things," as to take off their garment, and put on the flannels of the craft, have their fingers stripped of rings, their very shirt-button removed. (In one instance, at least, it became necessary to file from a candidate's finger a valuable ring,) to prepare them suitably for initiation. I could take them to Presbyterian churches over which any other than a Mason could not be settled.

The first and best gift of God to man was woman. When the Almighty had created the earth and all things in it, and garnished heaven with all its glorious hosts, he looked with complacency upon the works of his hands, and pronounced all "to be good." As day after day he progressed with the matchless work of creation, new and more beautiful works sprang into existence, who can portray the ecstacy, joy, and unmingled adoring love, of the bright and holy ones that surrounded his throne? "The morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Higher and higher, and louder and sweeter must those anthems of praise have risen, as each successive day's creation, exceeded in manifestation of wisdom and love the preceding.

How awful must have been the "silence in heaven," of that hour, on the morning of the sixth day, when the Holy Three in council said, "Let us make man in our image." From the dust he was made—but Oh! how beautiful! He had not sinned, and he was perfect. I think the "morning stars" began that song of songs, when first they saw man, in the personal image of the coming Emanuel, and in the holy moral image of their triune God, stand up before them.

There is yet the finish to be put to this great creative work. Again we hear words of love from the Holy Trinity, "It is not good for man to be alone, I will make a helpmeet for him." O what love in those words. Never was wedding morn more like that; and there never will be, until "time shall be no longer," and until the great marriage day of Jesus with his church shall come, and the bells of the New Jerusalem shall call all to the wedding feast who shall then be found "having on the wedding garments." But ah! Masonry, that wraps its mantle of superiority and assumed sanctity and chastity about itself, excludes the last, the best, the most lovely work of God's creation; and ranks her by solemn oath at the tail end of old men in their dotage, young men in their nonage; atheists, irreligious libertines, idiots, and fools. Shame, where is thy blush!

I will now give you a specimen of the distinguished morality of the "Master Mason:" "Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, I knowing them to be such; nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it."

The cloven foot of the Arch one begins to be seen in this degree. Masons are in lecture taught as follows, (lecture third:)

Ques.—What does a Masters' lodge represent?

Ans.—The Sanctum Sanctorum, or Holy of holies of King Solomon's Temple.

Ques.—Where did Masons usually meet?

Ans.—On the ground floor of King Solomon's Temple.

Ques.—How many constitute a fellow crafts' lodge?

Ans.—Five—two Masters and three fellow crafts.

Ques.—Where did they usually meet?

Ans.—In the middle chamber of the Temple.

Ques.—How many constitute a Masters' lodge?

Ans.—Three Master Masons.

Ques —Where did they usually meet?

Ans.—In the Sanctum Sanctorum of the King's Temple.

King Solomon had no more to do with Masonry than my cow. Learned men know this. In behalf of the great Founder of Christianity I challenge the order to prove their presumptious assertion. A Master Masons' lodge held in the Sanctum Sanctorum or Holy of holies of King Solomon's Temple! Who believes it? Who?

It is alleged by Masons that the Ark of the Covenant was lost, and that it was found among the rubbish of the Temple, in the same place where the "keystone of the Royal Arch" was found. It is more than folly and presumption. It is wicked, as I cannot but view it, in a minister, in any one, to take such a position, by his active presence at any Masonic meeting; or, by continuing to be enrolled as a Mason, to "teach men so." The Ark was not lost, but "under curtains," until Solomon built the Temple and prepared "The Most Holy Place" for its reception, and what blasphemy for Masonry to assign the sacred place where "He dwelt between the cherubim" as the "usual place of meeting of a Masters' lodge!

But if we pass on in the scale of infidelity to the proceedings and work in the Royal Arch degree, we find that here we begin to enter into that state, "even to the land of darkness and confusion, without order, and where the light is as darkness." The march is gradual, but unless the eyes have been opened, and Masonry given up, before the blinded man reaches the degree of "Secret Master," his case seems really hopeless.

Something About the Founders of the Grange.

[From the Chicago Tribune, March 28th.]

HOOK'S POINT, Hamilton Co., Iowa.

To the Editor.

Sir: We have now an official announcement of the viz: William Saunders, O. H. Kelley, A. B. Grosh, John Trimble, Jr., J. R. Thompson, F. McDowell, and W. M. Ireland. The first five are residents of Washington, D, C., where they are engaged in various official and professional occupations. At least two members of the original firm—or founders of the order, if you please—seem to have been, for some cause, eliminated by this new deal. I allude to Mr. Bryan, who put in some money to pay for printing expenses at the start, and to D. S. Curtiss, who contributed some brain-work,—both residents of Washington. That remarkable string of ponderous platitudes, the "Preamble" to the National (Grange) Constitution, was written by Curtiss.

A. B. Grosh, in the above-named official list, is a Universalist preacher; and of his antecedents, as an organizer of secret orders, no Odd-fellow need be told. To him the Patrons are principally indebted for the ridiculous mummeries and tedious lectures of their "beautiful secret work," as it is complacently called by its fond author. Its reverend progenitor has been somewhat unfortunate, if not culpable, in the application of his classical lore to the "make-up" of this ritual. The terpsichorean feature in the degree of harvester, is one against which the common sense and religious feelings of the virtuous farmer stubbornly and naturally revolt. He don't want dancing in his'n. When we connect Terpsichore with those other ancient goddesses of questionable morals,—Ceres. Pomona, and Flora, —we are excusable for wishing that the authors of the ritual were less classical and sensuous; and that the typical selections for the farmer were less heathen and more Christian in character. Flora is the type of the Sixth Degree. She was a heathen goddess, whose festival was celebrated by the ancients, from the 28th of April till the 1st of May, with "extravagant merriment and laciviousness." Was she the presiding genius of those banquets, of the privileged members of the degree of Flora, which were held at Washington in January, 1873, and which were paid for out of the Patrons' dues and charter-fees? We do not think that this Heathen goddess is the most respectable and honorable type for the Christian women of America to acknowledge. If she is how soon, then, may we not expect the institution of another degree, whose tutelar claims for worship shall appeal with as much force to the men? Shall we have Bacchus for an eighth degree?

THE RITUAL is a ridiculous failure.

It is owing to the magnanimity and kind forbearance of the satirists of the day that we have not been already overwhelmed with humorous burlesques upon the "Grangers." Nothing is more to be feared, and, when the laugh is once fairly started, richer fun will follow the "grange" than ever did the "Knights of Malta" or the Oriental Order 1.001." Then the epitaph of the grange will be, "Died of laughter." But the laugh is on the other side of the mouth when we consider the CONSTITUTION OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE.

The ritual may excite merriment, but this wonderful instrument must provoke ire. It is chiefly remarkable for cunning. If the ritual of the "Grange" is a humbug, the so-called Constitution is a fraud; and the selfish schemes of its projectors are certainly well designed, and their profits securely guaranteed by this document. No "Dollar Store" or "Union-Furnishing Company" prospectus can excel it. A common impression is prevailing, that the so-called National Grange is but a new name for "ring," or "Construction Company," whose members are fattening upon the hard-earned money of the farmers; and there is good foundation in the facts that have leaked out as well as in the artful devices of the constitution, for such a belief. By that document, the members of the "ring" perpetuate themselves in power, and absorb all of the money, without any legal, or even moral, accountability whatever. This is now becoming better understood in Iowa, and honest but simple-minded members of the order "want to know, you know," what becomes of all our money. C. F. Clarkson, of the Des-moines Register, whose loyalty to the order no man dare gainsay, in his issue of March 6th, DEMANDS LIGHT.

He estimates the receipts of the National Grange for the last year at $200,000,—which, I think, is about correct,—and asks, "Where is the money? He wants to know how many bogus representatives of the States, with their wives, sat in the last session of that august body,—as they did in the previous one; and how much mileage, and per diem, was again paid to them illegally, out of the farmers 20-cent corn. He also significantly inquires if there was another "back-pay grab."

It is of no use to make such impertinent inquiries and demands. Gentlemen, you can't have your money, and the Order too. The worthy Patriarchs of the Grange are securely protected against your reforms, and they disregard your clamors. You are sworn to secrecy, and also to respect and obey the "Constitution and By-Laws of the National Grange." Don't be disloyal, gentlemen. "You pays your monish, and takes your choice!"

The farmers need this order, or something like it as A MEANS OF ORGANIZATION. As a class, we cannot afford to remain segregated while all the rest of the world are combined against us. It will give us present relief from the oppressions of class-legislation, and will secure us future power. But is it not costing us far more than necessary? Why should it be so expensive; and why must it be controlled by these men, who, from the very nature of their pursuits can have no honest fellowship with us, and who have not, from their past actions cannot have, our respect and and confidence? There is but one expedient for those who prefer the order as it is, but divested of its expenses and extortions, and that is a general delegate convention of the members, for the purpose of placeing the order under a representative system of government and of putting its power where it properly belongs,—in the hands of the people. The Patriarchal system is insisted on by its founders, but surely they mistake the intelligence and spirit of a million men and women of America.

D. W. ADAMS,

so-called Master of the National Grange, says the members of Boston Orange were not farmers, and therefore he deprived them of fellowship. Let us take a look at his pretentions, not only to membership, but to the office he fills. The Waukon Standard of Feb. 5th, published to the town of Waukon, Ia., where Mr. Adams resides, says: "Mr. Adams is not now, and has not been since he became a member of the order, a farmer within the meaning of the above instructions; but, during that time, his greater interest has been in another direction, he being the senior member of the dry goods firm of Adams & Hale, and was also a nurseryman at the time of becoming a granger, though not now, and never a farmer according to Mr. Golder's definition, that we know of. During our residence in Waukon, he has not owned a horse or a cow, to our knowledge. Verily, a prophet is not without honor save in his own country.

But this is not all. Mr. Adams was, by some hocus-pocus, made master, two years ago, of the Iowa State Grange, and, by another mysterious process, he became, in January, 1873, master of the pretentious National body of Patrons. Now let that aspiring gentleman, that rigidly-righteous Patron, face the music, and tell us whether he was ever Master of a Subordinate Grange. The Constitution, so often named by me provides that the State Grange shall be "composed of Masters and Past-masters of subordinate granges": and the National Grange shall be composed of Masters and Past-masters of the State Granges." Now, I have it from reliable authority that Mr. Adams was never Master of a subordinate grange. That being true, he has never been legally entitled to the office of Master, either in the State or National Grange. Is he not a righteous Jew to throw stones at the Boston Grange?

Reform News.

—The General Agent took a final leave of Chicago, until after the Anniversay, on Saturday last. He expects to spend a month in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania before reaching Syracuse.

—The New York State Association is working strongly and steadily for a thorough canvass of the State before June. Brethren Stoddard and Barlow will spend the seed-sowing month of May lecturing and organizing for the Anniversary.

—This Association has also engaged Prof. C. A. Blanchard for the month of May, with the understanding that the renumeration for his services shall be paid to Wheaton College.

—All will be rejoiced to hear from Bro. Kiggins of Indiana again, after so long silence. The Hoosier State news will again be full of interest.

—Several have inquired for further particulars of the Morenci, (Mich.,) affair reported last week by Bro. Caldwell. Nothing further has been received on this case, but any new developments will no doubt be reported without delay.

—The General Agent lectured in the German church at Batavia, Ill., on Wednesday night last week. He found an interesting case of attempted intimidation at Geneva, which will appear soon in the Cynosure.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—A Sharp Skirmish and an Advance on the Enem'ys Works.—The Anti-secret Army Encouraged.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As you know I came here three years ago, impelled by a sense of duty, to erect a standard against organized and oath-bound secrecy in all its forms. My settlement here at Bemis Heights, with my known sentiments, was an offense to Masonry and its cubs, and became a signal for their onslaught. First, slander began her envomed work; but this failing to drive me away, one of my members was induced to go and unite with the Masons, against the known wish of the church, and in violation of a contract between the church and myself, that no more Masonry be admitted to fellowship among us. It was believed by the craft that the church, long unused to discipline, had not the strength or moral courage to throw off the offenders; and that, in consequence, I would be forced to resign. But here their plans miscarried. The offender was promptly set aside, and the church, so far as she knows, soon freed herself from all complicity with these "unfruitful works of darkness."

During all this time, I have, as opportunity offered, sought for a place somewhere in this region where I could get a congregation together to hear on this subject. For a long time I sought in vain. Pastors are either members of one or the other fraternities, or they have one or more in church or congregation who are Masons; and they dare not even whisper a rebuke, much less consent to have their pulpits used by me for such a purpose. For instance, I called last week upon the pastor, lately installed, of a Presbyterian church near me, and asked him if his house of worship could be obtained. He is himself a member of the United Presbyterian church, a body, which, as you know, disfellowships all secret societies, making it a test question. But he did not dare to have the subject come up in his church. He said he had two Masons in his congregation; neither, as I understood him to say, Christians, and one of them master of the lodge; and it would not do to offend this one, as he was leader of his choir! O tempora! O mores!

At length I heard that there was a small Free Methodist church in Saratoga Springs. I soon called upon one of its leading members, a Bro. Town, who introduced me to his pastor, who joined him in giving a hearty consent for the use of their house.

Last Friday night, after due notice given, I met an intelligent audience of 200 or more, among whom were quite a number of Masons, male and female Odd-fellows, etc. Before I commenced to speak, we were reminded of the "Grid Iron" by an old gentleman who was apparently ready for the fray. Bro. Mathews, the pastor of the church, promptly demanded order, and after singing and prayer, gave the craft to understand that they might take notes of what I was about to say, and then appoint their champion, one the fraternity would endorse, and he should, on any Friday night they might choose, have the house for an answer. But this did not seem to please them, for they began to interrupt with questions before I had fairly introduced my lecture. Indeed, my speech was mainly shaped by them. One, a professionable gentleman, when I was speaking of the omission of the name of Christ from their prayers, as well as from quotations from the Scriptues, asked me with something like a sneer, "Will the gentleman be kind enough to read to us the extract from Thessalonians, which he says is so garbled?" Of course I responded gladly to this appeal, reading from Sickel's Monitor, while Bro. Mathews read from the New Testament. This quieted the craft for a time, and then they seemed surprised, apparently never having had their attention called to the subject before. But having lost their jewel of a silent tongue, they kept up a running fire of questions, which served, with the answers, to amuse the audience as well as myself. I am truly grateful for the assistance thus rendered me, making it one of the most spicy meetings I have attended in a long time. The old saw, "Wounded birds flutter," had such a practical exemplification as to satisfy "cowans" and "profanes" that I was not beating the air.

One man, towards the close of my remarks, rose in the rear of the audience, with a self-complacent smirk on his face, which plainly said, "I'll fix him!" and gave birth to the following: "Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us how often he has been before a committee, and been black-balled?" The gentleman questioner, like an old man-of-war's man looking after a shot from his "long Tom," stood as though expecting the destruction of the speaker, but finally slunk ashamed into his seat. The craft were again invited to reply, and I invited them to take the stand then and there,—indeed, dared them them to deny my statements; but no denial was forth coming.

As they were going out, Bro. Mathews sent a parting shot after them, suggesting that some of them had taken more "Apple Jack" than was good for them, and inviting them to attend the temperance meeting on the following Sabbath evening and sign the pledge.

The wife of a mason, on her way home from the meeting, inquired of her husband as follows: "Why didn't you tell that man he lied when he dared you to, when speaking of the first oath? If it is not as he said, why didn't you tell him so?" But the poor fellow as to that matter kept his jewel, but satisfied his wife that what the speaker said was true. One thing he did say, repeating it several times, with some appearence of indignation, "Then I'm not a Christian!" Alas poor man, I think it would be well for him to be looking for his evidences.

I hope to return to the charge again soon, and then have Prof. B. give them a "petard" next month. Many are are anxious to hear him. The ball is now fairly rolling, and by God's good favor will not stop soon. I expect to speak in an adjoining county to-morrow evening.

I have accepted the appointment as General Agent and State Lecturer, and expect to enter on full work next month.

BARLOW.

The Work in Indiana.—From the State Agent.

PORTLAND, Jay Co., Ind.,
April 7, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been anxiously waiting and looking for your arrival since Saturday, and here you come at last on Tuesday evening. I've wondered and inquired why it is that you do not reach the good people at Portland till Monday and Tuesday;—and at last I've learned the reason. Here you come this afternoon, on the train from the South. You should have come by Ft. Wayne, instead of going all the way round by Indianapolis, and then coming back north.

But then I am really rejoiced to see you looking so well! Now, don't think I mean to flatter you,—but really I felt almost proud as I told the large audience in the College Chapel this evening, how little you was for a long time; and how that your remaining so small was all because you had to work so hard, and fare so slim; and then how that after passing through the fire twice, and the water once, God had so multiplied your friends as to enable you to grow as large as you now are. Well, while you was small you helped us lecturers, and workers in our great reform marvelously. But now that you have grown so large and strong, you will do still greater things for us; and I trust we will, one and all, work more untiringly for you.

The Anti-masons of Noble county, having concluded at their last meeting, as reported in your columns, to take steps immediately to canvass the county, and call a political convention, sent for me to do the canvassing. I began the work about the 10th of March, and up to the 31st I had spoken at fifteen different points in the county. and succeeded in securing the election of about forty delegates to the convention which will be held in Albion, the county seat, on the 23d inst.

I was obliged to come to this county to attend the first semi-annual meeting of "The Jay County Anti secrecy Association," to be held to-morrow in the College Chapel at Liber, two miles south of the county seat, Portland. I have spoken five times since coming to the county, and will speak twice more. I go from here to Westfield to attend the meeting of the Executive Committee on the 14th. Our meetings are well attended and good is being done, notwithstanding the (Masonic) "heathen rage, and (some of) the people imagine a vain thing." You will shortly receive a report of the meeting of the Association here, from the secretary.

The treatment we receive as a rule from lodge men is quite different from what it was in the same place a year or six months ago. Only a few attend, and they frequently behave themselves like other folks, only "they look sour." But at new points it's the same old story, varying only in the details, and not of sufficient interest to tell again. The cause is extending its victories rapidly. As much as has been said about "the grange movement," I am convinced that it is at this time doing a good work for our reform. It is awakening the latent anti-secrecy sentiment of men all over the country whom the Cynosure does not yet reach, and to whom the anti-secrecy movement is unknown, and would be perhaps for some time only for the effect of the grange swindle. Then it is helping to narrow down the question and bring it to a more speedy issue, whether the affairs of this nation, social, civil and religious, shall be conducted openly or secretly. "To this complexion must it come at last." I am now stopping with Bro. Wilson Milligan.—one of your true reformers, and his wife is not a whit behind him in this, or any other good work. They have done and are still doing a noble work for Jay county and the cause generally. They made the break alone, but good men and women have joined them, and God is moving along with them. Yours for the war, JOHN T. KIGGINS.

York and Adams County Meetings, Pa.

The sketch of a series of meetings in this part of Pennsylvania was published two weeks ago. A letter from Rev. J. P. Anthony describes them more fully. The first meeting was held in the United Brethren church at Franklintown, the second in Odd-fellows' Hall, York Sulphur Springs, the third in the United Brethren church at Center Mills. Rev. J. M. Bishop spoke each evening. The following is descriptive of the last evening's lecture:

"These secret orders multiply rapidly and many say there is no use trying to oppose them; they are too many and too strong. How slavery has fallen, though mighty in the land? The lecturer spoke of the way Rev. J. Blanchard was treated while lecturing against slavery in this State. Windows in the basement of the U. P. churches of Harrisburg and Carlisle were broken in. He had to flee from the old stone hotel in Chambersburg to save his life; was rotten-egged at Warrensburg, and only after a second attempt and the aid of Mr. Stevens he succeeded in Gettysburg. Where is slavery now? He then spoke of the anti-secrecy movement in the country, the National Association, the State Associations, a weekly paper expressly given to this subject with many others partially given to it; and more than twenty five lecturers. Sure the lion is being bearded, and this time we are going to cut the head off and end his roar.

The speaker said that he had been trying for a while to tree A. B. Grosh's (author of Odd-fellows' Manual) church relation, and lately had succeeded, and found him a Universalist minister.

Secrecy is a great man-trap. Persons in business are promised advantage by joining. Ministers taken in free, then they must recommend the order to others. The lodge and its officers with the manner of initiation were described at each meeting. At the close of this lecture a former Odd-fellow told the lecturer he was right in all the grips but one, and corrected him in that. The grranges were treated on at some length.

After Bro. Bishop concluded his lecture Rev. L. A. Wickey, chairman of the meeting, made some remarks on the granges. Thus ended the first fire in these counties. May the Master bless this seed. J. P. Anthony.

A Good Work in Prospect.

Bro. Nelson Callender writes, from Starruca, Pa., of a proposed campaign in Wayne county in that State:

We have got an appoinment for some lectures here by some of our home men of the North-east Pensylvanna Christian Association opposed to secret societies, namely, Elder. S. E. Miller and Mr. Raynor, a Presbyterian minister who has been discarded by his congregation because he circulated Cynosure tracts. The Odd-fellows have lately organized a lodge here, so we think we will hold some meetings to counteract them. The Masons are terribly exercised in mind in contemplation of our proposed anti-secret lectures, say they shall attend; and I hope they will, and if some of them do not get hit I shall be disappointed. I hope we shall get a political organization in our State and nation, as I am done voting for Masons, if I vote no more at all.

Yours for an untrammeled Gospel and a national government free from secret rings.

Correspondence.

More Testimony about Morgan.

Waverly, Iowa, March 16, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:—As you ask for correspondence from all parts of the country, I beg to be enrolled on your list. I have much to tell you, but will only relate at present the following conversation I had with a veteran of the cause of Christianity who lives here:

"Well, Father C——, you are getting pretty well along in years."

"Yes, I am now seventy years old."

"You used to live in New York in your younger days, did you not? and must then remember the Morgan affair."

"The Morgan murder? I think I do. I used to live in the village of Batavia, where he kept a sort of boarding house. Why, I boarded with him two weeks. I also knew Col. Miller well. I can tell you many things about those times, and for the reason that I know these things you may count me a life-long opposer of these evils."

"Then you believe Morgan told the truth."

"Yes, I do. He was an estimable man, and all who knew him could not doubt his truthfulness; and his family were beyond reproach. His wife was an amiable lady-like woman, and their children were well-behaved, quiet and obedient."

When the conversation turned on the finding of his body after he was murdered, he said: "The body was found and recognized by Mrs. Morgan after the Masons had tried to make it appear that it was the body of some other man. A man was found who even pretended to recognize it as that of his (the man's) father. But Mrs. Morgan found some marks and scars on his person fully convincing her of his identity."

I left him two numbers of the Cynosure, for which he was very grateful.

There is no use talking Masonry to such men as he.

Yours very truly, Waverly.

Ashore and Afloat.

York, Pa., Feb. 13, 1874,

Editor Cynosure:

I was brought up in the society of Friends, and am opposed to war, and all brutality; but during the Rebellion I served in the Pennsylvania militia and in the United States Navy, because I thought it to be my duty to do so after considering all the circumstances.

In my adventures as a warrior I saw the old beast at work often, and I will give you a few letters by way of variety, giving my war experience on land and sea.

I served part of my time on the gunboat Wissahickon, and part of it on the frigate Wabash. Both vessels belonged to the South Atlantic Blockading Squadron. The former vessel, a very good one, carrying five guns and costing the tax-payers about a quarter of a million dollars, was so badly damaged by drunken officers (all regular navy officers, I was told, are Masons,) that at the close of the war it was sold at $12.000. The S. A. Squadron was greatly demoralized by rum, tobacco and Freemasonry. There were many collisions between the vessels, many were run aground, and some were captured without a fight. The Wissahickon collided twice while I was on board. And I nearly lost my life several times while in the naval service because rum-sellers and the officers were so fond of each other.

When Sherman marched northward from Savannah, the Wissahickon with several other vessels and about 5000 troops on transports, were sent up Broad River from Port Royal to cooperate, but our officers run us aground as soon as they could, and we had to throw almost everything overboard to get clear. I have always thought the square and sheepskin had something to do with this affair; for I knew it to be a fact that some of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and a few of the crew were Freemasons. And it is certainly true that our vessel did as little as it well could to harm the rebels; I presume all well informed Anti-masons are of the opinion that Freemasonic got up the Rebellion and then did all they could to keep it up. No Anti-mason who served in our squadroon could have any doubts about it. When the anti-secret reform reaches the soldiers and sailors they will write you some startling letters. The Masons mysteries of the Rebellion will amaze the loyal citizens of the Republic when they are revealed.

Yours truly.
E. J. Chalfant.

Experience Meeting.

Rev. J. P. Logan, Opdyke, Ill.

After I had refused to attend the lodge for three years and six months, I received a notice to appear and give reason why I did not pay dues. During this three years and six months I had told the gentlemen of the order that I never would attend their meetings any more. Here follows a true copy of my reply writing to the summons:

At Home.
Richview, Ill., Dec. 20, 1869.

To the Lodge of A. F. A. M. of Richview, Ill., Respectfully:

Gentlemen:—I have been notified by you to appear this evening and give reason why I should not be suspended from the privileges of Masonry.

I answer in writing as follows briefly: 1st, I know no reason why I should not be suspended; 2d, I know no reason why I should not desire to be; 3d, I know, according to your law, I should be; 4th, I know that it is my desire to be suspended; 5th, Masonry has no charms for me; 6th, it trammels me in the narrow way that leads to heaven; the narrow way does not admit IT WITH ME. I can get to heaven very easy without it; easier, too! and so can YOU, MY FRIENDS; be careful to enter therein.

PROMISES.

I keep my obligations as a Mason because of my word, my integrity, and wish to be brought under no more obligations as a Mason. Also, I promise to treat Masons with common respect as men.

REQUESTS.

Suspend me and respect me as a man. Transmit a copy of this to neighboring lodges. Given in duplicate. J. B. Logan."

The above was received and caused indignation. What follows will be reported in the next.

P. S.—I wish the editor and readers of the Cynosure to understand that I commenced operations against Masonry at Richview, Washington Co., Ill., in the year 1869. I made some headway. I moved away from there to Webber Township, in Jefferson Co., Ill., last October; have spied out the ground and now am ready to operate and report, but will bring up the missing reports first.

O. Reynolds, Hammond, N. Y.—I am a Methodist class-leader, but expect ere long to be "cast out of the synagogue," just because I claim that all the workers of darkness are the children of darkness, and the devil leadeth them at his will. But the good Lord is with me and will take care of me.

The Question of Fellowship.

Rushsylvania, O.

Editor of the Cynosure:

A word for your "half column or so." In your issue of the 17th of February, you say "letters from some Methodist brethren have suggested a new topic of discussion," namely, "fellowship with secrecy." This may be new to some Christian denominations, but it is as old to others as their very existence. For example, the Reformed Presbyterian Church, (commonly called Covenaters; "the United Presbyterian Church," the "Secession Church," and the "United Brethern" never have knowingly allowed their pulpits to be desecrated with Freemasons, Odd-fellows, or such like, nor their communion tables to be defiled, or tainted, or polluted with the hands of men who sit weekly in secret conclaves with infidels, Mohammedans, Hindoos, Jews, American savages, etc., etc., (see "Webb's Monitor," page 18; Grosh's Odd-fellows Manual, page 277 and 280,) and in their organization positively exclude Christ and the Christian religion, (see Grosh's Manual, again, page 277; Odd-fellows' Digest, page 39.)

It always has been unaccountable to me to know how a Christian denomination could fellowship men who "leave" Christ and the Christian religion "at the door," when they enter into their dark lodges, guarded at the door with the tyler's sword, (see "Craftsman," page 104; also "Webb's Monitor," page 120) What need of a drawn sword to guard the door where men are engaged in honest business?

Now let me ask our Christian brethern who fellowship Freemasons, are you not, by so doing, giving countenance to the dark deeds of those who are identified with systems which rob the widow and her fatherless children of any share in the "funds which they had for years been aiding to accumulate?" (See "Grosh's Manual," page 193; also "Odd-fellows Constitution," page 50 and 51.) Again let me ask, is or was it any greater sin to fellowship Henry L. Valance, and his two comrades, who took Wm. Morgan out into the Niagara river, fastened weights to him with "strong cords," and threw him overboard. I ask would it be any greater sin to receive them into church fellowship, than to receive into fellow ship those who are sworn to uphold and conceal such dark deeds of horrid cruelty?"

A word from the Bible to all who have in any way been entangled in the coils of those dark systems which God hates: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18. H. GEORGE.

OUR MAIL.

N. Green, Clayville, N. Y., writes:

"I am bound to get all the subscribers I can. . . The grangers are taking them in at Waterville. When they get their eyes open, I suppose they can say with the greenhorn that they have not made much, but have learned something."

J. M. Shellebarger, Lettsville, Iowa, sets an example which we hope those who are transferred from fortnightly to the weekly list will follow; he writes:

"I am a subscriber to the fortnightly and as I will now get the weekly at the same rate, I have procured you a few new subscribers."

Robert Moore, Caldwell, O., writes:

"If I had the money to spare I would send you fifty dollars for books and papers for general distribution."

If persons who desire to have our principles planted in every part of the country, can find worthy men or women to act as colporters, and either advance a little money to give them a start, expecting them to return it after a time, or assist and encourage them in other ways, our country may in a few years be well informed on the subject of secret societies.

Rev. P. Fuller, Utica, Minn., renews his subscription and writes:

"I am in hopes to send you some names soon. I will write some for the paper."

We hope our readers from all parts of the country, from the British Possessions, Maine, Minnesota, and the territories on the north, through all the intervening parts of the country to Mississippi, Texas and California on the south and west, will send us whatever news of interest there is in their sections, whether encouraging or discouraging.

We want news first, of the progress of the Anti-masonic cause; second, of the secret society operations; third, religious or political news of a more general character. We wish these volunteer correspondents would write as often as once a month, but hope they will be sure to write as often as once in three months or four times a year if unable to do more.

Mrs. Carnes, Northville, Mich., sends a new subscription and writes:

"As my health was too poor to look for subscribers, I will make the Baptist minister at Walled Lake a present of the paper. I think he will read it and be interested in it."

John M. Stevenson, Washington, Ia., writes:

"I am very much pleased with the progress you are making and that the paper is going to be enlarged. I could not get along without it. I have been working a little in your behalf, and have succeeded in getting four new subscribers."

Mrs. Clink, Mehoopany, Pa., writes:

"God speed the right and hasten the day when parents and children will not be parted by the ruthless hand of Mr. Moneylove."

W. J. Knappen, of the same place, writes:

"It is hardly possible to find any to subscribe for the paper. But to me it is comforting and cheering. I find by it that good is being done in other places and I hope will soon be here. When the Cynosure comes out in its new form I mean to see what can be done then. I believe it will be the cheapest paper that is published. It is now according to its value and has been since I have been acquainted with it."

Geo. Surface, North Union, Ind., writes:

"I think I am doing all I can for the anti-secret cause. I intend to be a subscriber for the Cynosure as long as I live."

Thomas J. McLouth, Manchester, N. Y., writes:

"I started out in 1827 as an Antimason, and I have given my influence in opposition to all secret orders even since."

J. C. Halsted, Windsor, O., renews saying:

"To withhold from helping so glorious a cause would be a sin."

L. Ketchum, Spartansburg, Pa., writes:

"The Patrons of Husbandry have started a grange lodge here, and are drawing all the farmers and all others they can into it. We need light for the people here, and I think J. P. Stoddard is the man to give the farmers the true character of the grange, as well as of all other secret orders."

Mr. Stoddard is to deliver lectures at Spartansburg on his way to New York.

J. Williams, Majority Point, Ill., writes:

"As soon as I receive a copy of the enlarged weekly edition, I intend to spend a few days canvassing for subscribers. I am satisfied if every family in this country would read the Cynosure for only three months, the Masonic dragon would fall to rise no more. All the people need is light. May God bless the noble and heroic efforts of the Cynosure."

Forty Years Ago.

What Freemasonry is not.

SOLOMON SOUTHWICK, 1828.

So much has been written and said upon this subject, that I have found it difficult if not impossible, to strike out anything new. To have undertaken to view it in all its different aspects of light and shade; to have traced the history of the rise and progress of Freemasonry alone, with its pretentions its aims, its immoral and irreligious rites and obligations, and its inevitable and baneful tendency to political as well as moral turpitude and corruption, would have required a volume. There are two or three points, however, which deserve to be considered seriously by those of us who intend to secede from the Masonic corps. We shall at least ask the two-fold question: Why we withdraw from the institution; and how we absolve ourselves from the obligations we have taken to support it?

To the first proposition involved in this question, the obvious answer is: Because we have found by experience that Freemasonry is not what it pretends to be.

It is not a literary institution; for it it has never been known to promote the interests of literature, unless we admit the clumsy works of some of its professed oracles and panegyrists, such incoherent essays and incongruous compilations, for example, as Webb's Monitor, Town's Speculative Masonry, and others of similar cast, to be literary works, a concession I am not prepared to make. A Clinton and a Smith, and perhaps several others, have indeed written ingenious and eloquent orations for some of its holidays. But when we read these we perceive too clearly for the honor of the order, that their literary excellence is not either from the dignity or utility of the subject; that it is not literature enriched or ornamented by Freemasonry, but Freemasonry puffed by the good nature, and striding vainly on the stilts of literature. And while we admire the ingenuity, as well as the excessive generosity of the orators, in turning a "day of small things" into a day of fanciful great ones; we perceive no reason to laud Masonry itself as a literary institution, or even as a handmaid of literature.

It is not a scientific instiuition; for there is no branch of science taught in its secret retreats. "I have neither seen nor heard," says an elegant anonymous author, "in all my acquaintance with the lodges, the explanation, or illustration, of the least principle of science." The author I have quoted means real science, and this is what I mean. I shall not deny that such science is taught in the lodges, as well as out of them, by the learned noodles of the order, as the inspired author of the Proverbs alludes to, when he says, "A wicked man winketh with his eye, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers!" Ingenious monkeys and learned pigs, to say nothing of the Grecian dog Apollo, and his canine rivals, Toby and Minetto, are in this respect real adepts in Masonic science.

It is not a religious institution. For it not only does not lay claim to any religion, except it be that very convenient, latitudinarian, anything or nothing system, called the religion of nature, and which may be interpreted in as many ways as there are flowers in the field, or trees in the forest, birds in the air, or fishes in the sea. Freemasonry, I repeat it, prides herself on the exclusion of all religions, saving this natural theology, which, (though it be not wholly unfounded,) the dreams of visionaries, and sophistry of skepticism combined, have wrought into a fanciful theory, well calculated to answer their purpotes; but practically speaking, ruinous in its effects upon the best temporal interests; and chilling, if not blighting the immortal hopes of mankind.

It is not a moral institution; for too many of its oaths, its rites, and ceremonies are blasphemous and indecent, and consequently immoral in the highest degree.

It is not a delicate institution. One of its most strenuous advocates, I mean Elder Bradley, says, "Our institution, founded on the fitness of things for men, cannot admit the delicacy of female nature to suffer the preparatory and scutinizing eye of examination, necessary for initiation into any one important degree in Masonry." The honest parson has indeed made a queer confession for the credit of the order. But sigh not, my fair country-women, that you cannot enter the temple of Masonic mummery and quackery, rather rejoice that you are excluded. The rule which denies you admittance is an act of homage to your virtues, and of self-condemnation to its authors. Whenever you shall have lost the mildness and the modesty of woman; whenever you shall have become recreant to all that constitutes the purity, the beauty, and the dignity of your sex, then may we look for you, not in the social and domestic circle, in your character of ministering angels to man's infirmity, sorrow, or joy; not in the holy sanctuaries of religion, paying due homage at the altars of your God and Redeemer; but amid the orgies of a Masonic lodge or a chapel, in the characters of demons or female furies, exciting conspirators, kidnappers and murderers, to deeds of treachery, of vengeance and of blood!

It is not a charitable institution, in the true meaning and spirit of charity; for its funds are not only dissipated in building stately but useless temples, but they are squandered often in the most profligate manner, for the benefit of unprincipled individuals; and the very small portion, scarcely equal to the "widow's mite," which goes to relieve real distress, is confined exclusively to its own members.

It is not a patrictic institution; for it merges the love of country in its attachment to the craft. The principle of patriotism dictates the good of the whole, the principle of Masonry, that of a part only.

It is not a republican institution; for its knights, kings, high priests, and other dignitaries more extravagantly ridiculous in this age and clime, are at war with the simplicity of manners, and equality of rights, which distinguish a republican government, and are not to be safely tolerated among a free people.

It is not a free institution, in any sense of the term. For its members are as much enthralled by their infamous obligations, as an Algerine galley slave, or a Turkish mute.

It is not a mechanical institution; for whatever pretentions it may have formerly had, to any operative mechanical pursuit, have long since been swallowed up, and lost sight of in its speculative quackery.

It is not an industrious institution. A medical professor, speaking from experience, has declared Masonic lodges the genuine academies of tippling.

It is not an honorable institution; for its cunning chiefs and leaders, as I know from my own personal and dearly bought experience, swindle the young and artless out of their money, under false pretenses, and are justly liable to indictment under the statute applicable to such cases of fraud.

It is not a lawful institution; for its obligations are diabolically at war with the laws both of God and our country.

These are sufficient reasons to justify any rational man in withdrawing from it, silently and privately, or loudly and publicly renouncing and denouncing it.

LESSON XVII.—APRIL 26, 1874.—THE TABERNACLE SET UP.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—EX. xl. 17-30. Commit 17-23; Primary Verse 21.

17 And it came to pass in the first month in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof and reared up his pillars.

19. And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the Lord commanded Moses.

20 And he took and put the testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the mercy-seat above upon the ark.

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and set up the vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle northward, without the vail.

23 And he set the bread in order upon it before the Lord; as the Lord had commanded Moses.

24. And he put the candlestick in the tent of the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward.

25 And he lighted the lamps before the Lord: as the Lord commanded Moses.

26 And he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation before the vail:

27 And he burnt sweet incense thereon; as the Lord commanded Moses.

28 And he set up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle.

29 And he put the altar of burnt offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and offered upon it the burnt offering and the meat offering; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 And he set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash withal.

Take Your Class to Church.

Faithful teachers can do very much to establish their pupils in a habit of church-going, and there is danger that by their indifference in regard to it they may do something to confirm them in their neglect of the sanctuary. If teachers manifest a lively interest in seeing their pupils regular in their attendance upon public worship, if they convince them that they regard it as a matter of vital importance, their influence will be felt and it will bear fruit.

Some successful expedients for securing this end have been adopted by superintendents. A cotemporary states that "a superentendent in New York is accustomed to ask those who do not intend to go to church to remain after the school is dismissed, and give him the reason." It is said that William Reynolds, of Peoria, Ill., asks the scholars who have attended church in the morning to raise their hands, and that this plan has increased the church attendance from his school, within a few weeks, fifty per cent. Some other superintendents might not be able to carry out this plan as successfully as Mr. Reynolds, but every faithful superintendent and teacher can exert an influence in this direction. If they will bear in mind, then, that the public preaching of the cross is God's chosen instrumentality for saving sinners, and consider that their pupils, a class of them at least, may be established in a habit of church-going or confirmed in the neglect of the sanctuary, as they are faithful or unfaithful to their trust, this influence will be more extensively exerted. We can hardly overestimate the importance of this part of a teacher's work.—Ex.

—When President Harrison was leaving home for Washington, he was advised to get a big dog to keep the boys from stealing his fruit. The President replied: "I would sooner get a Sunday-school teacher to tell the boys better than to steal. Find the boys a teacher, and I will give them apples enough."

Home and Health Hints.

Eggs Cooked Hygenically.

Hard boiled eggs have always been considered more difficult of digestion than soft boiled ones. The reason is this: the white of an egg is almost pure albumen. Now albumen coagulates with heat, and is not so readily acted upon by the gastric juice; so that much of it passes from the stomach undigested. Persons with vigorous digestion may manage a hard boiled egg so as to extract most of the nourishment from it, if it be well masticated and mixed with other food. The yolk of the eggs, however, is not rendered worse by hard boiling. Eggs boiled just four minutes have the white part in a partly flocculent condition, more easily digested, and not so soft as to be offensive to any one. An egg may be cooked in water at a temperature of about 165° Fahrenheit for fifteen minutes and leave the yolk well cooked, but the white will not be rendered tough and hard to digest. Though more troublesome, it is a good way to cook an egg to render it easy of digestion as well as palatable. Persons whose palates will not tolerate a soft boiled egg should have them poached and dropped on toast.—Hall's Journal.

APPLE FRUIT CAKE.—Two cups dried apples, soaked over night in warm water. Chop fine, simmer two hours in two cups molasses, add one cup sugar, half cup sour cream, half cup sour milk, half cup butter (in the absence of the cream increase the butter one-half), two eggs, one teaspoonful cream-of-tartar, one and one-half teaspoonsful of soda, spice to suit. This will make two loaves.

TO PREVENT MOTHS' RAVAGES.—Hemp, when the blossoms are just opened, is an infallible preservative of textile fabrics and furs against the attacks of moths. The stalk, with leaves and flowers, is cut when blooming (about July), and dried in the shade. It is said to preserve its properties for several years.

APPLE PIE.—Peel tart apples, stew them, strain them through a net strainer, season them while hot with butter or cream, flavor with nutmeg and put them on a crust that has been baked on a pie plate. Always have sweet milk to drink with apple pie.

CUP CAKE.—Five cups of flour, mixed with three tablespoonsful of baking powder, one cup and a half of butter, one cup and a half of milk, three eggs, nutmeg or lemon juice. Add currants if you wish.

POISONOUS SYRUP.—The Western Rural lately called the attention of its readers to the vile character of much of the molasses in use. Much of this article is now made from sulphuric acid and rags. A simple test is tea. If the molasses turn tea black, it forms strong ground for believing it to be unfit for use. It may even be a dangerous poison.

The Journal of the Farm offers a few good suggestions upon kitchens. It recommends that the housewife, instead of wearing out her muscle and her temper scrubbing floors, should resort to the simple expedient of painting. All that is necessary is two quarts of oil, three pounds of ochre and one pint of japan, which will paint a floor twelve by eighteen feet. The time taken to clean a painted floor, and the labor saved, are equal to ten times the cost. The writer also suggests another convenience, viz: A good sized sink, five or six feet leng by two and a half wide at the back; at the top of this sink should be a shelf for lamps, vases, etc., under it a place for ironware, and at the ends two pumps—one for hard and the other for soft water.

Remedy for Feverishness.

When persons are feverish and thirsty beyond what is natural, indicated in some cases by a metallic taste in the mouth, one of the best "coolers" is to take a lemon, cut off the top, sprinkle over it some loaf-sugar, working it down into the lemon with a spoon, and then suck it slowly. Invalids with feverishness may take two or three lemons a day in this manner with marked benefit, manifested by a sense of coolness, comfort and invigoration. A lemon or two thus taken at "tea-time" is for some an entire substitute for the ordinary supper of summer, or would give many a man a comfortable night's sleep and an appetite for breakfast to which they are strangers, who will have their cup of tea, or supper of "relish," and cakes, and berries, and cream.

Farm and Garden.

Cabbage Plants.

If you have not a hot bed in which to raise these, a good substitute is a good sized box about eight inches deep filled with rich soil, in which sow the the seeds early and keep the soil moist and in a warm, light room as near a window as possible. Do not transplant them till the plants are strong and hardy, and not till the ground is warm enough to plant corn and then just before or after a shower.

Water Melons.

Be sure that you have good seed, i. e., from a large ripe melon. Take a good sized box ten or twelve inches deep and fill it half full of good manure, cover this with tough sod (grass side down) from a rich soil. The seeds may be put in with a knife at least one inch and a half apart. Treat them the same as cabbage plants, except that when the plant gets strong and hardy the transplanting is done by cutting out as large a piece of the sod as possible with the plant. Set them out in heavily manured warm rich soil, one in a place at least four feet apart. Enormous squashes and cucumbers may be raised in the same way, and when strong vigorous plants are set out early they often get the start of bugs completely.

Give the Poultry Exercise.

Until the garden is planted, fowls should have full liberty to range therein. In the spring, especially, they are indefatigable hunters of insects, and their natural instinct should not be curbed in this direction whenever they will not do positive injury to the plants, and this is only for about three months after the garden is planted. For this reason, the garden ought always to be fenced, so that fowls may have the range of the farm.

When there is danger of their depredating upon neighboring places, they may be let out an hour or two before sundown, the time being then so short before roosting time that they will neither wander far or scratch to any considerable extent.

Advantage should be taken of the first warm weather to thoroughly clean the poultry house, and the wash for such portions as are whitewashed should have a portion of carbolic acid mixed in it, since it not only kills vermin, but also tends to prevent their gathering. —Western Rural.

Planting a Strawberry Bed.

No farm garden should be without an ample strawberry bed, since it is much cheaper to cultivate them than to depend upon the wild fruit for the table. One of the great mistakes in this culture is in planting the vines in beds, and too closely together. Three feet apart between the rows, and twelve inches apart in the rows, is near enough together. If the runners are kept carefully cut the stools of plants will entirely fill the rows, and nearly the spaces between the rows, by the autumn of the first season.

The plants should be planted as early in the spring as the soil will admit working, leaving only the leaves and central bud exposed. Five hundred plants will give an ample supply of fruit for a large family, and, if Wilson's Albany is selected, you may be assured of uniform crops of fair fruit, if kept clean and covered with mulch during winter. In the spring let the beds retain the mulch as long as possible, at least until the plants show signs of growing beneath. Then remove from over the plants, leaving the mulch intact between the rows.—W. Rural.

MASONRY SUBVERTING THE REPUBLIC.

In another part of this paper will be found the Chicago Tribune's account of the intended laying of the corner-stone of the new United States Custom House in Chicago, by Freemasons. Of all sects, parties, organizations, orders, secret or open, a Freemason's lodge is the most unfit to put its insignia on a United States public building; and the proposal of the lodge to practice its heathen ritual, and place its anti-Christian date on the corner-stone of our new Custom House, is a piece of impudence and effrontery which has seldom been equalled and never surpassed.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois laid the corner-stone of our new State House at Springfield, and it was resented as an insult to the State. The result was, the stone was taken out of the wall, and buried in the earth out of sight. A similar attempt to lay the corner-stone of the new State House at Albany, N. Y., was resisted by leading New York papers and ignominiously failed; the stone being laid by the Germans. A similar attempt and failure, partial, or entire, occurred in the State of Iowa; and the example of our State was cited by those who resisted that profanation.

That a United States Secretary at Washington, should attempt to force a national recognition of the lodge upon the people of Chicago and the North-west, argues great boldness or ignorence, or both; since the attempt has been so unmistakably condemned by the popular voice. There are about half a million of Freemasons, one-eighth part of the people of the United States. By what right or show of propriety this secret sect puts itself forward to represent forty millions of people in this country, in laying the corner-stones of its public buildings, is beyond the possibility of a guess. The ceremony is religious; consisting in part of prayer to the god of the lodge; but it is not pretended that the religion is that of the Bible; or the god prayed to, the God of revelation. And as a civic ceremony it is more impudent and revolting still, as its chief lexicon (Mackey,) declares, "The government of a Grand Lodge is therefore completely despotic." It is heathenism insulting Christianity, and despotism insulting liberty. Every voter and every voter's wife and child should be moved to their heart's center by this attempt.

Dr. Post of St. Louis, in his address to the Pilgrim Memorial Convention in Farwell Hall, before the fire, referred to the lodge as setting up the hollow forms and titles of king-craft and priest-craft, that those hated foes of humanity might creep back into their empty shells. Let Chicago be draped in black if this infamy is attempted.

IS PROF. SWING A HERETIC?

There is a class of preachers now, as in all past ages, whose first principle is hearers. Voltaire said to a friend, "One thing is to be borne in mind: whatever is true or false, I must have readers." This was the one chief end of Bennett's New York Herald, and is still of its humbler imitations. These traffickers look on religion and things sacred, as fish for their net, and though their methods are diverse, their spirit is one, and that not the spirit of Christ. A minister who has intelligence enough to keep inside the dead line which separates hurtful error from "damnable heresy;" who will alarm Christians by paradox and double-meanings; select those parts of Gospel truth which the world has no objection to, and omit those which it hates; and slur the receivers of plain Bible truth as bigots and narrow-minded; who will speak of theology "as it once was," as though he had a new edition,—a man with really moderate parts may contrive by a few such simple tricks, to do a large business on a small capital. If John Stuart Mill had not been an atheist he would hardly have been heard of beyond his native country; but the god of this world will praise the champions of error by the mouths of the millions.

We fear David Swing, of Chicago, is a man of this class; a class which we wish was extinct; who preach so that truth itself loses its sacredness in their lips, because uttered by inspiration of the god of this world.

Dr. Patton, of The Interior, and Professor of Theology, has prosecuted Mr. Swing before his Presbytery and the case is attracting public attention to the two men. Unless there is more prayer and more of the Spirit of Christ than usually falls to the lot of such trials, we fear little good will come of it. It will be difficult to prove a man a heretic whose chief error lies in what he does not teach, and who, by originality and the affectation of it, makes the impression that the truths of the Bible are not what serious persons have supposed them to mean. "Whoever," says a reply to Junius "cries out against established order, will always find abettors. Those who know what he means, commonly sympathize in his objects; and those who do not know what he means, hope he means rebellion."

REV. E. N. KIRK, D. D.

The American press generally laments the death and honors the memory of Dr. Kirk. He was of Presbyterian parentage; graduate of Princeton College and Theological Seminary; pastor in Albany; a successful and eloquent revivalist; founder of an American chapel in Paris; an early friend of ex-President Finney, and an advocate of reforms. His late pastorate was that of the aristocratic Mt. Vernon Church, Boston.

He loathed Freemasonry, and as chairman of the publishing committee of the American Tract Society, Boston; he revised and advocated the publication of a tract on secret societies. The tract was printed and all but two of the committee, Edward S. Rand and Deacon Julius Palmer, were for its publication. These two gentlemen hesitating, I. P. Warren, secretary of the Society, opened correspondence with Theodore Cuyler and other prominent clergymen on the propriety of its publication. Mr. Cuyler, who had joined three secret societies, advised strongly against the tract, and it was never published in Boston; but revised and enlarged by Dr. H. M. Storrs, now chief secretary of the Am. Home Missionary Society. who was then a pastor in Cincinnati, it was issued in that city.

Dr. Kirk, though a reformer, had not the nerve or steadfastness of purpose to resist the insidious and relentness power of the lodge; he gave way to the hard, over-bearing influence of A. H. Quint and H. M. Dexter; and to-day the Congregationalism of Boston stands timid and silent before a power which the mass of its members and ministers loathe and dread. If another generation should pass and the old men and women die who remember the Morgan discussions, and no stand be made in that city against the lodge, the religion of Boston will cower before Freemasonry, as that of the city of Rome did before the Pope, before the advent of Victor Immanuel and the union of Italy.

Now, as of old, the pleading voice of God is heard: "Who will rise up for me against the evil doers? Who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?"

B. A. GROSH'S DEFENSE OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

We commenced a review of this in the last Cynosure, under the caption of "Coercion of Conscience." It is more of an attack upon Anti-masonic churches than a defense of Odd-fellowship. An attack subtle and venemous, like the serpent's temptation in Eden. In order to produce disaffection and stir up mutiny, that he may disintegrate and ruin the church, he assumes a bland and friendly spirit; cautiously suggesting to the one he seeks to fire with wrath and rebellion, that he would by no means advise to a violation of his church covenant, or the least disrespect to its rules or discipline. If he were a member of a bigoted and tyrannical church he would obey its rules so long as he remained a member. He would agitate so long as hope of success remained for the repeal of these uncharitable and bigoted rules of non-fellowship with fraternal orders; and failing in this he would seek in a regular manner a change of his church relation by uniting with a more liberal and Christ-like communion. To be a member of the lodge and of a church whose narrow bigotry forbids such two-fold membership would be embarrassing and unpleasant to both parties. "I would not advise it," he says. Don't ask us to receive you while your church rule binds you, for our liberality will not permit us even to consider so base a reason for rejecting a worthy applicant. But if you are not one of those enslaved bigots who consider church anthemas equivalent to eternal damnation; if you dare think for yourself even on subjects forbidden by your church, you can do one of two things, in all charity and wisdom: put the uncharitable rule or your charitable self out of the church that maintains such bigoted tyranny.

Such is the spirit of his appeal. What saintly blandness and candor mixed with deadly venom! Professed charity striking with absolutely murderous intent. Were Paul present witnessing such an attempt to poison the minds of the disciples and turn them away from true faith, and its primative exclusiveness of holy fellowship, we cannot doubt he would reply as he did to Elymas, "O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord." Just so of the first tempter, "Yea, hath God said ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden;" as much as to say, Is not that a mistake? God could not be so unreasonable! How bland and friendly to both parties! But the vemomous insinuation that God was illiberal, yea, tyrannical, in imposing a needless and mean restraint upon her liberty aroused the first motions of sin in the hitherto innocent and happy mother of our race. Instantly the tempter perceiving his advantage follows up the direful impression by a bold accusation against the law and its author: "God doth know that ye shall not surely die," but be as gods as soon as you have eaten. By that bold wickedness the revolt from God was forced, and sin brought in—the fount of death and all our woe.

In the same subtlety and by similar means this high priest of Baal seeks to seduce men from the supreme and sole worship of Christ, and to supercede his worship and his church by the mystic institution and deistic rites of Odd-fellowship. He shows an evident determination to rule or ruin the churches which dare to oppose Odd-fellowship, and yet boasts unequalled liberality. He insists that the churches shall entertain the same opinion of Odd-fellowship that he does and adopt his rule of fellowship instead of Christ's commands to be separate and have no fellowship with idolaters or with any unfruitful works of darkness; and yet prates against ecclesiastical tyranny while seeking to exercise as much of it as the devil himself would desire.

Some one may yet ask, Why is it not as bigoted and tyrannical for the church to prescribe rules of fellowship to Odd-fellows as for Odd-fellows to dictate rules to the church? We answer, simply because one is from heaven, the other is from men. One ascertains Christ's law of holiness and abides by it, the other makes laws agreeable to the carnal mind and seeks to impose them upon the children of God.

ODD-FELLOWS' OBLIGATIONS OATHS.

Mr. Grosh makes a bitter complaint against Anti-masons, because they insist that Odd-fellows are oath-bound; as if by so doing we make them all liars; and he makes a laborious attempt to disprove what we assert, viz., that their obligations are oaths. And how does he prove this? First he says:—

"'The Odd-fellows' Manual' (ch. 2. § 2) declares that 'there is not a single obligation administered among us inconsistent with any duty we owe to self, family, country, mankind, or to our Creator. All the aid we are to render each other is and must be within the limits of strict humanity and patriotism, of morality and religion. . . . . We are not, therefore, an oath-bound institution, nor are our obligations oaths.'"

How the assertion that their oaths do not require anything immoral or evil proves that they are not oaths, we are utterly unable to perceive. Nor yet how a mere assertion of a thing is any proof at all.

His next argument is that this declaration of the Manual "has been publicly repeated hundreds of times by writers and speakers of the highest character," etc. Yes, but the trouble is, the statement is not proof, neither does it cover the point in dispute, viz., that the obligations taken by Odd-fellows in their lodges are oaths; and such a statement may be repeated ten million times, and conveying no more proof on the disputed point in the beginning would acquire none by repetition. It would still have no application to the point in hand.

But if these gentlemen not only assert that the obligations of Odd-fellowship require no evil, but with one voice declare that these obligations are not oaths, what then! Why this would not be testimony as to a fact, but merely the assertion of an opinion. The opinion may be correct, and it may be incorrect. Men are quite liable to entertain mistaken opinions. And if these obligations are not oaths and require nothing wrong, and this is so material a point, why does not Mr. Grosh produce the obligations themselves? Having them every one can form his own opinion, without troubling Mr. Grosh or hundreds of clerical, or even Quaker Odd-fellows, as to whether these obligations really are or are not oaths. No doubt many Odd-fellows are honestly of the opinion that their obligations are not oaths. Nevertheless, we have not a doubt that this is wholly a mistaken opinion. For although Mr. Grosh and his confreres are determined we shall allow them to think and judge for us in this matter, there have been and still are other Odd-fellows who are willing to afford us the opportunity to "think and determine for ourselves even, on this matter which is forbidden by their" lodge. And these have given us the precise words of the various obligations of Odd-fellowship and the circumstances in which they are taken, and having this opportunity to think for ourselves we are clearly of the opinion that they are oaths to all intents and purposes. And in holding and proclaiming this opinion we are not charging Odd-fellows with lying or dishonesty, as Mr. G. claims, because he holds an opposite opinion. No reasonable man will take offense at another for entertaining and expressing an opinion different from his own. We have long held and asserted a different opinion from that generally expressed by Odd-fellows on the point in question, and that we must continue to do until they give us the facts and the reasons upon which they found their opinions, and those reasons and facts shall approve themselves to our judgment as of sufficient weight to overcome those on which we have founded our opinion.

Dr. Willis, of Harvard, Mass., whose credibility is abundantly vouched for and whose disclosures have been repeatedly confirmed by other Odd-fellows, has given us the first seven covenants of Odd-fellowship. Five of the seven commence with a solemn appeal to Almighty God. We quote one as a fair sample of the others:—

OBLIGATION OF THE DEGREE OF THE COVENANT.

"I, —— ——, in the presence of Almighty God and the members of the covenant degree of this order assembled, most solemnly promise, declare and say that I will never divulge or betray the secrets of the degree about to be entrusted to my keeping. I will not write them, or cause them to be written or printed or engraved in any manner or form whatever; and I pledge my sacred honor, that I will to the best of my knowledge and full extent of my power, perform all the duties I am therein instructed to do."

Part 2. "I, —— ——. do solmenly pledge myself to help and support my afflicted, distressed, or persecuted brother, and warn him of approaching danger, whether it be from his own imprudence, or from the evil designs of others, or from some accidental cause. I will point out his advantage and interest, if it should be in my power so to do. I will protect his property, succor his wife and family, defend his character and save his life and limbs should opportunity offer. And I do acknowledge myself solmnly bound in an especial covenant with all brothers who can and do prove themselves such."

To give a more perfect view of the obligations of the order as a whole, I remark in passing that the pledge of secrecy in the white, in the blue, and in the scarlet degrees binds the candidate in the words, "I will conceal and never reveal the secrets," etc., and that the initiatory obligation binds him to abide by the laws of the order as the covenant degree binds him to perform all duties taught in the lodge, making the lodge and not God his law-giver.

Now then, we are prepared to say that if a solemn appeal to Almighty God is what makes an oath differ from "yea, yea and nay, nay," and gives the oath effect and power which nobody can deny, then these obligations are oaths. With the words of the obligation before him one man's opinion is as good as another's, as to whether it is or is not an oath. The Odd-fellows may assert that they are not oaths, and that may be their opinion. But we do not make them liars, nor treat them with disrespect when we persist in confidently believing and declaring it an entirely mistaken opinion. Certainly the nature of this obligation is such as to constitute the I. O. O. F. just what we understand by an oath-bound secret society. As much and as clearly so as Freemasonry or any other oath-bound secret order whatever.

"Pleading for Baal."—Under this head, the Rev. James Mathews, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in the Free Methodist, makes some sharp points on those who plead for such amusements as are a sort of worship paid to the "god of this world." There is, indeed, something very revolting in the ministers of the gospel of Him who said, "Because I have called you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you," pleading for worldly amusements; and blaming the advocates of self-denial, as though Christ had not required it.

"Of all reformers with whom earth is cursed,
Those who reform reformers are the worst."

Burning the Dead.—A meeting was lately held in New York city by advocates of "cremation" or burning the dead, and the Chicago Tribune for April 4th contained an article in favor of this method of disposing of our departed friends. One of the speakers at the New York meeting made a most revolting speech in favor not only of burning corpses but of scattering the ashes over the fields, thus turning the ashes of our statesmen, divines, and relatives into a common fertilizer. The only thing it seems necessary to say about this plan is, that it is heathenish in origin, unnecessary in practice, and disgusting in statement and advocacy.

Napoleon IV.—A meeting was lately held at Chiselhurst looking toward the re-establishment of Bonapartist rule in France. Several thousand Frenchmen were present, among them sixty-five of the eighty-seven prefects under the Empire, and many former members of the legislative body.

In France the Bonapartist faction are not idle, and it need not surprise any one if a few months witness the erection of the old throne in this unhappy land. It has no homes, and, as said the first Napoleon, too few mothers. Twenty thousand divorces in a single year in Paris, and hundreds of Masonic lodges, with the deep stains of martyr blood on every corner of the kingdom, or republic, or what-is-it; these are the fearful factors that he must arrange who solves the problem: Who can rule France, the nation without a conscience?

NOTES.

—Inquiries in regard to reduced railroad fare to Syracuse will be answered when something more definite is received from the railroad authorities. An effort to secure this end is being made.

—A. B. Grosh, who fills so large a position in the literature and offices of Odd-fellowship and the grange, and latterly also in these columns, appears to be a Universalist in religious sentiment.

—The Baptist friends of the reform, who were sorely disappointed with the change that closed their denominational organs to their utterances against the lodge, will be rejoiced that the Baptist Weekly has opened a department for free discussion in which correspondents only are responsible for their opinions.

—Sunday-school students will find this suggestion of Mr. Rodgers, an Englishman who lately visited Chicago, of great help in preparing for the lesson of April 26th:

"Those who would understand the literal meaning of the Tabernacle should read through the books of Moses, beginning at the twenty-fifth chapter of Exodus. Those who would understand the literal and typical meaning, and would feel the spiritual application of these services, should read those books along with the Epistle to the Hebrews."

Laying the Custom-House Corner-Stone.

Although the public mind has had enough in the way of new and remarkable buildings to give its architectural taste a continual feast, yet it has not lost sight of the fact that the Custom-House, when it rises above the fence and grows so as to overtop its surrounding rivals, will be the chief d'oeuvre of all the buildings in this city.

The gratifying news that this coming building is almost ready for the formal ceremony of laying the corner-stone, will be received with pleasure. It is the design to make the event the occasion of a general celebration, and with this end in view a meeting of prominent citizens was called at the office of Superintendent Rankin, who has charge of the new Custom-House, at 3 p. m. yesterday, to take into consideration the arrangement of a programme for the celebration of the laying of the corner-stone on the 24th of next June. A number of government officials and other distinguished gentlemen were present, among whom were the Hon. N. B. Judd, District Attorney Glover, Gen. McArthur, Geo. M. How, President of Board of Trade, United States Commissioner Phil. A. Hoyne, John B. Drake, B. H. Campbell, DeWit C. Cregier, and W. H. Bradley. Gen. McArthur called the meeting to order, and stated that the object of the gathering was to get an expression from the gentlemen present as to the best plan to observe the occasion appropriately. The Masonic fraternity had expressed a willingness to take charge of the ceremonies, and he did not know but the public generally would wish to participate in the celebration, whatever it might be. He called for the opinion of those present.

Mr. Rankin then read the following letter:

James C. Rankin, Superintendent Custom-House, Chicago:

Sir: Inclosed please find a copy of a letter from the Grand Master of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of Illinois in regard to laying the corner-stone of the building under your charge, which he desires should take place the 24th of June next, together with a copy of my reply thereto, from which you will see that the Secretary has authorized the laying of the corner-stone of the building with Masonic ceremonies.

You will please confer with the proper authorities of the Masonic fraternity and make the necessary arrangements for the laying of the stone in question, bearing in mind that there is no authority under law to expend any money for this purpose. Very respectfully, A. B. Mullett, Inspecting Architect.

After some desultory talk, Mr. Judd arose and said that, in his opinion, the better way to proceed would be to appoint a committee to prepare a general programme of arrangements, leaving it to the Committee to decide what shall be done and to arrange for it. He suggested the following gentlemen: "For Chairman, Mr. How; members, Mr. Drake, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Leiter, Mr. Cregier, Mr. Olsten and Gen. McArthur.

Mr. Cregier made a motion that a committee be appointed as named, with this amendment, that they have the power to add to their number if required. The motion prevailed. Mr. Judd wished to know of Mr. Cregier how far the Masonic fraternity had been notified of the intended ceremonies, if at all. Mr. Cregier replied that they had not been notified, and it would be necessary to give notice at once, as it was in contemplation by the Masters of the Grand Lodge to present some elaborate, characteristic features of their order, in the way of ceremonials, and, in order to do this properly, the time given for preparation must be as great as possible. An objection was made to bringing in the city authorities to act with the committee. It was thought they could manage the matter alone.

The gentlemen present then informally expressed a unanimous suggestion to be acted upon by the committee, that the Masonic fraternity be invited to take charge of the ceremonies of laying the corner-stone. As the representative of the order, [Past] Grand Master Dewitt C. Cregier, was present, the invitation may be considered accepted and the question settled. The committee then desiring to go into a secret session on ways and means, the other gentlemen and the reporters withdrew. The programme to be observed will be made public as soon as it is determined upon.

The Home Circle.

The Price of Truth.

Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walk of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

Bought in the market at the current price,
Bred of the smile, the jest, perchance the bowl;
It tells no tale of daring or of worth,
Nor pierces e'en the surface of the soul.

Great truths are hardly won. Not formed by chance,
Nor wafted on the breath of summer dream;
But grasped in the great struggles of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream.

Not in the general mart, 'mid corn and wine:
Not in the merchandise of gold and gems;
Not in the world's gay hall of midnight mirth;
Not 'mid the blaze of regal diadems.

But in the day of conflict, fear, and grief,
When the strong hand of God, put forth in might,
Plows up the subsoil of the stagnant heart,
And brings the imprisoned truth-seed to the light.

Wrung from the troubled spirit, in hard hours
Of weakness, solitude, perchance of pain;
Truth springs, like harvest, from the well-plowed field,
And the soul feels it has not wept in vain.

Bonar.

Florida in March.

FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF A LADY PHYSICIAN.

We arrived in this sunny land the 25th of February. Most of the time we have had our windows open through the day; but as the sun sinks, dampness rises from every nook, and why this atmosphere is called good for consumptives is past my comprehension.

We are at Jacksonville, the largest railroad town in Florida, the population being nearly 7,000. The city extends along the two sides of the St. John's River and covers a large area. Years ago it was quite burned down; very few houses were here three years ago. The orange trees are full of ripe fruit and the second blossoming has just commenced. It would surprise you to see the trees of every kind well leaved out, and the earth quite bare of grass with very few flowers This is the month for high winds, and more or less cold days, yet the gardens are expected to bloom also. The whip-poor-wills sing quite plaintively and mocking birds can be bought here for $2.50. But the jarring of the cars in transporting them north seems to injure their singing. There is quite a passion exhibited here to get them and young alligators for pets. The mocking birds will live on one potato and one boiled egg for two days, while the alligator will exist six months without any food. The young ones are six inches in length and upwards. The old ones have ferocious jaws, wavy in outline so as to hold their prey more securely. Their use has never been made known, I believe. They generally manage to get away if surprised. Boatmen do not fear them.

Hotel expenses are high here. The place is quite a resort for travelers and invalids. I attended the Presbyterian church on Sabbath. The house was full. Most of the congregation had an ominous cough and marked debility.

The St. John's River flows north and a party of us contracted for a yacht to take us to the mouth of the river, that besides a pleasant ride we might see the broad Atlantic Ocean. It was such a luxury. Such a sense of speed, yet not a jar or quiver. I can understand why seamen should like ship life. In any land conveyance, or on a steamboat, you are consious of motion and power; but all under the supervision of skillful men whose cunning brains you can fathom. But a sailboat with a stiff breeze and a smooth sea is one of those irresistible things you cannot fathom.

There were about sixteen of us in the company. It was difficult to get started from the dock. Soon she began to dip water, and a great deal of trepidation was exhibited. Some said, "This is not pleasure. Do go back." Soon the boat righted herself; she had about 7,000 tons of iron for ballast which helped materially to quiet our fears. A very stiff breeze put ten miles between us and Jacksonville. Twenty-four miles were soon reached, and the sail had to be taken in. As I think of it now it seems like a dream. It was truly fearful, the boat so much like a plaything, so slight a thing, to be engulfed in the foaming waves. I never had so strong a wish to sing. I must have been very much excited. How differently strong feelings are expressed in different persons. One poor woman whose husband and two boys were on board begged to go back. The boys said, "Can't we go as far as the light house?" This is near the mouth of the river. The captain, a cool, capable man, said he could pass the bar and then there was smooth sailing beyond, yet all would be likely to get wet. So many were invalids who ought not to sit with damp clothing on the majority cried out to return. I gave one lingering glance and was resigned.

At one point not named, we landed by means of the life boat along side, carrying our lunch baskets with us. We here found sweet clover of great fragrance of which I soon gathered a full hand; also an old fort made of oyster shells and clay; the circular puncture in many places intimating its use in former days. The woods have a great variety of cedar. Very few kinds besides. The live oak is much admired, also the shapely magnolia with its thick, dark green leaf, the wild fig with leaves similar in shape, but thin and light green. There are also one or two kinds of the willow.

A swift, pleasant ride returned the party to Jacksonville, and the excursion down the St. John's River was transformed into a glowing picture and hung in the mellow light of the halls of memory.

Broadening the Base.

There is a great tendency in our day to liberalize the church so as to embrace everybody. Discipline must be elastic; generous indulgence must be allowed to gratifications of taste and appetite; excuses must be received for weaknesses of temper, lapses of self-restraint, omissions of religious duties, and a general worldliness of spirit, and a great body of intelligent, good-hearted amiable, moral, and very humane and liberal persons will be pleased to unite in church fellowship as long as the singing and preaching meet the requisitions of their standard of judgment.

It is not by broadening the base of the church that the world is to be saved "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way." The church of the Lord Jesus was not a popular one in the usual acceptation of the word, although it was indeed a church for the people. His requisitions were stringent. His sword of discipline ruptured family ties, called for sacrifices of property, cut off right hands, cut out right eyes, and required even that life should not be dearer than his service. The ancient discipline of the church was severe, many were cut off, but the church lost no moral power in this excision. The limited extent of the church is not its weakness in its proposed work of human evangelization. If it were smaller and purer, it would be stronger. If we are not holier, more Christlike and unworldly through our connection with the church, it is of little service to us, and we might as well be out of its communion. The church will be powerful to save the world when she comes up out of her wilderness state, leaning upon the arm of her Beloved, and shining in the light of his countenance. — Zion's Herald.

Bible Printing.

For more than two hundred years after the art of printing was invented, no person was allowed to print anything in England without direct permission from the Government. In 1586 a decree was made that no printing presses should be set up in any place out of London, except at the two universities. No book could then be published except by the Stationers' Company; but soon after-ward special privileges were granted to other persons. One man was permitted to publish all the almanacs, another all the law books, a third all the school books, and a fourth all the Bibles.

Most of these exclusive rights were abolished years ago. The one that actually lasted the longest was that which gave a monopoly of almanac publishing, a legal decision having put an end to it in 1775. The right, however, to publish Bibles, is still allowed by law only to the Queen's printer and the University of Oxford. Although the law is a "dead letter," and has long been disregarded by publishers, yet for a great many years every violation of it was severely punished.

One result of the law was that the persons who had this privilege of printthe Bible abused it greatly. The copies they published were very carelessly issued, and some important texts were altered. The copy printed in 1653 contained the text, "Know ye not that the un-righteous" (instead of "righteous") "shall inherit the kingdom of God?"

The monopolists having the power to charge what they please, but the price was so high that only the rich could buy a Bible. So there were few copies sold, and those were so badly printed that they were hardly worth having.

At last this unjust system was broken down. Thomas Guy, a shrewd bookseller of London, sent an agent to Holland, who bought good type and fine paper, and employed Dutch printers to put together well-printed Bibles.

These were carried to England and sold in great numbers at a low price. Other publishers adopted Guy's innovation, and the King's printer began to see that, like the Ephesian idol-makers, his craft was in danger. He went to law and followed the book-smugglers so sharply that they were obliged to discontinue the importation of the sacred book.

But Thomas Guy was not to be defeated so easily. He went to the authorities of the University of Oxford, and by hard work, persuaded them to sell their privilege. Then he brought over to England Dutch workman and type, and began to issue large number of excellent Bibles at a low price. The law was thus evaded, and it has never since been really enforced.

Of course all these Bibles are not printed at the University Press, but the publishers, in order to be strictly within the law, obtained the permission of the University.

It is interesting to know that Thomas Guy, who was the means of making Bibles plenty and cheap in England, acquired a very large fortune, and that he used it notably in founding a hospital in Southwark, (now a part of London,) that still bears his name.—Companion.

The Appointment of the Sabbath Illustrated.

A prince says to a beggar, "This noble mansion and this vast estate I put into your hands. I give you the full use and enjoyment of it, and power to transmit it to your children, but I do not alienate my title. As a sign between us that the ownership rests still in me, as an acknowledgment of my eminent proprietorship, and as a witness to my rights in case of dispute, I require that the fruit of this tree or the produce of this field be brought to me every autumn, or be disposed of according to my will." Of course, the donor has the right to affix this condition to his gift. It might be an eminently wise and prudent condition. If prescribed, every consideration of duty and of interest binds the beneficiary to observe it, It matters not how the fruit is to be disposed of. The donor might require it to be left untouched on the ground, still the obligation remains. It might be appointed for the use of the poor, and then the appropriation of it to other purposes would be a double crime, robbery of the benefactor and robbery of the poor. The nobler the use to which it is put, the stronger the obligation to observe the restriction. So God might have appointed the Sabbath as a day for some special physical toil, of even aimless and useless toil. He might have made it a day of weary journeying, a day of absolute silence or of utter solitude, and the irksomeness or useless ness of the service would not have impaired its obligation. With great wisdom and kindness he has set it apart for the exercise of the noblest faculties of the soul and the promotion of man's highest interests. Instead of silence and loneliness he has appointed it for cheerful praise and loving companionship. And this appropriation of Sabbath time to the noblest occupations is an additional reason for its observance and an additional aggravation of its neglect. But the obligation does not rest on our sense of its pleasantness. A man who honestly says, "I can find no enjoyment in the Sabbath," is not, therefore, released from it. His depraved inclination cannot make void the law of God. To spend the day according to our inclinations, regardless of God's claim upon it, is robbery and rebellion. "Man, entering on the noble heritage of life, received no gift of that day. The right to work seven days in the week is not to be found in the catalogue of human rights. That right no man ever had. That right no man can get. Human governments cannot give it, for it was never given to them. An honest man will not knowingly take what is not his own. The Sabbath for secular business, or for pleasure, or for any purpose which God has not prescribed, does not belong to us, and no honest man who knows this will use it in this way." And yet men who will not steal from men, unhesitatingly violate the right which God has reserved for himself in the seventh part of time. Where this is not done through ignorance of the law, what can we conclude but that the man has not the fear of God before his eyes? He may not steal, because the judgment of men so strongly condemns theft, or because he is persuaded that honesty is the best policy, but not because God has forbidden theft. Tempt him with the prospect of concealment or advantage, and there is no reason why he who robs God will not rob his neighbor also.—Ch. Statesman.

The Ashantees.

The Ashantee nation which has just been subdued by England is a great African power. It numbers about 3,000,000 souls— of whom some 200,000 are war-loving barbarians. Every twenty-one days they hold an adai, or "blood custom," at which yam and palm wine having been drank like water, skulls are carried in procession to the sound of drums made with human skin, and most horrible massacres and debaucheries go forward. At the annual "Yam-festival," just now coming on, they celebrate a still bloodier carnival of death, and whenever a caboooceer or freeman dies, slaves are killed "to wet his grave." They eat the heart and drink the blood of a conquered enemy, and wear the teeth and finger-bones as ornaments. When the king dies, thousands of wretched slaves and attendants are slaughtered over his tomb; in a word, it is a land of murder. It was meant by nature to be a land of peace and plenty, for beyond the thick forest which lies along the coast, stretches a fertile and healthy country of rich black soil, growing two or three crops yearly, and full of vegetable wonders and glories yet unnamed. The fruits and flowers of Ashantee-land are said to be perfectly marvelous. Curious animals, such as the bird called "pookoe," and the huge corpse eating "arompe" rat, are found in the woods and clearings. Reptiles are horribly plentiful, including enormous boas; a peculiar puff adder, whose bite is certain death; scorpions as big as cray fish, and toads so large that Bosman took the first he saw for a land-tortoise. Gold is the chief article exported. In that metal Ashantee land must be fabulously rich; the chiefs wear gold breast-plates and golden or gilded war-caps. The caboceers go about with lumps of virgin gold hung upon their necks and waists, some weighing, it is said, four pounds and more; and Bowditch has described golden window-frames in the king's palace at Coomassie. After the battle of Accra, in 1826, the Ashantee King sent in as "peace-money" six thousand ounces of dust and nuggets, and the swords, muskets, and elephant-tail fans are described as being profusely rich with goldsmith's work. The Government is a despotic monarchy, the religion feticism, modified by African Islamism. They believe in a Great Spirit, who, they say, created six white and six black people, and gave the first choice between a calabash and a sealed paper. The black took the calabash—which contained gold, iron, maze, and all the wealth of nature—and the whites got the scroll, which contained instructions in the right use of all these products. Thus the whites are forever superior. As for Coomassie, the capital, accounts differ, one statement making it out a poor straggling place of mean huts, and another, a really fine and imposing city for Africa.—Bap. Weekly.

Some one, it seems, asked Rev. Dr. Witt Talmage, by letter, whether it was right to read light, trashy literature; and in reply he said, "In every family, where the children have come to nine or ten years of age, it has been discussed. The family altar is nothing, catechisms are nothing, religious instruction is nothing so long as there is an unhealthy periodical in the house. From the two leprous lips of that one sheet, there will be a poison breathed on that family Bible, on the piano, on the arm chair, on the cradle, on the dining table, and the whole house will be plague-smitten. The question amounts to this: 'Shall my family be blessed, or blasted?'

"If there be one gulf deeper in hell than another, it shall be the doom of those newspaper men, whose pen is stabbing to death the purity of American Society."

Children's Corner.

Pluck Wins.

About thirty years ago (said Judge P.,) I stepped into a bookstore in Cincinnati, in search of some books that I wanted. While there, a little ragged boy, not over twelve years of age, came in and inquired for a geography.

"Plenty of them," was the saleman's reply.

"How much do they cost?"

"One dollar, my lad."

"I did not know they were so much." He turned to go out, and even opened the door, but closed it again and came back. "I have got only sixty-one cents," said he: "could you let me have a geography, and wait a little while for the rest of the money?"

How eagerly his bright little eyes looked for an answer! and how he seemed to shrink within his ragged clothes when the man, not very kindly, told him he could not!

The disappointed little fellow looked up to me, with a very poor attempt at a smile, and left the store. I followed him and overtook him.

"And what now?" I asked.

"Try another place, sir."

"Shall I go, too, and see how you succeed?'

"O yes, if you like," said he in surprise.

Four different times I entered with him, and each time he was refused.

"Will you try again?' I asked.

"Yes, sir, I shall try them all, or I should not know whether I could get one."

We entered the fifth store, and the little fellow walked up manfully, and told the gentleman just what he wanted, and how much money he had.

"You want the book very much?" said the proprietor.

"Yes, sir, very much."

"Why do you want it so very, very much?"

"To study, sir. I can't go to school, but I study when I can at home. All the boys have got one, and they will get ahead of me. Besides, my father was a sailor, and I want to learn of the places where he used to go."

"Does he go to these places now?" asked the proprietor.

"He is dead," said the boy, softly. Then he added after a while, "I'm going to be a sailor, too."

"Are you, though?" asked the gentleman, rising his eyebrows curiously.

"Yes, sir, if I live."

"Well, my lad, I will tell you what I will do; I will let you have a new geography, and you may pay the remainder of the money when you can, or I will let you have one that is not new for fifty cents."

"Are the leaves all in it, and just like the others, only not new?"

"Yes, just like the new ones."

"It will do just as well, then, and I will have eleven cents left towards buying some other book. I am glad they did not let me have one at any of the other places."

The bookseller looked up inquiringly, and I told him what I had seen of the little fellow. He was much pleased, and when he brought the book along, I saw a nice new pencil and some clean white paper in it.

"A present, my lad, for your perseverance. Always have courage like that, and you will make your mark," said the bookseller.

"Thank you, sir, you are so very good."

"What is your name!"

"William Harverly, sir."

"Do you want any more books?" I now asked him.'

"More than I can ever get," he replied," glancing at the books that filled the shelves.

I gave him a bank note. "It will buy some for you," I said.

Tears of joy came into his eyes.

"Can I buy what I want with it?"

"Yes, my lad, anything."

"Then I will buy a book for mother," said he; "I thank you very much, and some day I hope I can pay you back,"

He wanted my name, and I gave it to him. Then I left him standing by the counter so happy that I almost envied him, and many years passed before I saw him again.

Last year I went to Europe on one of the finest vessels that ever plowed the waters of the Atlantic. We had very beautiful weather until very near the end of the voyage; then came a most terrible storm that would have sunk all on board had it not been for the captain.

Every spar was laid low, the rudder was almost useless, and a great leak had shown itself, threatening to fill the ship. The crew were all strong, willing men, and the mates were practical seamen of the first-class; but after pumping for one whole night, and the water still gaining on them, they gave up in despair, and prepared to take the boats, though they might have known no small boat could ride such a sea. The captain, who had been below with his charts, now came up; he saw how matters stood, and with a voice that I heard distinctly above the roar of the tempest, he ordered every man to his post.

It was surprising to see those men [illegible] the strong will of their captain, and hurry back to the pumps.

The captain then started below to examine the leak. As he passed me I asked him if there was any hope. He looked at me, and then at the other passengers, who had crowed up to hear the reply, and said rebukingly:

"Yes, sir, there is hope as long as one inch of this deck remains above water: when I see none of it, then I shall abandon the vessel, and not before, nor one of my crew, sir. Everything shall be done to save it, and if we fail, it will not be from inaction. Bear a hand, every one of you, at the pumps."

Thrice during the day did we dispair, but the captain's dauntless courage, perseverance and powerful will mastered every man on board and we went to work again.

"I will land you safely at the dock in Liverpool," said he, "if you will be men."

And he did land us safely; but the vessel sunk moored to the dock. The captain stood on the deck of the sinking vessel, receiving the thanks and the blessings of the passengers, as they passed down the gang plank. I was the last to leave. As I passed, he grasped my hand, and said,

"Judge P., do you recognize me?"

I told him that I was not aware that I ever saw him until I stepped aboard his ship.

"Do you remember the boy in Cincinnati?"

"Very well, sir; William Harverly."

"I am he," said he. "God bless you!'

"And God bless noble captain Harverley."—Selected.

Religious Intelligence.

—The evangelist Hammond will begin revival meetings at Jacksonville, Ill., in the First Presbyterian Church this week.

—The Baptist churches of New Hampshire number eighty-five with a membership of 8,096. Nearly three-fourths of the churches have settled pastors.

—W. H. H. Murray, of the Park Street Congregational Church, has asked his people for an assistant pastor. He takes an annual vacation for fishing and hunting excursions.

—The same minister recently stated that rain was one of the objects for which Christians have no right to pray as it would cause a violation of natural laws. If so, the Apostle James was greatly mistaken in writing verses 17 and 18 in the fifth chapter of his epistle.

—A temperance meeting of great power was held on a late Sunday evening in the Fifth Presbyterian Church, Chicago. Several reformed drunkards testified that it was the grace of God in answer to prayer which saved them.

—The Jesuits are going into Japan in force, and they already outnumber the Protestant missionaries. They are erecting a large convent in Yeddo. Their movements are not relished by the authorities, as the country suffered so much from their plottings and acts in former times.

—Nearly $20,000 have been subscribed for the new Wesleyan Publishing House at Sryracuse, N. Y., and the erection of the building is assured. The estimated cost is $30,000. It is to be of brick, three stories with mansard roof, completed in tasteful style and with room and conveniences for the purposes of a denominational center.

—Meetings held by the new lay evangelist, Major Whittle, in Waukegan, Geneva Lake, and Turner Junction near Chicago have been attended with very encouraging results. At the latter place, a powerful revival is in progress, especially affecting the adult portion of community and employees of the railroad shops.

—The Advance says that the recent Brooklyn council has honored Congregationalism before the religious public, proving that the system is not a rope of sand. The [illegible] the lax methods of Plymouth Church is a rebuke to Beecherism, it having been assumed that they demanded the liberty or looseness it represents.

—The Illinois Conference of the Evangelical Association met in Kankakee last week. The committee on Statistics report: Number of ministers in the Illinois Conference in the traveling connection, 75; local ministers, 71; total membership in the Conference, 8,749; received during the past year, 1,445; expelled during the year 84; number of church edifices, 101; value of church property, $277,950.

—The Northern Christian Advocate makes the statement that the M. E. church looses seventy-five per cent of its probationers. In fourteen years 2,092,686 probationers were reported, of whom only 509,316 went into full communion, or 22 to 100. Or, in fourteen years more were lost than would make another church as large as itself! The Advocate thinks the prevalent revival methods of the church are at fault, and that "such spiritual prodigality in labor and souls should be abated."

—The Chicago Presbytery commenced its annual session on Monday in the Third Presbyterian Church. The presentation of charges and specifications against Prof. Swing by Rev. F. L. Patton, editor of the Interior, was the all absorbing business. The two charges are that Swing is unfaithful in maintaining Gospel truth and in the exercise of ministerial duty, and that he does not receive the doctrines of the Presbyterian church. The most important accusation is that he sympathizes with the Unitarians, and only remains in the Presbyterian church for the present, thinking he can there do most good.

—A recent number of the Moravian contains the following allusion to the first missionary society in this country: "It is not a matter of any particular importance, but the fact is that the society of the United Brethren for propagating the gospel was organized in Bethlehem, in the year 1787, and was incorporated by the Legislature of Pennsylvania in the following year (1788.) It is the oldest foreign mission society in the country. Its special aim was the support of missions among the Indians. May its days be renewed as of old. The female missionary societies in the congregations at Bethlehem, Nazareth and Litiz are each more than fifty years old."

News of the Week.

The City.

—The arrangements for the Chicago Inter-State Industrial Exposition for 1874 have been completed, and circulars announcing the fact will next week be scattered over the country. It will open Sept. 9th and continue until October 10th.

—The detectives have unearthed several cases of robbery committed during a few months past in the business portion of the city. The thieves are taken and some $15,000 worth of goods restored. The ring leaders are young men under age; they say that there is no difficulty in perpetrating a robbery, but stolen goods are not easily got rid of. Not very complimentary to our police system, surely, when such reasons only guard property.

—The Methodist ministers' meeting on Monday held quite an argument on the Bible doctrine of temperance; two members, Thomas and Strowbridge, holding firmly that moderate drinking was allowed by Scripture, and that Christ turned water into real intoxicating wine. The Tribune helps out the other party by rejecting the story of Cana of Galilee as an interpolation, on the authority of Tischendorf and other German critics.

—Police Superintendent Rehm reports for the year 27,995 arrests, of which 7,269 were for drunkenness.

Congress.

—Twenty members of Congress were reported absent from their seats on Saturday at a shad bake. Where is the American Juvenal?

—The Agricultural Department tried to revive the Franking nuisance by a bill providing for free transmission of seeds, cuttings, etc., through the mail. It was defeated, but the Post Office Committee of the House got that body to adopt a measure providing for free exchanges and no postage on local papers within the limits of their county.

—The inflation measure is still before the House, which is discussing lateral issues.

The Country.

—The iron manufacturers of the Lehigh, Schuylkill, Columbia and other regions in Pennsylvania have [illegible] trade has not revived since the panic of last fall, and a reduction of wages was made to save shutting up altogether. The workmen have been holding meetings and have drawn up their ultimatum, which the manufacturers will not accept. There are 630 furnaces reported idle, and the number of men unemployed is estimated from 10,000 to twice that number. The Union to which most of the puddlers belong has branches in several States, and has 50,000 members or more, and funds to sustain a long strike.

—The steamer Greece from Liverpool has arrived in New York with the passengers and crew of the French steamer Europe which sprung a leak and was abandoned by her officers. A volunteer crew from the Greece attempted to bring in the water-logged vessel, but were obliged to give up the effort. They were rescued and arrived in England several days ago. No lives are reported lost.

—Mayor Havemeyer of New York has written to the State Senate that the East River Bridge now building is entirely impracticable. Its great weight and height, 129 feet above the water, would subject it to constant danger in severe gales. He thinks the project must end in disaster to all concerned in it.

—The temperance reform in Pittsburgh is unusually prominent. The Mayor proclaimed against sidewalk gatherings, and basely threw the responsibility of disturbance on the women. They have fearlessly gone on with the reform however, and the action of the authorities has thrown public sympathy in their favor.

—At a recent party given by the wife of William B. Astor, of New York, she appeared in jewelry and diamonds said to be worth a million dollars. The eight or nine thousand shelterless wretches of that city could for the same amount be provided with comfortable lodgings.

—Boston, April 13th.—The twenty-second ballot for a United States Senator resulted as follows:—Whole number of votes cast, 219; necessary to a choice, 110; Dawes, 63; Hoar, 52; Curtis, 62; Adams, 11; Bullock, 13; Banks, 7; Sanford, 5; Washburn, 3; Whittier, Learned, and Pitman, 1 each.

—The Wisconsin Institute for the Blind, at Janesville, was totally destroyed by fire on Monday morning. None of the inmates were injured, but lost their personal effects. The movable property on the first and second floors was saved.

—The high water on the Mississippi is causing great damage in Louisiana. A crevasse of 300 feet was made near Baton Rouge and a large district inundated.

Foreign.

—The body of Dr. Livingstone has arrived in England. The following account is given of his death. His illness from chronic dysentery lasted several months, but from the first he thought it would be fatal. Arriving at Muilala, beyond Lake Bemba, in the Bisa country, he said, "Build me a hut to die in." A hut was built by his followers. The first of May he was confined to his bed, and afterwards suffered greatly, groaning night and day. The third day he said he was very cold, and requested that more grass be put over the hut. The fourth day he was insensible, and died about midnight. Dr. Livingstone made his last entry in his diary April 28th. He spoke much and sadly of his home and family. Chief Kitumbo, when informed of Dr. Livingstone's death, had drums beaten and guns fired as a token of respect, and allowed the followers to remove the body, which they placed in a coffin of bark. They then began the journey to Unyanyembe, which occupied about six months, sending in advance a party with information of all that had occurred, addressed to Dr. Livingstone's son. At Unyanyembe Dr. Livingstone's body was placed in another bark case, a smaller one done up to represent a bale of goods, so as to deceive the natives, who objected to the passage of the corpse, and thus carried to Zanzibar.

—A majority of the English Cabinet approve of the annexation of the Fiji Islands, on the proposition of their king.

—Letters from Cuba give details of severe encounters between the Spanish forces and Cubans, in which the latter were beaten.

Lebanon Valley College is situated in the beautiful Lebanon Valley, Pennsylvania, on the Reading route between Harrisburg and Philadelphia. It is under the care of the United Brethren in Christ, as will be seen in the brief statement from the President, which is sufficient notification of its principles, and that both sexes are on equality. The institution has two large brick buildings, ample grounds, convenient location, and its principles recommend it to the Christian parents of central Pennsylvania.

Jesuitism in Germany.—The contest between Bismarck and the Black Pope still continues. Bismarck as yet enforces the laws of the Empire and priests and bishops submit or are punished. In Austria, too, the tide is rising, which, let us hope may sweep out the order of Jesuits from that kingdom. Of course the Ultramontanes are sorely distressed, mourn over the infidelity of the age and the assassination of Liberty. Like true Freemasons these religionists degrade rob and murder the ignorant masses, and even attempt the overthrow of civil government, and when a strong hand is laid upon them, cry out in all the agony of injured innocence. Every careful reader of history knows that though no priest may have a wife of his own, any priest could, in the Middle Ages, have the wives of any or all his parishoners. Every such reader knows that after ten solid centuries of jesuitical rule, there was not a free school or a free nation in Europe. Every careful observer knows that in this country, the same conspirators have attacked our schools, and silently extend their forces until they shall be able to change our title from the "United" to the Papal States. Let us learn wisdom from the great statesman at Berlin and strangle this tiger's cub before it is too late.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern: An Outline of their Rise, Progress and Character with Respect to the Christian Religion and Republican Government. Edited by General J. W. Phelps. Chicago: Ezra A. Cook & Co.

The author traces back the origin of Masonry and its evil influences, particularly as seen and felt in our own country; the Tammany Ring, Credit Mobiler, &c. He shows the subserviency of some of our public men, such as Fillmore and Webster, to its dominating power. If read dispassionately it will do good.—United Presbyterian.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

CHAPTER I.

ORIGIN AND GROWTH.

It is nearly centennial year with the secret society system of American colleges. Trustworthy records give it a foreign parentage. It sprang from France, that parent of so many questionable customs of modern society--a fact that cannot be reckoned in its favor. Thomas Jefferson is the reputed agent of the importation; its name "Phi Beta Kappa;" and William and Mary college, Virginia, became its first habitation, December 6th, 1776. From thence to Yale in 1780 and to Harvard in the year following, it spread to several institutions in New England.

In the Anti-masonic reform of 1826–31 this society was condemned for its secret ceremonies. Its grips and signs were published and its secret ceremonials were given up; though in 1852 ten chapters were reported, and it still exists at Yale. Its change of character at Harvard is thus noticed in the Providence American, quoted by the Boston Telegraph of September 3d, 1831:—

"We are gratified to learn that the enlightened efforts of Adams, Story and Everett, have prevailed and that the "Phi Beta Kappa" society at Harvard University abolished the secrets of that association by a vote passed at their meeting on Thursday evening."

In 1821, Prof. James L. Kingsley founded the "Chi Delta Theta" at Yale. This society died from neglect about 1843, but has since been nominally revived. Its members are now the five editors of the Yale Literary Magazine who annually pass it on to their successors.

Of the college societies now maintaining a secret character "Kappa Alpha" is probably the oldest, dating from 1823. "Skull and Bones," the leading Yale Senior class society, was established 1832, and since that time the number of different organizations has increased with the growth and number of our educational institutions. A limited examination shows twenty-five societies, some of which claim from thirty to forty "chapters" or branch associations.

"Greek-letter societies" or "Greek fraternities" are terms used interchangibly for the college secret societies, and are derived from the use of Greek initials as the names of the different fraternities. These letters presumably stand for Greek words or phrases expressing a moral or character sentiment; as, "Phi Beta Kappa" is for Philosophia biou kubernetes—"Philosophy is the guide of life;" but sometimes a harmonious combination of letters is first selected, and the motto fitted to them afterwards. Part of the fraternities, which exist only in a single organization are named from their badge pins. These are comparatively few in number. The "Skull and Bones" leads the list in influence, age, and society standing; "Scroll and Key" and "Spade and Grave" maintaining a supposed rivalship with it among the members of the Senior class at Yale. The two former are peculiar to Yale, but have feeble imitators in the "Axe and Coffin" of Columbia College, the "Owl and Padlock" at the Michigan University, and the "Skull and Serpent" and "Owl and Wand" at the Wesleyan University. Yale College has a system peculiar to itself, in that each college class has its own fraternities. They are thus distributed: Freshman class, two; Sophomore, two, (two others are defunct); Junior, three; Senior, three. The student in passing through the course may have the privilege of initiation and other supposed benefits annually repeated. A nominal interest is supposed to be retained by the members of each lower class fraternity after they have ceased to act with it, and on special occasions they are customarily present, but rather as spectators or guests. This fact has operated against the secrecy of Freshman societies, visitors often being present who have never been members. In most other institutions, however, the societies are made up from each of the college classes without distinction; so that membership may be continued during the entire course.

A numerical summary of college fraternities has probably never been compiled. Such a task would not be profitable on this occasion, and only a brief statement will be attempted, which may however serve the curious as a basis for further inquiry. Delta Kappa Epsilon was founded at Yale in 1844, and is, as to numbers, probably the largest fraternity in the country. In 1871 it had established forty branches or chapters, twelve of which were dead. Its aggregate membership was 4,750, of which the Yale chapter furnished during twenty-seven years, 796. The Delta Phi, founded at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., 1832, reports in 1870, twenty-two chapters and 3,650 members. The Psi Upsilon, founded at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1833, has fifteen chapters and 3,400 members in total. To the two latter Yale has furnished, respectively, 740 and 750 members. Theta Delta Chi, established also at Union College in 1847, had in 1872, 1,018 members. Phi Kappa Psi, established 1852, has a total membership of over 2,000. The Yale Freshman societies show these aggregates: the Sigma Epsilon in twenty-five classes, 1,011 members, in other colleges, 249; the Delta Kappa in twenty-one classes, 997 members, and in other colleges, 556.

Figures are dry reading but they have a certain eloquence and positiveness of argument not easy to gainsay. From those given above it will be seen that this system is not shut up in narrow limits among American students. And additional significance must be allowed from the fact that these fraternities find constituency and support from a single and small class of society, the college students. It is true that a large number of our colleges maintain the system, especially the more popular and wealthy, and statements have been widely circulated to the effect that no institution was separate from it; but this is far from fact as will be hereafter shown.

The expense of these societies varies of course with institutions, and the class of students supporting them. Some are amply maintained by a small tax such as is borne by members of any literary or debating society. The other extreme may be seen at Yale, where initiations cost from fifteen to twenty-five dollars and the average expenses of a Freshman society is $35 to $40 per member; and of a Sophomore from $10 to $15 more. The Junior societies are more select and smaller, and their expenses for halls, conventions, etc., are increased; the individual tax is therefore greater. Society Halls are rented at $150 to 250 per year and often fitted up at an expense of $1,000. New Haven is somewhat noted for several gloomy, windowless, toomb-like structures of brick or stone guarded by heavy iron doors These are the halls of two Junior and two Senior class societies, and were erected by the individual contributions of the members. These buildings and the lots on which they stand cost from $8,000 to $50,000; "Scroll and Keys" property being valued at the latter sum. At Williams College is a hall worth $10,000 and at Middletown one valued at $15,000. The Senior class society is limited to fifteen members; a division of their expenses would therefore give a higher pro rata than either of the lower classes.

The particular benefit to be derived from the Greek fraternity is not different, theoretically, from that of the open literary society. Social and intellectual improvement is the claim of its members, in the pursuit of which the superior advantages of select companions, privacy, the eclat of secret sessions, and society tradition and honor, place them far above the open organization. Whether all, or even a respectable portion of the college brotherhoods present equal or greater facilities for the right and full development of the student, is a question for succeeding chapters to present.

The California Wine Dealers' Gazette, in speaking of the effects of the widespread adulteration of liquor, says: "The man accustomed to stimulants, who fails to satisfy himself that he is using the pure article, too often finds, after a few years, the reward of his negligence, in failing mental powers, physical paralysis, and sudden death." Pretty forcible testimony from such a source. Let it be remembered that this adulteration is almost universal, and even the "pure genuine article," is almost equally harmful.

A working man writes of the bitter evil which haunts the steps of his companions: "But there is another power in the land working against the workingman, more powerful and more dangerous than all these gigantic monopolies; a power that makes the ballot-box worthless in our hands, and worse than worthless; a power that not only impoverishes, but degrades the workingman; a power that is undermining our whole political, social and moral being, and threatens to overthrow the first principles of liberty, law and order. I mean the whisky power. I would like to tell how and where the political wires are laid; where the money is left to buy us 'voting cattle.' It is not in work-shops, but in whisky-shops."

Mr. Moody has had occasion to give advice to the Scotch ministers on an important question. Those brethren find intemperance and drinking habits the chief barrier to their evangelical work. At a meeting in which they ject, they asked the Chicago man's opinion. It was to the point. "Banish the infernal stuff from your own sideboards and tables"—Interior.

I challenge any man who understands the nature of ardent spirits, and yet for the sake of gain continues to be engaged in the traffic, to show that he is not involved in the guilt of murder.—Lyman Beecher.

The New York Board of State Charities reports about 10,000 maniacs in the state, and 6,000 idiots, one-third to a half of whom were brought to their wretched condition by their own or parent's intemperance.

The total tax receipts from tobacco for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, were $34,386,303. Compared with the total receipts for the fiscal year June 30, 1872, there was a decrease of collections on manufactured tobacco of all descriptions of $1,172,917. There was an increase in the total receipts from the manufacture and sale of tobacco, snuff and cigars, in all their forms, over the preceding fiscal year of $650,132. The actual product of the year, so far as such products have been reported, is 116,450,934 pounds, showing an increase of 9,180,079 pounds. The number of cigars, cheroots, etc., on which taxes were collected, was 1,807,134,646, showing an excess over the number reported for the preceding fiscal year of 279,328,674. There was an increase of 544,064 pounds of exported tobacco. The aggregate receipts for the last fiscal year exceeded the Commissioner's estimate by $4,075,456. It is estimated that the total receipts for the current fiscal year will be $100,000,000.

Facts and Figures.

Our best lawyers value their time from $40 to $50 per hour, which is a reasonable charge. If, however, the case be one where half a million is at stake, then instead of a mere fifty you will be expected to advance a retaining fee of $500, or perhaps $1,000. This prevents any one from securing the services of the lawyer thus retained. If a lawer, even after receiving such a fee, should win the case, he will expect from $10,000 to $15,000 additional. Our great lawyers demand pay commensurate with their reputation, and hence some of them can boast a practice worth $50,000 per year. O'Connor, previous to his retirement, made annually, it is said, nearly four times that sum. Indeed, he was probably paid $200,000 for his services in the Jumel case. He is now worth more than a million, all of which he has made by his own genius and industry.—Concord Monitor.

"Any Senator who does not make his office pay at least $100,000 a term, does not use his chances," said a man of the world, perfectly informed of what he spoke. That many do not use their chances, is perfectly certain, and equally certain that many do. There are men in both houses of Congress who would deliberately choose poverty rather than riches at the price of their honor. Yet this type of men in the Congress rarer. Why? Not because the nation is not rich in such men. But because the power which prevails does not send such men thither. Honest men still come who are the absolute choice of their constituents; but they no longer make, as they once did, the majority of Congress. That the public sentiment of a constituency decides the moral standard of a representative, is proven by the fact that in at least some of the states of New England a man who could afford to buy his election never could be elected, while west of the Mississippi a man who does not buy his election is equally sure of defeat. Such is the cupidity aroused by the measureless mining and railroad interests of the West that more and more men are sent hither from that region by rich monopolies and corporations, to secure certain company ends, or because they themselves, a part of those corporations and monopolies, buy their seats in advance. Does it need prophetic vision to foresee that such political corruption, unless stayed in its sure, legitimate result, will end in the utter degradation of a republican government, in the demoralization of national character?—Independent.

California has about 8,000,000 head of sheep. The wool crop in two shearings, at an average of ten pounds per head, would amount to 80,000,000 pounds, or 15,000,000 more than the total product of the United States in 1871.

Of the great centers of humanity throughout the globe, there are nine having a population exceeding 1,000,000 souls, coming in the following order: London, 3,251,000; Soochow, 2,000,000; Paris, 1,825,000; Pekin, 1,648,080; Yeddo, 1,554,000; Canton, 1,236,000; Constantinople, 1,075,000; Siang-tan, in the province of Huhan, 1,000,000; and Techan-techan-foo, in the province of Fokieu, 1,000.000.

In London there is a safe deposit company whose vaults are sunk to a depth of fifty feet below the surface of the street, and form four stories connected by a hydraulic lift, and rest on a concrete bed fifteen feet in thickness. The walls are built of fire-proof Staffordshire bricks a yard in thickness, with an inner shell of chilled steel, three inches thick. The whole is inclosed in an outer wall of Sussex bricks ten feet thick. The stories above the ground will be used as offices.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

The Christian Cynosure.

With enlarged size, added ability and the earnest co-operation of all who desire a pure church and a government in the hands of unselfish, honest men, the Cynosure will greatly increase its circulation during the coming year.

Men of average integrity need only to understand Masonry and kindred institutions to seek their extermination. Women who desire temperance and purity cannot regard with complacency an institution which is hostile to both.

Christians who abide in Christ will use all the wisdom and grace God has given them in their efforts to overthrow an institution which substitutes artificial lights for the true "Light of the world."

The institution of Freemasonry is rooted in human selfishness, sustained by false professions, accommodates its principles to the basest natures and by casting out Christ and at the same time professing to save sou'ls from death, it leads our nation towards heathenism.

Ignorance of this subject in thinking men and women, is the chief obstacle which those who desire to blot it out of our country, have to contend with. Will you not use all possible exertions in enlarging the circulation of the Cynosure, that this ignorance may be dispelled?

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorised to act as agents.

All who canvass for the Cynosure are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. on subscriptions for books, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100., for the Cynosure during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commission." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2.00 a year and requires a great addition to our present mail list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not, as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe. If funds in the same letter are for different objects, write so that the letter can be cut and the parts filed separately. The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceeding except such as are renewed or are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly if we understand that the paper is wanted.

Address letters thus: Subscriptions for the paper, to "THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE;" orders for books and tracts and donations to the tract fund, EZRA A. COOK & Co. 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago Ill.

About one hundred and fifty subscriptions expire during this present month. Please renew promptly if possible before your time expires, if not convenient commence to do so now, send word and have your paper continued.

We thank those who are renewing promptly. In some instances three or four weeks before their time expires.

"A New Broom Sweeps Clean."

We hope our readers and friends who desire to see the success of this movement will be very earnest in their efforts to obtain new subscribers now. The paper is just enlarged. The Convention at Syracuse is approaching. We need at least double the present list of subscribers in order successfully to meet the increased expenses of the paper. We wish to thank and encourage those who are and have been working for the paper. The great work is but fairly begun. We are glad to realize that so many have enlisted for the campaign.

Agents and colporters are needed to sell Anti-masonic publications. One man sends for a supply saying that he expects to attend two annual conferences soon, and thinks that he can sell many books to the clergymen who attend them. If you expect to attend any annual or other meetings this coming month and can do so, please provide yourselves with a supply of Anti-masonic books and pamphlets. Thinking men everywhere should have this matter set strongly before them.

Topics of the Time.

THE BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.—There are widespread complaints from secretaries of the benevolent societies, of falling off in the receipts. Reasons are doubtless many, and among them is probably a growing conviction that the benevolence of such societies is more frequently exercised toward the secretaries than any other parties. Go through the State of Illinois, and see the multitudes of churches planted and abandoned. See the many graduates of expensive seminaries, who leave the ministry, and see the many weak and inefficient men who ought never to have been allowed to enter it. Look at the consistent proslavery record of the American Board. Consider such things, and it will not seem strange that men of practical, common sense, are refusing to commit their hardly-earned money to the management of men who seem to be most thoroughly skilled in the art of avoiding practical questions. A young minister who studied two years in a theological seminary in Chicago, said: "When I came to be a minister, I found I must fight intemperance, but the only thing I had learned in the seminary about the matter, was that Christ made intoxicating liquor, and probably drank it."

There has been shown on the part of one of these societies, a disposition to preach present truth just in proportion as that is done should the societies be supported.

"YAYIN."—Quite a number of gentlemen are busy deciding whether Christ was accustomed to drink intoxicating wine or not.

Among the rest, a Jewish Doctor in Chicago has joined the Catholic Bishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, and the Presbyterian, Dr. Crosby, in New York. All these gentlemen repudiate with scorn, the idea that the Saviour was not accustomed to take his glass of grog, just as some Presbyterians, and Catholics, and Jews, do now.

The Jewish Rabbi, after stating the meaning of "yayin," "shechar," "chermer" and "tirosh," says that Christ was accustomed to drink wine every Friday evening, and that at the last supper he was obliged, by custom, to drink at least four cups of wine. He says that this wine might have been fresh from the press, but the "laws and customs demanded and preferred 'explicitly-fermented' wine."

Exactly what explicitly-fermented wine is, we do not know, but from the tenor of the letter, suppose it to be some ixtoxicating drink. It may be possible to make these learned gentlemen understand that the temperance question is not one of etymology. They assert that Christ PROBABLY drank fermented liquor. If he did, not one of them all, nor all of them together, can prove it, and other men as wise as they, say that PROBABLY he did not.

In this same paper that contains the letter to prove that Christ drank "explicitly-fermented" wine, we have notices of a railroad agent found dead drunk at a rough house, another gentleman found dead in his room, from drink, and two girls nearly killed by abuse in a saloon.

Will not these bishops, and doctors, and rabbis, meet a state of facts that exists, instead of "yayin" about a state of things existant two thousand years ago, about which they may be fanatical, and are certainly ignorant.

A REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.—The painful state of things existing in Louisiana, is well-known to our readers. A set of officials, who were never elected by the people of the State, have been in power, sustained by the President of the United States. A bill is now pending in Congress designed to remedy this state of things by ordering a new election. In Arkansas, the Governor has been ejected from the State House on a writ of ouster from the Circuit Court. In Mississippi, a majority of the Legislature are colored men, many of them unable to understand the nature of bills on which they are called to vote. The cowardly and infamous habit of duelling is reviving, three or four hostile meetings of this sort having taken place near New Orleans within a month, two of which resulted fatally. It will soon be necessary to establish a military government over some of these States, or see them disintegrated by the force of their inherent corruption. The people, white and black, are ignorant; the carpet baggers are, as a rule, thieves; and the few intelligent southerners are yet rebels. How can Congress guarantee to such a conglomerate a republican form of government? Take away the pressure of the Northern States, and there would not be a government of any kind among such a people three months.

An ignorant and immoral community can be controlled only by force. Once and again let it be understood, we must educate and we must Christianize, or we are lost. A nation of beer drinkers will always have an emperor, that is, a despot. A nation of wine drinkers will be a France or a Spain. A nation of opium eaters will be ruled by some son of the moon, who can behead every man in his empire, so long as his executioners are spared. The Bible and the school, these are the pillows of the Republic.

GEN. GRANT.—The newspapers say that this individual was smoking while he listened to the petition of twenty-five hundred bankers and merchants for a veto of the inflation theft. At the time that he received the Evangelical Alliance, he was not smoking, but had been smoking and drinking both; if any reliance can be placed on signs. His face was bloated and discolored, his eyes were watery and listless, in fact he was just such a looking man as would be called a drunken bloat, if he had been encased in old clothes. Surrounded by the incapables who constitute his Cabinet, the picture was one to cover with shame the face of every intelligent American.

To Charles Sumner.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

If I have seemed more prompt to censure wrong
Than praise the right; if seldom to thine ear
My voice hath mingled with the exultant cheer
Borne upon all our northern winds along;
If I have failed to join the exultant throng
In wide-eyed wonder that thou standest strong
In victory, surprised in thee to find
Brougham's scathing power with Canning's grace combined;
That he for whom the ninefold Muses sang,
From their twined arms a giant athlete sprang,
Barbing the arrows of his native tongue
With the spent shafts Latona's archer flung,
To smite the Python of our land and time,
Fell as the monster born of Crissa's slime,
Like the blind bard who in Castalian springs
Tempered the steel that clove the crest of kings,
And on the shrine of England's freedom laid
The gifts of Cumæ and of Delphi's shade—
Small need hast thou of words of praise from me,
Thou knowest my heart, dear friend, and well can'st guess
That, even though silent, I have not the less
Rejoiced to see thy actual life agree
With the large future which I shaped for thee,
When, years ago, beside the summer sea,
White in the moon we saw the long waves fall
Baffled and broken from the rocky wall,
That to the menace of the brawling flood,
Opposed alone its massive quietude,
Calm as a Fate with not a leaf nor vine
Nor birch-spray trembling in the still moonshine,
Crowning it like God's peace. I sometimes think
That night-scene by the sea prophetical—
(For nature speaks in symbols and in signs,
And through her pictures human fate divines)—
That rock wherefrom we saw the billows sink
In murmuring rout, uprising, clear and tall
In the white light of heaven, the type of one
Who, momently by Error's host assailed,
Stand's strong as Truth, in greaves of granite mailed;
And tranquil fronted, listening over all
The tumult, hears the angel say: "Well done!"

OUR COLLEGES ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

OHIO CENTRAL COLLEGE,
IBERIA, Ohio, Dec. 23, 1873.

GENTLEMEN:—A press of other duties prevented an earlier reply. The other members of the faculty of this college, Professors Wallace and Altar, are heart and soul opposed to secret societies of every class,—to Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, as well as to college fraternities.

No secret society, it is believed, has ever been organized among the students of this school, and it is determined that none ever shall be with the knowledge or consent of the present management.

We believe secret societies to be anti-republican as well as anti-Christian, and cordially sympathize with the Cynosure in its efforts to uproot and destroy them.

In behalf of the Faculty of O. C. C.

ED. F. REID, President.

Masonic Oaths from the Bible Stand-point.

BY PROF. O. F. LUMRY, WHEATON COLLEGE.

An oath is an acknowledgment of the authority of, and an implied declaration of allegiance to, the being invoked as witness of the obligation and exactor of the penalty—an act of worship of the most solemn character. Hence the Jews were expressly forbidden to swear by the heathen gods. Joshua xxiii. 7, reads, "Neither make mention of the name of their gods, nor cause to swear by them; neither serve them, nor bow down yourselves to them." Also Jeremiah v. 7, "How shall I pardon thee for this? Thy children have forsaken me and sworn by them that are no gods." In the immediate connection God says that he had fed them to the full, and they had committed spiritual adultery; that is, had worshiped the gods of the heathen. Jehovah utters his threatening in Isaiah lxv. 11–16 against those that sacrifice to other gods, and says that he will slay them that men may take warning and "swear by the God of truth." In Isaiah xlviii. 1, Israel is accused of swearing by the name of the Lord, "but not in truth, nor in righteousness." In Jeremiah v. 2–7, chief among the sins of Israel for which dire and certain destruction is threatened, it is said, "Though they say the Lord liveth," (a common formula of swearing by the true God) "surely they swear falsely." In Hebrews vi. 16, we are told that "men verily swear by the greater" and all lesser forms of obligation are expressly forbidden. James v. 12 reads, "But above all things, my brethren, swear not; neither by heaven, neither by the earth, nor by any other oath; but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation."

The Saviour himself in Matthew v. 33–37, gives the current view that a man must not break his oath, but perform it to the Lord. Now God was invoked as witness, whatever the object sworn by; and the performance of all oaths, to a Jew, was to the Lord. The legitimate oath as we have seen is by the true God, or God of truth, and must be in truth and righteousness; that is, the thing sworn to must be true and right. This passage uttered by Christ himself expressly and seriatim, forbids all other oaths. First, we must not swear by anything pertaining to God, as heaven, his dwelling-place; nor by anything commonly supposed to be separate from him, as the earth; nor by anything connected with ourselves, as our head. We may swear by nothing in heaven or earth save the true God. Now, the man that violates this command sins, and the only remedy for sin is repentance.

Since the highest Masonic authorities have repeatedly decided that it is unmasonic to pray in the name of Christ, is it not equally true that Masonic oaths are not administered in the name of Christ? That Christ is not the being intended in the formula? If so, then the terrible denunciation given above against those that swear by false gods are against those that take Masonic oaths? But grant that the true God is meant in the formula used, and suppose a man swears, as in the Master Mason's oath, to keep a brother Master Mason's secret, murder and treason excepted; or in the Royal Arch oath, murder and treason not excepted. In so doing he puts himself in this position: he calls the true God, the God of truth and righteousness, to witness that he will, if need be, make himself a thief or a murderer, according to all law human and divine, and if he does not he agrees to have his life taken in a manner the most shocking conceivable. Can impiety and terrible profanity go further?

It was in view of such horrible supplanting of the true oath of God among the Jews by the oaths in the heathen mysteries, the boasted and real progenitors of modern mysteries, that the prophet Jeremiah uttered the broken-hearted wail contained in the twenty-third chapter of his prophecy. He charges the prophets with committing adultery, that is, engaging in false worships, and doing the things that invariably accompany such a course, telling lies and strengthening the hands of evil-doers. If a man's religion is false he is unsound all the way through, and ready for any evil work. As if to sum up all the causes of the evil of his times in a single utterance, the prophet says, "Because of swearing the land mourneth." Should we not fear that the time is not far distant when our beloved land will mourn,—nay, does it not already "mourn because of swearing?"

We see how recklessly men take upon them solemn obligations of allegiance to God and then take other oaths entirely at variance with these, binding themselves under penalties horribly wicked and profane.

What wonder that we recently saw men taking the oath of allegiance to our government and swearing to protect it as civil officers, and at the same time taking and keeping other oaths to seek its destruction. More recently we have seen other men, under solemn official oaths, forming secret rings to swindle the people whose interests they had sworn to protect. In countries where idolatry prevails there are as many separate oaths as gods, and the man who has taken these conflicting obligations knows not which to obey. He therefore obeys that which he thinks will punish him most severely if he violates it. The same result is produced in Christian countries just in proportion to the multiplication of bogus or extra judicial oaths.

The conclusions to which we come, after, as we think, a fair examination of the subject, are these:

1st. Masonic obligations are bogus coin; sins to be repented of, not sacred obligations to be fulfilled.

2d. No man has a right to swear with his life as a penalty, unless he has a right to take his own life. Therefore Masonic oaths are in direct violation of the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill."

3d. They are opposed to truth and righteousness, and hence subversive of all just government.

4th. Being either oaths by false gods, or false and profane oaths by the true God, they must necessarily undermine and destroy all true religion.

"And the Spirit was Dumb."

Now when the religion of the country is trying to purify itself from the foul corruptions that have been brought upon it by the deceitful, pharisaical craft of Masonry, representing itself and its ally slavery as two "divine" institutions, it is remarkable to observe how silent and dumb stood the religious press and the pulpit. When called on to aid the reform, these two instrumentalities of the Christian religion, with rare—very rare institutions—stand dumb and say never a word. Or, if they are forced by some who sustain them to say any thing about Masonry, they pretend to be very much afraid of using over strong and violent measures. They are exceedingly careful, lest in casting out evil spirits from society, they should tear and lacerate society. They want to cast out devils easily, so that even the patient himself shall never know that the work has been done! In following out this tender mode of treatment, they proceed to find excuses for Masonry, and pet it with kind words, as if it did not mean to be naughty at all, for surely, when we pray, are we not directed to go into our closet, and pray in secret, as the lodge does? The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who preaches money-making, taking his texts from Wall street, instead of from the Bible, complains of Anti-masonry as if it were traps or pit-falls, needlessly placed around the church to keep out good, pious Masons from thronging up to the pulpit to hear the words of One who "in secret said nothing." Mr. Beecher does not command his Masonic hearers to repent as a needed means of reformation, but he complains of Anti-masons who would prevent these Masons from thronging up to liberal pulpits where their sin is never to be once mentioned!

We were bitterly amused the other day—amused and pained at one and the same time, to see the effect of this kind of preaching in one instance. A merchant, who has been accused of defrauding the revenue (in secret of course) paid six thousand dollars as a compromise, in order to be free from the horrors of a wounded reputation, as he belonged to Mr. Beecher's church, and did not wish to bring additional scandal upon it. He was honest, but submitted to be blackmailed, in secret, rather than throw even a suspicious spot upon Mr. Beecher's preaching. Secrecy is very valuable to Mr. Beecher's church.

But it is a great mistake to suppose that secret arts and practices find any encouragement in the Bible. That passage of scripture which directs the Christian to go into his closet to pray, does not intend to inculcate merely and alone that unostentatious secrecy which Masonry preaches, but virtually never practices; but it means also to inculcate innocence, and purity, and honesty in business transactions. The Greek word, which is translated closet, does not mean our closet of modern times; but it means a store-house, granary, or depository of wealth; that is, the private place where a man stores all his riches. The command, therefore, to "enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret"—means that one should enter in privately, and alone, among the stores of his riches, and there, kneeling down, humbly ask God's blessing on those riches.

How many wealthy men in America in these days—how many rich hearers of the word from Mr. Beecher, could do this with prayerful sincerity and truth?

Mr. Beecher does not discriminate, but receives all alike, publicans, harlots and Masons, at the Lord's table, which he so liberally administers. The charity which he preaches is universal, infinite, and he bestows it freely on all. Surpassing St. Paul, who directed his followers to come out and separate themselves from, and not be yoked together with certain characters, some of whom were exceedingly like modern Masons, he aspires to the higher and broader functions of the Saviour himself, in bestowing mercy and charity. He imitates the forgiving power of the Saviour, but has little or no relish for the suffering and the sacrifice. Wealth-getting is made easy, and Masonry finds countenance and comfort under his preaching.

We of the Cynosure fully admit the great intellectual power of Mr. Beecher, and can fully estimate the effect of that power when directed to the sustentation of Masonry; but we are not discouraged. Fully convinced of the necessity of a moral reform, and to that end of ridding the country of Masonry, we shall steadily pursue our course, whatever giants may stand in our way, or whether evil spirits stand dumb, or foam or rage. Experience of a Seceding Mason.

BY REV. A. T. RILEY.

I had long entertained a good opinion of Masonry, and had argued in its favor. I had many friends who were Masons, some of them Christian men in whom I had the utmost confidence; had read the Masonic Monitor, taking particular notice of everything that I considered good in its teachings. I had never read an Anti-masonic book or paper—had heard some things that I considered bad about them—but thought, as many others do, that they were false. At times, I thought I would never become a Mason; at other times thought it would help me in my work as a Christian minister, and I had best join them. Finally I asked a Christian minister, in whom I had great confidence, who is I believe, a Knight Templar, if he would advise me to become a Mason: he said he would. I then made up my mind to join as soon as possible. I made it a matter of prayer; tried to commit my way unto the Lord, and, as far as possible, tried to act with an eye single to his glory. I thought I could reach men with the Gospel that I could reach in no other way; that I could obtain help in church enterprises, and individual pecuniary aid, that would make me more efficient in my ministerial labors. I prayed God if it was wrong for me to join, to prevent it; if it was his will, to permit it. (The question may be asked, Why, then, did God permit me to get into it if it is wrong? Two solutions present themselves to my mind. The first is, I was in a partially backslidden condition, and it may be that God could not lead me as he would. I was not walking in the noon-day, cloudless light of the Sun of Righteousness. The second is, I speak of it cautiously, it may be that God, who sees the end from the beginning, saw that I would come out from it: and because of having been a Mason, have greater power and influence in working against the abomination.) I applied for admission, and was accepted. When I was asked in the preparation rooms, if I would cheerfully conform to all the ancient usages and customs of the order, I replied, Yes; if there is nothing against conscience. One man said he guessed there was not. But when required to divest myself of clothing, with the exception of shirt, and then put on their Masonic drawers, it was certainly against my modesty. When required to say that I had come hither "to learn to subdue my passions," I thought it rather a hard saying, at least for a Christian man. The idea of a Christian going to a Masonic lodge to learn to subdue his passions!

My suspicions of the terrible evil of the institution were not arroused much, if any, until I came to the obligation in the Fellow Craft degree. When I came to the clause in this obligation, "Furthermore do you promise and swear, that you will obey all regular signs and summons, given, handed, sent or thrown to you by the hand of a brother Fellow Craft Mason, ... or lodge of such, if it be within the length of your cable-tow," the thought of Morgan's murder came into my mind. I was terribly excited, though I suppose I did not show it. In this excited state I took the remainder of the obligation: though when I had to say that I did it without any mental reservation, I thought I would never help kill any one. I wonder how I ever could have been so guilty as to take such an obligation! Under those circumstances, I could get no rest until I went to the Master of the lodge about it, and he told me that the obligation was taken with the understanding that I would never be called upon to do anything conflicting with duty to God, country or family.

(But how was it in the case of Morgan? Men were summoned to attend the lodges, and finally, after consultations had been held all over the country, it was decided that he must die! Eight men had to cast lots to see which should kill him. Three of them drew lots with D—for death—on them, and they put him to death! And this is only conforming to "ancient customs of the order.") I was satisfied with his explanation, and went on.

But in taking the obligation of Master Mason, my suspicions were again arroused at the clause, "Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election," though by keeping before my mind the assurance of the Master of the lodge, that there was nothing required of me conflicting with other duties, I went through with the third degree. I tried to reconcile these things with conscience, but they were like Banquo's ghost—they would not down. I attended a camp-meeting shortly afterward, and there, while praying for a personal blessing from God, Masonry came up before my mind. I promised God if I found that Masonry was wrong I would give it up. He took me at my word, and poured out his Spirit upon me. This was but a short time before I started for conference. I was a probationer of the second year, in the Minnesota Conference of the M. E. church. On my way to the conference, I passed through the town where my wife's people lived, she had gone before on a visit: and I found them in great excitement about Masonry. I found that they had an expose of Masonry, written by a German minister and published (in German) by Hitchcock and Walden. When I found that my wife had read the book, and knew of the practices of the Masons in their nightly orgies, I was ashamed of the institution. I was almost tempted to get the book and destroy it. I tried to keep her relations from knowing that I was a Mason, but their talk had a great effect on me. At St. Paul I stopped with my old class-leader, a man full of faith, and about the first thing, before he knew I was a Mason, he commenced talking against it. I was getting hit on every side. But when I got to conference, among so many ministers who were Masons, I felt reassured. I had received but little pay from my charge for three years, and was in great need, both myself and family. A good Christian and warm-hearted brother started a subscription to get me a suit of clothes—giving four dollars himself. He said to me several times, "I want you to consider that this comes from the Lord." But a prominent minister, in writing to me afterward, said a part of it was from "Masons, because they were such, and felt bound to help the needy." (Masons of course.) The conference gave me sixty-five dollars, which helped me pay some debts and get some clothing for my wife. I was ordained deacon, blest spiritually, and came back full of hope for the future; and with a better opinion of Masonry.

I went to my new appointment, and lo! almost the first thing, I providentially came across "Finney on Masonry." This completely upset me. I saw plainly that I must give up Masonry. I read everything I could get on the subject: "Bernard's Light on Masonry," Judge "Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge," "The Broken Seal," "The Image of the Beast," copies of the "Cynosure," "Methodist Free Press," "Free Methodist," etc. I was surprised to find that Masonry was so fully exposed, and became convinced that it was my duty also to renounce it, and, as did Finney and other Christian men, expose it to the world; that the obligations are not morally binding on any one. I was deceived as to its true character; and I have God's Word for it. "If a soul swear, ... and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing."—Lev. v. 4, 5.

Of course this raised a storm of indignation. I received a letter advising me to say nothing on the matter; and stating that I had a man in my charge "who might be filling good charges to-day, but he is unacceptable, even to those who care nothing about Masonry, because he will not let it alone." The man is Rev. A. C. Hand, known to many of your readers, a man of excelent talents, but is a strong Anti-mason. He is a superannuate in the Minnesota Conference, but is able to take work, and wanted to, but he could not keep still about Masonry. This letter led me, in connection with other things, to conclude to have nothing more to do with a church so controlled by Masonic influence. But where should I go? The Lord sent Bro. T. S. La Due out in that country to hold quarterly meetings. I attended the meeting. I had been prejudiced against the Free Methodists, but God took away all my prejudice, convinced me that he was with them, baptised me with the Holy Ghost, so that I lost all my strength and—well acted just like a Free Methodist. Glory be to God! I felt that I was among kindred spirits. I asked God to direct me: and I finally asked Bro. La Due, (chairman of the district,) if he could give me a place to work. It seemed that the Lord had a place already prepared for me. I wrote to the M. E. presiding elder that I must withdraw from the M. E. church; giving my reasons for it. I then united with the Free Methodists, and persecution began. Men have commenced to say all manner of evil against me falsely. An ex-presiding elder of the M. E. church says, "All thinking men will look upon you as a perjured man!" But I will not take space to enumerate the trials I have been passing through. God has wonderfully blesssed and sustained me. He has given me courage and strength to lecture with Bro. La Due, in the presence of Masons who were doing all in their power to make the people believe I was lying. I have been cited to appear for trial for violation of obligation by disclosing the secrets of Masonry, and renouncing all allegiance to the order. The penalty is death. The committee appointed by the lodge to take testimony in the case, is composed of a representative elect to the legislature; a steward in the M. E. church, and a prominent lawyer, I hardly think they dare attempt to take my life; but they will do all in their power to ruin my reputation, and hinder me in this world. But I trust in the Lord with all my heart, and lean not to my own understanding. In all my ways I try to acknowledge him; and he does direct my paths. Glory be to his name!

"He leadeth me—oh blessed thought,
O words with heavenly comfort frought."

"In small things," says Spurgeon, "lie the crucibles and the touchstones. Any hypocrite will come to the Sabbath worship, but it is not every hypocrite that will attend prayer meetings, or read the Bible in secret, or speak privately of the things of God to the saints."

A Question of the Hour.

Thus it is everywhere; most of our ministers are known to be Masons, and most of the few who say they are not Masons, do, nevertheless, act like Masons. When all, or nearly all the officers of a given army are in sworn league with the enemy, is it not time that such army were disbanded? Is it not high time that the loyal soldiers were placed under better officers? If the unnatural connection continues, are not the loyal soldiers liable to become as disloyal as their officers? And even though they should not, are they not liable to be betrayed into the hand of the enemy? We think these questions demand prompt and profound attention. The issue is upon us, and there is no avoiding it. Nor can any one of ordinary intelligence plead ignorance as an excuse for not acting, for the facts are palpable and indisputable. For instance, it is an indisputable fact that most of our ministers are in oath-bound league with the Masonic and kindred combinations; it is an indisputable fact that Masonry rejects Jesus Christ; rejects the Bible; for it publishes all this. It is an indisputable fact that the minister who does not join the lodge, or, at least, submit to lodge rule, is persecuted in various ways, and even excluded from the ministry altogether, in the M. E. church. Nor is it much better with the private members; if they do not submit to Masonic rule, they are annoyed, injured, crushed in a great variety of ways; and when by such means the tools of the lodge fail to bring them to submit to lodge rule, or cause them to run away from the church, then they drive them out sometimes by a mock trial, and sometimes without any trial. Nor are we much more secure with regard to rights and privileges as citizens; many are silent, lest their character or business be destroyed; while others submit in profound silence, lest their houses should be burnt over their heads. As to Masonic preaching, some of them say, "Masonry is the darkest and best defined blasphemy I ever read of, but I would not give much for that man's life who would divulge." In proof of this, a good Mason, who is also a member of a Congregational church in Detroit, does not hesitate to say of the man that would divulge, "I would assist to cut his throat; to tear out his tongue by the roots," and so on to the end of the Masonic penalty. And not far from where I now write, there lives another good Mason, who a short time since said to one of his neighbors, "We Masons do not fear either God, man, or the devil." A Methodist preacher, too, said he would join the lodge, and gave the following as his reason for doing so: "I have the support of the brethren, and if I join the lodge I will have the support of the world also." He did join the lodge in this place.

Such are a few, and only a few of what I claim to be indisputable facts, and names can be furnished if necessary. So clear it is that the issue is upon us, and there is but one alternative left for us, namely, submit to the Masonic yoke, or manfully contend for what is dearer to us than life itself. I need not say, that the Masonic yoke is the meanest, the most galling of all yokes. Hence, he who submits to it, is not worthy of being called a man. And as it is now acknowledged that preachers join the lodge, that they may get money both from saints and sinners, it is hoped that the saints will find no difficulty in finding better use for their money than to give it to such unworthy objects. Nor can they fail to see that so long as they accept of, and support Masonic preachers, as their pastors, so long the evil of which we complain will continue and increase.—Rev. John Levington, in Meth. Free Press.

The objects of this Association are to expose, withstand and remove secret societies and other like anti-Christian organizations from church and state.

The Association originated in a meeting held Oct. 30th, 1867, in the City Hall of Aurora, Ill., attended by persons opposed to secret societies, where a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements for a National Convention. This was held in Pittsburgh, May 5th–7th, 1868, when the National Association was organized. Its subsequent meetings have been held: Chicago, June 8th–10th, 1869; Cincinnati, June 9th–11th, 1870; Worcester, Mass., June 7th–9th, 1871; Oberlin, Ohio, May 21st–23d, 1872; Monmouth, Ill., May 14th–16th, 1873. Its presiding officers have been in order: Bishop D. Edwards, Prof. J. C. Webster, Judge F. D. Parish, Gen. J. W. Phelps, Pres. J. Blanchard.

The Association employs a General Agent and Lecturer, and has secured State lecturers for Indiana, Ohio and Illinois, whose names appear in the list of lecturers. The support of the Association is entirely voluntary. Funds are greatly needed to carry on the work already begun, and contributions are hereby solicited from every friend of the reform. Send by post-office order, registered letter or draft to the Treasurer, 11 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

THE OHIO STATE AGENT writes: "My heart is certainly in the work in which I am engaged; but financially things look exceedingly dark." It makes one's heart ache, and we trust it will lead the people of Ohio to forward contributions promptly for Mr. Caldwell's support, to read such words as these we quote from his letter. Here a noble Christian minister, who for the love he has for this work of reform, feeling the great importance of this cause, has responded to the loud call for laborers, and leaving the ordinary ministrations of his denomination, where he can command a good, sure salary, has entered the field as State Lecturer. Shall such a man ever have cause to write such a letter again? God forbid. The Grange alone we presume costs Ohio farmers a hundred times the amount needed to support our State Lecturers, and yet the Grange is a curse instead of a blessing. Surely Ohio friends of the cause will pay their own noble self sacrificing State Lecturer IN ADVANCE if need be. Address contributions to Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Carey, Ohio. They will be reported by him at the Cynosure office.

Reform News

—The General Agent was at Oberlin on the Sabbath, and has appointments in Medina county, Ohio, this week.

—The reformers in Indiana will be glad to learn that their efficient State Agent is about to remove to Ligonier, in Noble county, where he will have better advantages for reaching his field. He has lectured twenty-eight times within the last month. The Executive Committee of the State Association have appointed him dellegate to Syracuse.

—The letters of two weeks ago on the Morenci, (Mich,) murder, have awakened some apprehension lest Elder Baird had become the victim of the lodge. But a late letter from him written at home dispels such a fear.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard starts for New York next week. He will speak on the way at and near Pittsburgh, Pa.

Ohio Anti-Secret State Convention.

After consulting with the friends of our reform as generally as practicable as to the time and place of holding our State Convention for organization, we have concluded that we can do no better than to appoint it at Flat Rock, Seneca Co., O. This is not as central as we could desire, but all the circumstances indicate that this will be the most successful place for such a gathering on short notice. In this appointment we have the concurrence of Rev. L. Moore, President of Northern Central Ohio organization, and other friends, and hope that it may meet the approbation of our friends generally throughout the State. As the National meeting at Syracuse is fast approaching, and as we hope to be fitly represented in that body, we fix the time for holding our State meeting to commence Tuesday evening, the 19th of May, and to continue until Thursday evening, the 21st. We hope all our friends who can possibly atttend will do so, as the convention will be one of much interest to our cause in this State; and we hope the influence will be healthy on other States. Come one, come all, and let us put this State upon a basis in which she can be effectively aggressive against this enemy of God and humanity. We wish to be able to appoint one or more delegates at this meeting from every county in the State to the National meeting in June. Hope the friends will all take an interest in securing funds from each county sufficient to defray the expenses of their respective delegates. We will see that able speakers are present on the occasion. Papers favorable please copy.

D. S. CALDWELL, State Agent.

Carey, O., April 13th, '74.

P. S.—Persons from all parts of the State will stop off at Bellview, and will be conveyed to place of meeting.

From the Indiana Agent.

PORTLAND, Ind., April 13th, 1874.

DEAR K:—Our convention at Liber on Wednesday, the 8th,—being the first semi-annual meeting of the Jay County Association, was eminently a success. Here, as in other places, there is an extensive anti-secrecy sentiment, which only needs developing and crystalizing. And the work of development and crystalization goes on bravely. I received a letter from Bro. Wilson Milligan and wife, requesting me to visit this region, which I did in July last. At that time no lectures had been given in this county; and as the coming of an anti-secrecy lecturer had been extensively heralded by friend and foe, no small stir was made when I arrived and began my work. Some opposition was made, which, as usual, proved to be "wind in our sails." Bro. Milligan deserves great credit, also his wife, for the great interest they have manifested in awakening public attention to the Anti-masonic movement, and in inaugurating an active sentiment, the good results of which they are now beginning to see.

This is my fourth visit to Jay county, and the progress of the cause since the first, is very encouraging indeed. The Association is now fairly under headway. Wilson Milligan, of whom even Masons are obliged to say, "he is an honest, reliable man," is its president. His white locks, his plain, old-fashioned ways, and his record as an abolitionist, who was severely censured for "preaching politics" from the pulpit, in addition to which, being a resident of the county since 1837, and hence being known all over it, all seems to point him out as "the man for the place" he occupies. Gomer A. Jones, of the firm of Jones Bros., the principal hardware men in Portland, and a graduate of Wheaton College, is the gentlemanly and efficient secretary. He renders entire satisfaction. The friends in Jay county have occasion to congratulate themselves upon having secured his hearty co-operation; and as he is young like myself, I trust I shall often be permitted to meet him in the front, where the action is hottest. The treasurer's place is very fitly filled by my friend and brother, Dr. John A. Morehouse, with whom I am now stopping. He is a "United Brethren," "dyed in the wool," and like Mr. Jones, is a young man. These are the principal officers: and led by such men, by the blessing of God, Jay county will triumph over the workings of the devil—grange and all. A political convention is to be held in July, and a full ticket placed in the field. The next regular semi-annual meeting will be at Westchester in the Congregational church.

I go on the first train south to meet the Executive Committee at Westfield to-morrow. I expect to see the friends at Richmond about holding our next National meeting there. I think Indiana must have the next meeting.

RICHMOND.

I have just arrived here, and have seen Mr. Nicholson, a friend of some prominence, and have presented the interests of the anti-secrecy cause. He informs me that the friends of the Richmond Yearly meeting, have recently made their testimony against the lodges more definite, and more comprehensive, excluding even the good (for nothing) grange from a place in their church. This is as it should be. And now that the graceless character of the grange is generally known, let us hear the testimony of the churches. There has been no anti-secrecy work done here, outside of the Friend's church. Richmond is having its share of the "temperance excitement," and much good is being done. Out of about thirty saloons and whiskey selling "holes," only six have refused to surrender, and they are so "blockaded" that business is dull with them. Only three doors from where I sit, two faithful Quakeresses are sitting outside the door of a saloon, amply provided with shawls and umbrellas to protect against cold and the snow which is falling. Shortly they will be relieved by two others; and thus the siege is kept up till the saloon is closed at night. By this means the most profitable customers, (the semi-respectable "social drinkers") are prevented from going in; they cannot so far disgrace themselves as to face these brave women, who, with a determination, and a degree of self-sacrifice truly wonderful, have taken their stand directly between them and ruin. The result will be, doubtless, that saloon keeping will get to be both very unpopular and unprofitable, and will be abandoned.

INDIANAPOLIS.

I arrived here this evening at 4 o'clock. I am staying with Bro. Robinson, whom I find in good spirits.

WESTFIELD, April 14th: evening.

Hamilton County Association held its third regular meeting to-day, and transacted some important business, which you will see by reading the minutes, soon to be published. The attendance was not as large as could be wished, but a characteristic earnestness was manifest. I met Bro. Wm. Givens to-day for the first time. The Friends in Hamilton county are highly pleased with him and have arranged to have him serve them about three weeks, just before the political convention, which is to meet on the 22d of July. He is a fine specimen of physical manhood, being tall and graceful, and a fine speaker. His experience in the lodge (as a Master Mason) is related by himself in a manner calculated to interest, and impress all honest hearers with the truthfulness of what he says. The Executive Committee of the State Association have endorsed him as their associate lecturer. Hereafter let the Anti-masons of Indiana remember that Bro. Givens will be ready to labor for them, provided they will take steps to secure him a compensation in each locality. He lives in Clay county (east of Terra Haute,) and those of my readers who desire lectures anywhere in the western or southern part of the State will hereafter depend upon him. Please write him immediately that your locality may have the advantage of hearing a man who has been in the lodge. I am yours in a pure gospel,

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

The Jay County Anti-secrecy and Reform Association, Indiana.

LIBER, April 8, 1874.

The Association met at 10 o'clock A. M. The morning session was occupied in devotional exercises, reading the constitution, enrolling members, and appointing committees to prepare resolutions for the afternoon session.

A 1 o'clock P. M., the Association assembled and the following topics were discussed:

Can any one intelligently accept and hold the essential doctrines of the Bible and conscientiously maintain membership in any secret society? and, What is our duty as followers of Jesus toward adhering members of secret societies?

The Committee on Resolutions made the following report, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we, the Jay County Anti-secrecy and Reform Association, hereby declare that while we deplore the general dishonesty and wide-spread corruption with which our land is afflicted, we believe such a state of things to be the legitimate fruits of the various secret orders of our country.

Resolved, That we unhesitatingly adopt the language of Daniel Webster, who, in speaking of Masonry, said, "Among the obligations which are found to be imposed upon its members, there are such as are entirely incompatible with the duty of good citizens; that all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of just alarm to others; and that the formation and administrations of all such oaths and obligation should be prohibited by law."

Resolved, That we hail with joy the progress which is being made by the anti-secrecy reform in all parts of our country. We also note with gratitude the prosperity of the Christian Cynosure, the organ of this reform, and gladly endorse and recommend it to the reading public as the bold and uncompromising enemy of wrong; that next to the Bible it is worthy a place in every family; that we will do all we can to extend its circulation, and generally to circulate and get the people to read literature giving light on the secrecy question.

Resolved, That we respectfully demand that our county papers keep their columns open for the fair and honest publication of all proper communications and news relating to both sides of the secrecy question.

Resolved, That we look upon the grange movement, organized as it was by leading Masons and Odd-fellows, as a cunning trick of the lodges to tie the hands of the farmers from acting against them, and to fleece them of their hard earned money. We warn the people earnestly and affectionately against the deceptions of the grange, and the confiding of their actions and means into irresponsible hands.

The following resolution was passed after quite an animated discussion:

WHEREAS, We believe that Freemasonry is opposed to the religion of Christ, and free government,

Resolved, That we will not recognize any known adhering Mason as a Christian minister.

Rev. Aaron Worth was elected to represent the Association as a delegate to the National Association, to be held at Syracuse, N. Y.

EVENING SESSION.

Committee on political action made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

In accordance with the resolutions passed at the first meeting of the Association, authorizing the Executive Committee to take political action, we recommend the Executive Committee to publish a call for a county convention to nominate candidates for the coming election, the Convention to be held at Portland, July 15, 1874.

The first annual meeting of the Association will be held at Westchester. The time of meeting will be made known hereafter.

At the close of the business meeting Rev. Aaron Worth gave a very interesting lecture, stating his objections to Masonry and secret societies in general. His remarks merited and received the best attention of the large audience, who obtained more light on the character of secret societies than they could from years of gazing toward the east in a darkened lodge room, "seeking for light."

The State Lecturer, Rev. J. T. Kiggins, followed Mr. Worth in a short but clear and forcible speech, showing that it is much easier to go into the trap than to come out, and the best way is to keep out of the soul ensnarpower of secret obligations.

WILSON MILLIGAN, President.
G. A. JONES, Secretary.

The Organization in Fulton Co., O.

Space permits only a condensed account of this meeting, which was reported briefly in a late number. The meeting was held in the Popple Grove church, on March 31. Rev. D. S. Caldwell was elected temporary chairman, and John Whitaker, secretary, and committees on resolutions and permanent organization appointed. The constitution reported and adopted, contained these among the other usual provisions:

It shall be the duty of the secretary to take the minutes of each meeting, and record them in a book provided for such purpose; also to edit for publication in the Christian Cynosure, or such other paper as this association may select,—such items of each meeting as the association may direct.

3. It is the purpose of this association, and shall be the duty of the members of the same, to oppose by all laudable means, both in their organized capacity and individually, all organized secrecy, regarding as we do all such organizations as detrimental to the best interest of the church and State, and should not be tolerated under any republican form of government.

4. In order to meet the enemy, who are fully organized, politically, we deem it important that this organization shall, wherever it may seem practicable, act in political concert, make their own nominations, and vote for their own candidates, at least until the corruptions of the present political parties are fully corrected.

The committee on resolutions reported the following:

Resolved, That the disclosures which have been made of the principles and obligations of speculative Freemasonry, prove it to be an institution of dangerous tendency, liable to be used by the ambitious and designing, as an engine for exalting unworthy men, and effecting improper measures, placing the citizen in a situation in which his duty to his country must in many instances conflict with his obligations to the fraternity, and weakening the sanctions of morality and religion, by the multiplication of profane oaths and an irreverent familiarity with religious forms and sacred things.

Resolved, That it is a feature of our government, that all measures should be open and amenable to public inspection, and the existence of any secret society is hostile to the spirit of our institutions.

Resolved, That the existence of secret societies in these United States, justify fears and suspicion as to their object, in the uninitiated, which has a tendency to distract society, and sow ill-will and dissensions in community.

Resolved, That this convention is satisfied, from the evidence adduced before them, of the substantial truths of the Masonic obligation, and that we hereby offer our protest against organized secrecy in all its forms.

On motion, J. W. McQuillin was elected President; Judson Smith, Vice President; John Whitaker, Secretary; D. Zimmerman, Treasurer.

On motion, the first annual meeting of the association was appointed at Spring Hill, O., on the ninth day of June, 1874, at 1 o'clock, P. M. Bro. Caldwell to secure speaker for said meeting. On motion, we request the Christian Cynosure, Religious Telescope, and N. W. Republican, to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

J. W. MCQUILLIN, President, Delta.

Masonry in the Navy.

YORK, Pa., April 10, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure:

In nautical language the right side of a ship is called the "starboard" and the left side the "port" side. In the navy every crew is divided into two "watches" called the starboard and port watches. The gunner's mate of the Wissachickon had a small room on the port side of the gundeck for his armory. The quarter gunner and himself were the only persons who had any right to go into the armory. The gunner's mate was held responsible for everything in the armory, which contained all the small arms of the ship, except the spikes, cutlasses, and commissioned officer's side arms. Every man on a ship of war has his post, and is required to be there as soon as the drum beats to quarters. Every man too has his own arms and equipments. When the drum beats to quarters, every man runs to the armory to receive his fighting tools from the gunner's mate and quarter gunner, and then takes his place at one of the large guns.

During the Rebellion, in the South Atlantic Blockading Squadron, the two watches kept watch at night alternately four hours. The watch on duty always posted two sentinels and slept on its arms on deck. Every ship of war carries all tools required to repair and keep in order all its small arms. It also has good mechanics to do such work.

The gunner's mate of the Wisshickon was a Freemason. He had the square and compass on his clothes' bag. He was intelligent and a good seaman, but took no pains to conceal the fact that he was a "copperhead." When he gave the men their arms at night, he would give one man a Harpers Ferry musket with Sharp's rifle catridges; another would get a carbine with musket cartridges, another would get a Sharp's rifle with carbine cartridges, and no one would be able to load his weapon. The men would try to trade arms and ammunition so as to get something they might use, but the cunning Mason generally made out to foil at least one half of them. When the drum beat to quarters he would mix up all the arms, cartridges, caps, etc., to such a degree that nearly all were useless, and then there would be no time to hunt or trade. If there was a night call to quarters there would be such a mixture of weapons, etc., as Jeff. Davis' best friend could not have beaten.

At this time I was perhaps the only one on the vessel that knew anything about Masonry, and my knowledge was perhaps very limited. I did not then suspect the Masons of treason. The crew to a man called it carelessness; but he was not a careless man in other matters. When I give all my facts the world will be able to decide whether this man was only very careless or a very bold rebel.

Yours for the truth.

Women's Work for Temperance.

BUNKER HILL, Ill. Apr. 13th.

Editors Cynosure:

I write to tell you we are pleased with the Cynosure's new departue and that the outer circle of the great temperance wave has reached this land of vines and vintners. The waters are troubled and it is hoped for the healing of the people.

Deborah awoke last week and with pledge in hand, went forth to find men to do their so-long-neglected duty, and non-votersto use their influence, to induce those who have the privilege of suffrage to vote for prohibition candidates at the coming election.

She was respectfully treated, and procured over a hundred voters names, (there are about 250 in town), with nearly all the non-voters. Daily union prayer-meetings are held, and mass-meetings, two evenings in the week.

The several saloons were visited by the Committee. No names were obtained, but the keepers appreciate the situation, and the interest is constantly increasing.

This reform movement follows in the wake of a revival that has roused the whole community to action. Many feared they should sacrifice their party or principle, but as the pledge has become strengthened by its signatures, the timid temperance men are sending in their signatures.

Now, that woman knows she has an influence in suppressing saloons, will she not find out that there are other evils in existence that there are enemies to her happiness.

ONE OF THE TEM. COM.

Do Masons ever ask Men to Join the Lodge?

EARLVILLE ILL, March 28th 1874.

Th's question has so often been asked and answered in the affirmative that farther testimony is perhaps useless; but I met to-day on the cars with a case in point which it may not be amiss to state. Commencing with a gentleman from L——, he remarked, I know that what you say is true. The Masons have their lodge over my store and I have often been asked to join, but never have. I joined the Sons of Temperance some time ago, and believe them to be modeled after Masonry."

He expressed a decided disapproval of the whole cabalistic family, and thought that if a man was loyal to Christ, his church, and his ordinance of civil government he could get along well enough without grips, pass-words and secret tokens of recognition. Would that we had more such young men of like faith and practice!

OUR MAIL.

Wm. B. Ogelsby, Ridge Prairie, Ill., writes:

"The trouble here, is, the people are so wicked. Many like our principles or politics, but not our religion. Now friends, I am in favor of one-half the paper being truly religious, and on the other half, politics, or the best manner of managing governmental affairs; and let each half of the paper be well represented."

James Stuart, Hokendagua, Pa., writes:

"There are but four of us here who are really opposed to the order in this community. By the aid of the Cynosure, Bernard and a little experience, we are not only able to give the grips, signs, etc., but make them (Freemasons) expose the institution more than we who are opposed to them. That is, when they do not adhere strictly to their jewel, which is silence. Oh, how wilfully ignorant are the minds of the people."

J. R. Shearer, E. Nodaway, Ia., writes:

"Your paper, for which I subscribed a few weeks ago, is just making a stir in this neighborhood, please send me a few sample copies, and we shall try to get up a club."

W. W. Kelly, Kewanee, Ill, writes:

"I am greatly pleased with the appearance of the paper. I am with you to the end of the war, till he shall come whose right it is."

W. W. Hulet, Mason City, Ia., writes:

"Professors of religion, that claim to be anti secret, are so bound by the speech of people, especially of Masonic ministers, that they dare not "cry aloud spare not and show the people their sins," and some of those that were Anti-masonic, have joined the grange, and at once their mouths are shut, as to saying anything against secretism (i. e. oath-bound). I notice the grange is a very large tributary to Masonry."

E. P. Towsley, De Kalb, N. Y., writes:

"A day or two ago a paper of the above name was handed to me, and from its outspoken sentiments against an anti Republican and anti-Christian, so largely on the increase, is in my opinion a step in the right direction; and I hope and trust your paper will be sustained."

He sends his subscription There are multitudes of people scattered through the country, who would be delighted to see the Cynosure, who have not yet had their attention called to it. A letter similar to the above, was received from Ontario, Canada, two days ago. This shows work for our readers.

E. J. Chalfant, York, Pa., writes:

"As the Cynosure is now greatly enlarged and improved, and by far the healthiest paper on the face of the earth, I think it should have the largest circulation of any paper "in the known world." I intend hereafter to enclose one of your tracts in every letter I write, for the purpose of extending your circulation. If all your readers will do likewise, sly and crafty rings will soon be pretty well watched. Let all do their duty now!"

P. B. Bates, Constantine, Mich., writes:

"I feel a deep interest in the cause your paper sustains, and truly believe it is on the side with Christ. My father subscribed for your paper first of any one about here. I have assisted him what I could ever since."

H. P. McClurkin, New Concord, O., writes:

"May the Lord prosper you in your work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope."

Robert Stockwell, Lafayette, Ind., in his eighty-ningth year, renews his subscription, and writes:

"I doubt if anything can be done here for the cause, unless an influential lecturer will visit Lafayette and wake the people up on the great evil of Masonry, and other secret clans. They are all evil, and only evil."

Quincy Baldwin, Tonganotie, Kan., writes:

"I have read your paper for five years, and do not want to do without it."

John Harley, Pottstown, Pa., writes: "We have a strong secret society community here." If coming events cast their shadows before, it is time that Pennsylvania roused up on this subject. —(See article on the Mollie Maguires in another part of this paper).

G. W. D. White, Boone, Ia., in a letter which we have not room to quote, writes of the impossibility of being true Christians and good Masons. We can join with him in the wish that every impenitent reader of this paper would "Come to Jesus," would "Fear God and keep his commandments." We offer as a substitute for the false and empty consolations of Masonry; the Christian religion as revealed in the Bible.

Wm. Shaw, Rushsylvania, O., writes:

"Please give us a strong piece on the evil of novels, we believe they are doing as much harm as intemperance, and there should be for them a prohibition law." You will find articles on this subject from time to time. There is one in type soon to be issued, now. If any of our readers will send us a good original article on this subject, we will be glad to insert it.

Sam'l Beighler, Marysville, O., writes:

"I am the only man that takes this paper in this section. I let my neighbors read it and they like it well." Can you not send in a club of new subscribers?

Hosea Washburn, Madison, Maine, writes:

"The Masons tell me here that the secrets of Masonry have never been revealed. What do you think?"

Those secrets technically called the secrets of Masonry have been revealed. All the transactions of lodges have not of course been made public, but their oaths, their ritual, etc., have been revealed. One hundred and four seceding Masons testified to the truth of Bernard's Revelation at Le Roy, N. Y., July 4th, 1828. Multitudes have testified since that time, and our state and general agents find now many living witnesses in different parts of the country, who testify to the truth (in every essential particular) of the revelations of Bernard and Capt. Wm. Morgan.

A. D. Tomlinson, M. D., Bloomingdale, Ind:

"I am doing what I can here to encourage the good cause."

E. Darling, Paint Creek, Washtenaw Co., Mich., now in his 84th year writes:

It is evident the grange movement is a Masonic breakwater to stave off the final issue. It is quite evident to my mind this swindle out of the farmers will operate in the end as a powerful means to unfold satanic deception."

In closing he gives all associated in this work his benediction.

C. S. Gitchell, Attica, Ind., writes:

"I have no doubt I can secure more subscribers because of the enlargement of the Cynosure. These two (enclosed) I could not have obtained at the former size of the paper."

J. W. Searing, Dover, N. J., writes:

"I could use one hundred copies of the new style Cynosure in soliciting subscriptions."

N. Bingham, Oneonta, N. Y., sends a club of three month subscribers with $5,00 and writes.

"You will please send to these twelve above named persons as directed. Hoping and praying that they may be notes of warning to awaken the receivers to duty and action in the all-important cause,—that they will continue to take them. Yours," etc.

J. N. Lloyd, Belvidere, Ill., Shows the right sort of perseverance when he says he has tried though without success to get new subscribers adding:

"But shall still keep on trying."

He sends for extra copies of the new paper.

Forty Years Ago.

A Call to Action.

Let us then, brethren and fellow-citizens, from this day forward, no longer inquire when or where this hydra-headed monster had its birth; for whether we trace it to the dark dens of idolatry among the Jews and Persians, or seek for it in the Pythagorean or Egyptian mysteries; whether we derive it from the building of Babel or of Solomon's Temple; whether it came down to us from the Eleusinians of Greece, or the caverns of the British Druids; whether we owe it to the Man of the Mountain, the famous, or rather most infamous, father of the Syriac Order of Assassins, or to the more modern Scotch Mystics and Murderers of York; whether, indeed, we find that ancient idolatry and superstition were in reality Freemasonry, or that Masonry has borrowed its bloody code and blasphemous rites and ties from ancient idolatry and superstition; whether, in short, any one or neither of these propositions be true, one thing is certain, that Freemasonry is equally wicked and worthless; equally destitute of true charity, benevolence, patriotism, morality and religion. She is still like the whited sepulchre, or the Sodom apple, fair without but foul within.

That I have justly likened Masonry to the serpent of Eden, the author, in a spiritual sense, of the ruin of our race, cannot be denied; for its moral and political ravages would have been as wide-spread and as fatal as the spiritual havoc and ruin occasioned by the malign efforts of its prototype, had not the sacrifice of the martyred Morgan been destined by Almighty wisdom and Divine goodness, to open our eyes to the dark and sinuous windings, the wily and treacherous machinations, the steady, foul, and deadly aim, with which it was moving onward to blast forever the fruits of our Revolution, and prostrate in the dust the proud pillars of our liberty!

Let us not, then, once more I beseech you, fellow-citizens, stop to inquire when and where it originated, or from whence it came hither. Be it the offspring of earth or hell—of heaven, we know it cannot be—let us look only to its character and designs, as developed in the mobocratic and criminal outrages at Batavia, and the still more criminal, the bloody consumation of those outrages, at Fort Niagara; and let us determine this day to wipe the stain of its horrible oaths from our souls, and burst its iniquitous bonds assunder.

I could go on and recite the history of its triumphs and its defeats, or degradations, its corruptions and its crimes. I could show it under proscription, and justly so, in Holland in 1735; in France in the reign of Louis the XV. in 1737; at Rome by Clement's bull of excommunication in 1638; afterward revived by Benedict the XIV.; and at Berne by the Council in 1748; besides numerous other and later acts of denunciation, brought upon it in Europe by its dark and mischievous political intrigues, and attempts to usurp governments, which were thus driven to the necessity of proscribing it in order to save themselves. I could tell of its daggers in the hands of the French Jacobins; of its dangerous ascendency in the British Parliament, where it had the pernicious influence expressly to exempt itself from the severity of the statute against secret societies and treasonable combinations. I could, with Barruel and Robinson, trace its diabolical trinity of German desperadoes, WEISHAUPT, KNIGGA and ZWACK, through the dark mazes of midnight conspiracy, in those horrible dens where they meditated the overthrow of all government, and all religion but such as their own demonic and wild imaginations should dictate. I could show its infernal myrmidon drugging the bowl of Bonaparte; and the dark and bloody heralds of its vengeance pursuing the footsteps of Alexander of Russia, to that solitary and wild frontier of his empire where they dispatched him, according to order and with their usual skill and dexterity which never failed of complete success until Morgan's cries of murder were heard at night in the village of Canandaigua! All this and much more, I could spread before you in detail, but a crisis has arrived when this detail is out of date; a crisis in which we cannot stop to imitate the wife of Lot, when she paused to turn and look back upon the vices and the crimes and the consequent sudden ruin and desolation of Sodom and Gomorrah! We must now look to the future only; and with one united voice, with hearts and hands combined, determine to crush the monster, and banish forever its memory from among us.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—LEV. vii. 37, 38.

37 This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the sin-offering, and of the trespass-offering, and of the consecrations, and of the sacrifice of the peace-offerings;

38 Which the Lord commanded Moses in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations unto the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai.

The Bible is full of Christ, and we need every part of it to see a whole Christ. It is a whole Christ that we need—Christ in his offices, his character, and his person—Christ in the relation in which he stood to God and to man—Christ as going to God for man, and giving to God all that he claimed from man, and then receiving from God all that man needed to make him perfectly happy—Christ in his humiliation and his exaltation—Christ in the lowest parts of the earth, and Christ raised to the right hand of God, and made higher than the heavens. The Bible is the great glass in which Christ is to be seen in all the various aspects in which God would have us view him. God's great object in giving us the Bible is to reveal Christ to us—Christ as the Saviour, God's own gift of love; and our object in reading the Scriptures, should be to find Christ in them. In the types of Exodus we have redemption by Christ Jesus, and in Leviticus we have access to God by Christ Jesus after redemption is known and rejoiced in. Christ is here seen as the Offering, the Officer and the Priest. He meets all God's holy claims, and then meets man with his deep cravings which nothing on earth can satisfy, and he supplies all his need, takes away all his fear, and fills him with joy and peace.

In the sin-offering we see Christ offering himself for our sin; for what we are in ourselves,—sinful creatures. In the trespass-offering I see Jesus offering himself for our sins, our trespasses, the fruits and effects of our sinful nature,—what we do. In the burnt-offering I see Jesus presenting those to God, for acceptance as worshipers, whose sins he has put away. In the meat-offering, I see Jesus in his life, but so pure and holy that both God and man may get a feast out of him. In the peace-offering, which was offered last of all, and was placed upon the burnt-offering and the meat-offering, I see the blessed results of all his toil, and of his death, viz., peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The offerings are divided into two classes; the sweet-savor offerings are one class, and those which are not sweet-savor offerings are another class. The burnt-offering, the meat-offering and the peace-offering, belong to the sweet-savor class. The sin-offering and trespass-offering are not sweet-savor offerings. In the sin and trespass-offerings there was a question of sin. Sin was upon them by imputation, therefore they could not be burnt on the brazen altar, which was God's table. The fat of the sin-offering was burnt on the altar, and the blood was poured out at the bottom of the altar; but the flesh and bones, etc., were carried out of the camp, and burnt to ashes on the earth, which God had cursed because of man's sin (Gen. iii. 17; Lev. iv. 11, 12; xvi. 27.) If any part was not burnt, it had to be eaten by the priests in the holy place. None of the flesh could be put on the altar, or table of God (Lev. vi. 26, 29; vii. 6; x. 16-20).—Rev. George Rodgers.

Home and Health Hints.

A Word to Mothers.

Consider it your religious duty to take outdoor exercise without fail each day. Sweeping and trotting around the house will not take its place; the exhilaration of the open air and change of scene are absolutely necessary. Oh, I know all about Lucy's gown that is not finished, Tommy's jacket and buttonless coat—thrown into your lap, as if to add the last ounce to the camel's back, still I say, up, and out. Is it not more important that your children in their tender years should not be left motherless, and that they should not be born to that feeble constitution of body which will blight every blessing? Let buttons and strings go. You will take hold of them with more vigor and patience when you return, bright and refreshed; and if every stitch is not finished at such a moment—and it is discouraging not to be able to sympathize in your best effort—still remember that "she who hath done what she could" is entitled to no mean praise. Your husband is undoubtedly the best of men, though there are malicious people who might answer that that was not saying much for him. Still, he would never, to the end of time, dream of what you are dying of. So accept my advice and take the matter in hand yourself.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

CHANGE OF CLOTHING.—It would be a great deal better to wear the entire winter suits through March, and even to the middle of April; and even then, until the first week in May, to make no change in the outer clothing, nor any in the inner garments, except in a less heavy woolen next to the skin; for it is only for the three hours embracing one o'clock in the afternoon that winter clothing is at all oppressive; while the very warmth of noonday makes the raw dampness of the morning and the late afternoon specially felt. All changes to lighter or cooler garments should be made at dressing in the morning; and if in any case the change leaves the body chilly, or if, soon after it is made, the weather changes to much cooler, by all means promptly, without half an hour's delay, resume the full winter's dress. The old, the young, the invalid,—in short, all persons of feeble constitutions, of small vitality, should be especially careful to heed these suggestions.—Hall's Journal of Health.

EFFECTS OF COLORS UPON HEALTH.—A correspondent of the Builder states that he had occasion for several years to examine rooms occupied by young women for manufacturing purposes, and he has observed that while the workers in one room would be very cheerful and healthy, the occupants of a similar room, who were employed in the same kind of business, were all inclined to be melancholy, and complained of a pain in the forehead and eyes, and were often ill and unable to work. The only difference he could discover in the rooms was that the one occupied by the healthy workers was wholly whitewashed, and that occupied by the melancholy workers was colored with yellow ochre. As soon as the difference struck him he had the yellow ochre washed off and the walls whitened. At once an improvement took place in the health and spirits of the occupants.

HOW TO MAKE COFFEE.—Proportion, one tablespoonful of coffee to about two and a half cups of water poured upon it boiling hot. Let it stand where it will keep hot, but not boil, for about half an hour. If it be made fresh, every bit of it every time, according to this rule, if drank in moderation, say one or two cups, I don't think it will hurt any one but be a benefit.

SPOTS ON VARNISH.—Take a soft cloth and wet it in alchohol; rub the spot briskly, and it will disappear entirely; then rub on a little boiled linceed oil, and it will be restored to its original color and polish.

THE Scientific American says roaches may be exterminated by taking flowers of sulphur one-half pound, potash four ounces. Melt in an earthen pan over the fire; pulverize and make a strong solution in water, and sprinkle the places which they frequent.

Farm and Garden.

Going West.

Well, boys, said a thrifty New England farmer, it is evident that we must either go West or one or more of you will have to get some other employment, for it is plain that our little forty-acre farm will not afford us all work. Farmer Brown takes a trip West and finds that he can get a good Iowa farm of 200 acres, with some stock besides, for the market price of his little eastern farm, and a sale is soon made, and Farmer Brown and family are westward bound.

The boys are delighted with the new prairie farm; it is so roomy, free from stones, and such a fine, rich soil.

True it does seem odd to live in such a "wee bit of a house" and have no barn whatever, but all of their neighbors get along that way and in the whole county there is not to be found as fine a barn as they left on their old, little farm at the East. Farmer Brown's wife and two daughters try to rejoice with father and the boys at the fine western farm, but it is so unpleasant to be crowded. All feel this, and the girls and mother cheerfully put up with the crowding till they can "build," for farmer B. declares that he will have as fine a house and barn as he left on the old place, but the money must be made or earned first.

FARM BUILDINGS.

A very small frame house, a diminutive granary with a prairie grass roof, with three corn cribs and a log cattle shed, each built of poles with a prairie grass roof, comprised the farm buildings at the time farmer Brown purchased his prairie farm.

By industrious toil and the most rigid ecomy he and his family yearly put a small sum in the bank, besides gradually improving his farm and increasing his stock. A small addition for a good-sized kitchen and a bed-room was added to the old house and at the end of three years a fine barn was built at a cost of a little over $1,000. A good agricultural paper suggested the plan for it, and for a farm house to match, but farmer Brown was too sensible a man to mortgage the place to get the money for both buildings, so of course the barn came first. Two years more passed away and the house was begun, and completed during the year. It was a great joy to mother and daughters and in fact to all, to change from the little old house to the fine new one, but had cost nearly $2,000, and but partly finished inside, and, worse than all to farmer Brown, was the thought that he was $500 in debt, though he thought he had more than enough to pay for the house. Five years more passed and the youngest of the boys was nineteen, making five men, and the "big farm" began to seem very small; for farmer Brown soon found that even a rich prairie loam would not bear cultivation year after year without manure, so two-thirds of the farm was now pasture and meadow. Two of the boys had been at work for neighbors for the past five years, and the oldest, a little over thirty, and was to be married in a few weeks, and intended to "go West."

But for the attractions of home and the earnest protest of mother, sisters and their younger brothers, the three oldest sons would have gone further west three years ago, but farmer Brown said he would go with them and together they would buy a section, if they could sell the old farm for its value. So the old place had been for sale several years. It soon became evident to all that the beautiful farm would not sell for its real value. Several neighbors had sold out to the very persons that had at different times attempted to buy of farmer Brown. In vain farmer Brown pointed to his fine orchard, excellent fences and buildings that had cost over $3,000. It was plainly evident that farmer Brown's farm was really worth fifteen dollars per acre more than any other in the township on account of these improvements, but purchasers would not give it. The dear old farm was at last sold at but five dollars more per acre than that of a near neighbor whose place was really worth eighteen dollars per acre less. The moral of this story is: fine farm buildings are very pleasant to use, but THEY DO NOT PAY, unless they are to be "the old homestead."

Send the boys West to do the pioneer work and keep the home which has cost the best years of your life, which will not sell for what it is worth, but will be a delightful place to receive thanksgiving day visits in from the children, who are building up their little homes further west, and which will be a tasteful and quiet retreat for old age.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, April 23, 1874.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.—Our subscribers are, many of them, tried friends. They took the paper when it was small and unknown. They did not take it to make money, or to get friends, or offices. They sustained it then, and do now, because it maintains principles which they believed to be fundamental to our liberties and our religion. Now the paper is enlarged and much improved. It is far cheaper than most of the two-dollar papers of the country. We ask renewed and increased efforts for our list. We want twenty-five thousand subscribers; not for ourselves, but for our cause.

There is a great outcry about rings, stealing, corruption, and monopoly. All this is needed, but what good will it do, if the reform goes no farther than to remove the manifestations of secrecy, and fail to reach the principle itself?

Whisky rings, printing rings, pavement rings, and others of like character, are but shapes which Masonry assumes, to hide its real self while it does its work. Did not Masons at Springfield, Ill., swear that H. G. Reynolds paid them bribe money on the square; and that they held themselves bound not to reveal it? Did they not refuse to reveal it until compelled by imprisonment? And did not the same men, who had accidentally discovered this Masonic conspiracy, cover the whole transaction with the veil of oblivion, and pass a vote allowing men who had stolen thirty thousand dollars, to draw twenty thousand more from the State treasury? Masonic influence is powerful at Springfield, and almost omnipotent at Washington, where every evil on earth seems to find champions in the Sovereign Grands of the thirty-third degree.

Once more then to the battle, friends of ours,—and better still, of truth. Remember that he always wins who sides with God. Remember that he who stands in the way of his chariot wheels, will surely be crushed.

Get your neighbors to subscribe for this paper, that pleads for the right. Be faithful and patient. The day will dawn.

IS IT FOOLISH? IS IT NEEDLESS?

The Tribune of the 13th inst., says that the grangers in Iowa have come to grief by getting Roman Catholics to join them, by means of forged letters from Roman Catholic bishops, and finally from the Pope himself, granting to Catholics permission to join the grange, provided there is nothing in their obligations or usages contrary to the teachings of the church. On the strength of these letters, or of the assertion that such letters have been received, numerous Catholics have joined the Patrons. But it turns out that no such dispensations or letters have been written by Pope or bishops, and there is great indignation among the Catholic clergy, and great excitement among the people. The Tribune editor concludes that inasmuch as the papal law forbids the faithful to join any society which administers an oath of secrecy, and the Patrons have "foolishly and needlessly" made such an oath a part of their initiatory rites, of course the Catholics can not unite with them.

Now we are glad to have such facts ventilated. We do not believe that anything wrong is ever really necessary or really wise; and yet there is a sense in which the children of this world are wiser than the children of light; and whatever is necessary to sweep in their schemes, and is cunningly adapted to that end, the world are accustomed to consider as neither needless nor foolish, but the contrary, even though present success may be ultimate ruin.

The oath of secrecy in the grange foolishly needless! Without such an oath, how could they carry out the scheme of deceiving the Catholics, by the pretense of a papal dispensation? A large amount of most carefully guarded secrecy would be needed in such a scheme. How could it be foolish or needless to employ the full sanctions of an oath to secure it? A scheme for taxing the farmers heavily and perpetually for the benefit of the inventors, the sagamores and chief estates of the order, imperiously demands secrecy; and nothing but strong guards and fearful imprecations can be sufficient to preserve it. "In vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird." If a vast political scheme is to be accomplished by a movement which wholly disclaims any political designs; or if the intention is to extend and strengthen Freemasonry, or to organize a new corps in the Grand Army of the Invisible Empire, that is to rule and ruin both church and state; or if it is indispensable to success, the rank and file of the order shall be made to believe that no such ends are intended, but merely the promotion of the best interests of agriculture, why then, such an amount of secrecy is required that no ground weaker than those resorted to by the Patrons, would be at all adequate. If the Patrons of Husbandry have employed the oath of secrecy foolishly and needlessly, it is not because that oath is not adapted to their purpose, and necessary to its success; but it is because their PURPOSE is infinitely worse than needless or foolish, and is hidden under pretensions, just as false as that of the Pope's having lent it his sanction. It is because the farmers generally have been duped as really as the Catholics, and have been drawn into the dark army by pretensions, as crafty and as false as this lie about the Pope; and because such lies are only the appropriate means for advancing a cause which has no other foundation than false pretenses.

REVIEW OF GROSH'S DEFENSE CONTINUED.

Instead of furnishing us any valid reason to change our opinion as to the oath-bound character of the I. O. O. F., the sophistry and special pleading which Mr. Grosh employs not only confirms our former opinion, but convinces us that he himself must be conscious of the indefensibleness of his side of the question.

First he makes the following admission.

"'The Odd-fellow's Manual,' in treating of the Grand Encampment Degree, states that the 'receiver of this degree appeals to heaven and earth to witness the fidelity with which he will represent the interests of his Subordinate, and at the same time faithfully preserve the secrets, advance the interests, and promote the welfare of his Grand Encampment.'"

The Manual here referred to is Mr. Grosh's own work; and while it clearly shows the members of the Grand Encampment to be oath-bound, it also, by the striking resemblance of their oath as here described, to those of the other degrees as given by Dr. Willis, adds confirmation to the correctness of Dr. Willis' exposure.

Having made this fatal admission, he next undertakes to escape from its damaging effect by accusing Dr. Cooper of "twisting and turning and misquoting" him and Webster's Dictionary in order to prove, as he says, that "'our obligations are oaths." Mr. Grosh then follows this accusation of twisting and turning by an example of the same thing himself—such as we venture to affirm can be cited from no sound or candid reasoner, or any other reasoner, against oath-bound secrecy. He twists and turns thus:

"Take his [Cooper's] treatment of Webster's definition as a sample. The dictionary defines an oath to be "a solemn affirmation or declaration made with an appeal to God for the truth of what is affirmed." On this our opposer says, "he makes the very essence of an oath consist in an appeal to God." Is that all? No; but it would not answer his purpose to quote more, so he omits—"for the truth of what is affirmed" (a very essential part of "the essence of an oath," according to Webster!)—and thus he seemingly brings that definition to bear on what the Manual has said of an "appeal to heaven and earth." Nor is this all his unfairness. He virtually misquotes the Manual by repeatedly printing "heaven" with a capital H ("Heaven")—thus making it mean, what the word does not mean, as printed in the Manual, i. e., God, instead of the visible heaven. Such is the candor and fairness of these predetermined judges of the veracity and integrity of their fellow-men! I wonder it did not enter their ingenious minds to misquote a little further, and assert that we swear by Heaven and by earth, and then quote Matthew v. 33–37, to make Jesus convict us of coarse profanity!"

Verily the Grand Chaplain quibbles. Who says the last phrase of Webster's definition is "a very essential part of the essence of an oath? Webster does not say it, and any one can see that it is not so. Who does not know that an oath may be intended either as a confirmation of the truth of what one says or to insure the fulfilment of what he promises. More oaths are promissory than affirmatory, and if an appeal to God must be "for the truth of what is affirmed" in order to be an oath, then a mere promissory oath, such as the President's, to support the constitution, or any oath of office, is not an oath. But a promissory appeal to God is as much an oath as an affirmative appeal, therefore it is not essential what the appeal is for, but the essence of the oath is found in the simple appeal to God, as Dr. Cooper says, and Mr. Grosh's logic is the veriest sophistry. But hear him further:

"Let us carry out this opposer's mode of reasoning. The signers of the Declaration of Independence, and Mr. Lincoln in his Emancipation Proclamation, appealed to God for the rectitude of their acts—therefore they closed those instruments with an oath!"

To be sure they did. They asserted the rectitude of their acts and appealed to God for the truth of the solemn affirmation. He goes on thus:

"The preachers appeal to the Bible, and the lawyers to the statutes, for proof of their position—therefore they swear by Bible and law-book! Some hymns and prayers contain many earnest appeals to God—therefore they are filled with oaths!"

An appeal to Scriptures and to law-books as argument is not an oath in Mr. Cooper's assumption as to the essense of an oath, for there is no appeal to God. An appeal to God in prayer or praise has indeed the solemnity of an oath; but the appeal has no reference to any purpose for which an oath is ever used. Such appeal requires indeed sincerity and truth in the appellant, but is worship and not swearing, unless it be done in hypocrisy or mockery. Mr. Grosh's logic here is indeed like that which he vainly endeavors to fasten upon his opponent: "All geese are birds; therefore all birds are geese!" as if he had said all oaths are appeals, therefore all appeals are oaths. But he complains bitterly of Dr. Cooper's printing heaven in his quotation from the Manual with an initial capital letter, making it mean God, which he avers "it does not mean." The solemn appeal is "to the visible heaven," says Dr. Grosh. What does such an appeal to the visible heaven and earth, the clouds and clod—what does it mean? We really supposed that a solemn appeal to heaven and earth always meant an appeal to the intelligences which inhabit them. We may have derived this opinion from Christ's declaration that "whoso sweareth by heaven sweareth by the throne of God and by him that sitteth thereon. Mr. Grosh appears to admit that an appeal to God is swearing by God, and that if "heaven," in the appeal of the Grand Encampment degree, meant God, that appeal would be swearing by God; and would, according to Christ's teaching, be "coarse profanity." And indeed we are unable to see why all these premises are not correct, and the conclusion inevitable, that this solemn appeal to heaven and earth is "coarse profanity." It is not strange that he wonders we do not push our argument to that result. For evidently he can see no way out of his dilemma than by a quibble that would do no credit to a third-rate pettifogger, by the puerile assertion that a solemn appeal to heaven and earth is an appeal, not to the universe of mind, but only to that of inert matter. But the climax of logical sublimity is not reached until Mr. Grosh winds up with an assertion which shows all his tortuous labor of sophistry to have been perfectly needless; for, after all, he asserts that the appeal over which all this ado is made, is never taken at all IN WORDS, i. e., the statement in the Manual is true only in a mystical sense, which none but an Odd-fellow can understand, and by which, as by most of the outgivings of these guileful children of the night and of secrecy, outsiders are mocked and misled. Never made in words! If made at all, never made by one in an hundred of the order! "Only a silent yet expressive appeal by way of a reminder of duty!" Why did he not say so in his Manual? Why did he not say so at once in his defense? He might have saved himself the trouble of weaving his long tortuous net of transparent sophistry, and us the trouble of unraveling it. Since no one but he who makes it can know whether a silent appeal is any appeal, or whether it is made to heaven and earth or to heaven and hell, we should have known that the Manual writer had fooled us once, and is doubtless at the same game again. Thus he winds up by virtually crying out "April fool" to us. And when heaven shall force the honest truth from him he will cry out "April fool" to the whole fraternities of Odd-fellows and Patrons as the finale of his authorship and of all the pompous solemnity of his high priesthood and grand chaplaincies.

But the point on which he is most sore is that we not only persist in declaring his order oath-bound, but bound by oaths to do evil. This he deems greviously uncharitable. He denies it, and declares that holy Odd-fellows by the hundred deny it; Quaker Odd-fellows declare that their obligations bind to do good only. As we have said concerning the disputed point whether or not they are oaths, so we say of all this testimony as to their character, i. e., whether they bind to good or evil, that is a matter of opinion merely. Mistaken opinions, even among good men, are unhappily no novelty in this imperfect world. Therefore we say again give us the very words of your obligations and we shall have no need to trouble you for your opinion. We can then form our own opinio and more satisfactorily than to have Mr. Grosh, or all the Odd-fellows in America do our thinking for us. We belong to the class "who will sometimes think and decide for ourselves even on subjects forbidden by churches" or lodges. And on the point in question we do think we will be able to judge quite as correctly as those who have bound their souls by the obligations before having opportunity to consider and reflect upon their import and bearings. Having accepted the assertions of others instead of thinking for themselves, and bound themselves accordingly, they are under the strongest kind of bias to make out the opinion they have accepted and acted upon to be correct. We are free from any such prejudgment and are not afraid to apply the strictest rules of truth and justice to the matter and to follow them to their legitimate conclusion, be it what it may.

Mr. Grosh taunts church members with being bound by their covenants and not daring to think for themselves, or to act otherwise than their church prescribes; but himself denies us opportunity to think for ourselves as to the obligations of the I. O. O. F. When we say those obligations are oaths and they bind to evil, if such a thing be possible, he demands insolently, Do you judge us by yourselves? Are your church covenants oaths? and do they bind you to do evil? We answer, they partake of the sacredness of an oath that is sworn "in judgment, in truth and in righteousness," but as to requiring evil in the slightest degree, Mr. Grosh himself knows they do not. He knows that the covenants of the churches he assails bind their members to do the will of God as revealed in the Holy Scriptures, which are open to all men without restriction. To that and nothing else do they bind. If Mr. Grosh or any others have aught against this rule we have only to say to them, Answer that to the Author of that Revelation.

But all the assertions of Mr. Grosh and of the many thousands of American Odd-fellows do not in the least weaken our opinion that their obligations are oaths; unjustifiable as to the occasion and method of taking them, and both tending to and positively requiring that which is evil. If there is no evil in them, Odd-fellows have it in their power to compel all men to acquit their obligations of this charge. Bring them all out and let them think and judge for themselves. "Every one that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." Did the obligations of Odd-fellowship possess the perfect purity that is claimed for them and no taint or tendency to, or shadow of evil, it could work no possible harm to make them as public as the Bible; and now especially as their purity is earnestly denied, if they were thus pure their friends would certainly bring them to the light and silence forever their accusers. Because they will not do this Christ's word classes them with the evil. And we are justified in so considering them. And yet Christ has not done with them when he has thus unequivocally classed them. He has purposed that all the secrets of men, all the hidden things of darkness, shall be dragged into the light, and thereby receive their merited reward of universal abhorrence and everlasting contempt. This work has been accomplished with respect to the ancient heathen mysteries from which our modern mysteries are copied; and it is begun with these.

WHO WILL HELP?—Since last September, THREE THOUSAND FORTY-THREE DOLLARS AND EIGHTY-FIVE CENTS have been subscribed toward paying the building debt of Wheaton College.

The institution still needs about seventeen thousand dollars to discharge all its obligations. The sum already raised has come from two hundred and thirty-three persons, and the average subscription is a little over thirteen dollars.

Cannot every Cynosure subscriber do a little toward this worthy and glorious object? If we could only have a small sum from every one of those who are heartily opposed to secret societies, every debt would be paid, and this noble institution unembarrassed and strengthened, plead "for Christ and his kingdom," against the hosts of evil which are gathering for the last great conflict. Don't fear to send your offering because it is small, but send at once what you are able and willing to give, stating that you do so in response to the appeal in the Cynosure.

All sums thus received will be acknowledged in these columns, and credited to the "Cynosure subscription," which is now open.

INFLATION.—The bill adding $44,000,000 to the national currency, and $46,000,000 to the circulation of the national banks, has passed both Senate and House, and now awaits only the signature of the President to become a law.

It is a question whether our national government had a right even in war time to issue a single greenback. The Supreme Court in '69, held that it was illegal to do so, and in '70, changes having been made in the court, it held five to four that it was otherwise.

It was justified by the majority of the court at that time, solely on the ground that it was essential to the salvation of the country.

Now, in a time of peace, because it is deemed essential to the political salvation of a parcel of demagogues, they have authorized this increase, in violation of personal and party pledges, and for no apparent reason save the one stated. The premium on gold is steadily rising, and of course will continue to do so, so long as this policy is continued. Nor are we likely to stop at this point. We must have more currency or less. So long as we have paper forced on our own citizens by act of Congress, our gold and silver will go to Europe and the speculators. When it is all, or almost all there, the value of all articles will depend on the number of sheets the government presses run off in an hour. In other words, we shall have "a lie as the standard of value." That is, government compels its citizens to take a promise to pay as payment, and pursues a course that inevitably leads to repudiation and national dishonor.

Of course no one need be disappointed that the pro-slavery, black-law men who now control the Republican party, have thus violated every pledge that an honorable man would hold sacred.

The pompous little men who now strut upon the stage, were simply the sharks who followed in the wake of the ship of state, when steered by such pilots as Lincoln, Stevens, Chase, Seward, Hale, Giddings and Sumner. They have never furnished power to move, or brains to direct our great Republic. They have simply seized upon what carcasses they could reach to gorge themselves, without comprehending either the steering apparatus or the engine room.

We have, however, one consolation, when considering such bodies as our present Senate and House, and Executive. We cannot be worse off, and may be better.

THE ILLINOIS PRINTING.—Harmon G. Reynolds, great Masonic philanthropist, having studied carefully the theory of benevolence in the lodge, lately endeavored to apply his knowledge for the glory of the Masonic gods and the good of his Masonic fellow men. It seems from the testimony that the State of Illinois had certain contracts for printing and binding to let, and certain parties in Springfield were about to bid on these contracts. The gentleman whose name we mention above went to these parties and gave them various sums of money (on the square) in consideration of which they withdrew or failed to put in their bids. This enabled the house for which he worked to steal from the State thirty thousand dollars. An investigation was ordered; Masonic witnesses testified to the above facts; not willingly, but very reluctantly; and the legislature made no arrangements to punish the man who bribed, the men who received bribes, or to recover the money stolen from the State. In fact, they made an arrangement by which these same thieves are to get about twenty thousand dollars more from the State. When the citizens have paid this money, it might be well for them to inquire whether a system that enables men to steal from them and avoid punishment should be tolerated, and when H. G. Reynolds next comes into Grand Lodge it would be appropriate to sing: "Hail Masonry divine." And then have Albert Pike, or Allen C. Fuller, or Stephen A. Hurlbut offer a prayer of thanksgiving to the Masonic gods for helping our P. W. G. M. and P. W. G. S. out of the scrape.

OHIO CENTRAL COLLEGE is located at Iberia, on the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati railroad, and is in charge of the United Presbyterians, whose testimony on secret societies is well known, and is a guaranty that the position of President Reid in his letter on the first page is well taken and will be maintained. The curriculum of the college comprises a scientific, classical and preparatory course, to which both sexes have an equal admission.

Our friends who are working for the increased circulation of the Cynosure will be interested in reading the article "OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST" in the Publishers' department on the sixteenth page. It is easy to see that the 3,886 subscriptions ought to be and must be doubled before the Cynosure can be said to have a paying list, and at least 2,000 ought to be added to this list before and at the Syracuse Convention, or the "dry time" in the summer will be exceedingly hard on the publishers.

—The United Presbyterian has the following notice:

"Mr. A. P. Bently, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, is said to be writing a story founded on the abduction of Morgan, of Masonic memory. He is assisted by Hon. J. C. Jill, of that city, who was accused of and tried for the abduction. It will pretend to give a true and reliable account of the historic event.

It is quite probable that the above is a publication in the interest of the lodge, like a certain "Square Account" of the same transaction published a year ago in the Boston Commercial Bulletin.

—The third session of the National Agricultural Congress will be held at Atlanta, Georgia, May 13th. This is a body composed of representatives from agricultural and horticultural societies of all kinds. The order of exercises already prepared shows that the various interests of the farmer will be ably discussed. Mr. Charles W. Greene, Jacksonville, Ill., is the Secretary, and will answer all inquiries concerning this convention. He writes that it "will probably take steps toward organizing a national system of open associations in which free speech and free discussion will be the watchwords of its membership." May heaven speed such a work!

Where's the man who seeks for Fame?
Haste! the laurel give him;
Unfold the scroll and write his name,
'Tis all the grave will leave him.

Where is he who toils for Gold?

When a few brief days are told,
No more can he enjoy it.

Where's the bosom swelled with pride.
Spare! I would not wound it—
For death shall twine at eventide
His mean scant garment round it.

Where's the heart on Pleasure bent!
Pour a double measure;
Health and life to-morrow spent,
Gone will be the treasure.

Where's the Soul that looks above

Such as lives in story.

Take each cup of joy away,
To others filled and given,
Oh, what are all these baubles—say—

Incidents of City Mission Work.

"I was a stranger, and ye took me in."

At about seven o'clock one evening, while on his way from his own residence to his mission station, Rev. John P. Betker (pastor of the New York City Missions Chapel, No. 185 Spring street,) met a man, his wife and two children. The wife and children were sitting on the sidewalk, near the fence which enclosed a vacant lot, and the man was standing near them. It had just began to rain, and the weather was uncomfortably cool. There was a recess in the fence where the group were gathered, and, as it was quite dark, the reverend gentleman could not see them very plainly. His first impressions were that some person had fallen. Approaching them, he anxiously inquired, "What is the matter here?"

"Sir," replied the man, in a voice tremulous with emotion, "we have no home, and don't know where to go. Our land-lady turned us out of the house because we could not pay the rent; and now we are thinking what next to do."

While this conversation was going on, quite a number of passers-by were attracted to the spot, and all eagerly sought inforrmation as to what had happened.

When the case was fully explained to them, several said, "What a pity, what a pity! Too bad! Can't something be done for the poor, destitute family?"

But no one proposed to do anything. After a moment's thought as to what he had better do for their temporary relief, a plan occurred to the pastors' mind. He told the man who and what he was, and added, "Come with me, and I will see what I can do for you."

This remark was warmly applauded by the "lookers-on," and the suffering family immediately arose and followed him, without asking any questions as to where he intended to lead them. His purpose was to take them to his mission hall in Spring street, and have them lodge there for the night. On their arrival at the hall, the pastor replenished the fire in the stove, and taking their eldest daughter with him, went to a grocery store, bought two quarts of milk, two pounds of crackers, a loaf of bread and a pound of cheese; and returning to the hall, set out a table, placed the articles of food upon it, and invited them to the repast. They ate very heartily.

Mr. McKenzie, a Christian gentleman, soon after entered the hall to see the pastor, and on learning the particulars of the case, he put one dollar into the poor man's hand; and as he still held him by the hand, speaking kindly to him the while, the poor man, overcome with emotion, bowed his head; and a big tear fell from his eye upon the hand of his benefactor. That was a warm tear of gratitude from the sky of the poor man's soul, made glad by the generous sunshine of Christian benevolence.

Mr. McKenzie soon after left, and the pastor, by placing several church settees together, putting the cushions on them, and doubling two of them together for pillows, prepared good beds for his guests, and then sat down and talked to them about Him who became poor that we, through his poverty, might be rich eternally. He told them of God's merciful designs toward them in all his dealings; that he even counts the very hairs of our heads, and that he knew all about their circumstances, and that he doubtless had a merciful purpose toward them in permitting them to sink so very low in poverty and want, as they found themselves that night.

"Study," said he, "the designs of God toward you in those afflictive providences, and see if he does not propose thus to bring you to himself by causing you to feel your entire dependence upon him."

"Oh!" exclaimed the woman, "it is plain, sir, that our Heavenly Father, holy and ever blessed be his name, would have us humbled and brought back to him—for we have wandered far from him by wicked works."

"And," added the man, "He sent you, sir, to call us back from our wicked ways; I know it; I see it plainly."

As the reverend gentleman was about to leave them for the night, he proposed prayer with them, to which they gladly assented. After prayer, he shook hands with them, and kissed one of their children (the other was fast asleep). As he did so, the poor man clasped his hands and cried out with tearful delight.

Early the next morning (Sabbath) the pastor returned to the hall and prepared their breakfast. It was raining heavily, and he told them that they might remain there all day—which favor they accepted gratefully. With the Mission Sunday-school, which met in the afternoon, they were greatly pleased—especially with the recitations and singing by the children. During the afternoon conference meeting, they were much interested while the persons present related their Christian experiences, and as the pastor spoke to each words of hope and consolation, they frequently wept.

In the evening a large congregation assembled, and the hall was filled. The man and his wife were absorbed in what they saw and heard. The man who preached to them had taken them out of the cold, wet street, and fed and lodged them in his own church! He spoke to them of the loving Jesus, of his kindness, and of his power to save perishing sinners; for his text was, "I will come and heal him." Those destitute ones were subdued and melted before the cross; and when the invitation was given for persons to arise for prayers, the man, his wife and his eldest daughter were the first to respond. At the close of the meeting, the man, with streaming eyes, and with earnest gesticulation, said, "Oh, sir, I have been all along in darkness until you found us! Now I see the light; a blessed light I never saw before."

"Oh, sir, this is a blessed place," added the woman. "Had we heard years ago what we have heard this night, it would have been a blessed thing for us."

That evening the reverend gentleman procured them lodging at a private house. Next day they found apartments, and Mr. McKenzie generously paid the first month's rent in advance. Mr. Betker then invited the man to his office, gave him a Bible and some clothing. He was greatly in need of the latter, and when he received it he fell upon his knees and said, "Oh, blessed Lord Jesus! I thank thee for having mercy on me, a poor wretched sinner! I prayed to thee last night for some clothing, and now in Thy great mercy thou dost answer my poor prayer! O, how shall I praise thee? How shall I serve thee? How shall I show my love to thee for thy great kindness to me, a poor, wretched, wicked rebel against thee?"

Overcome with emotion, he could proceed no further, but gave way to convulsive weeping. While yet on his knees, said the pastor to him, "The Lord will always hear your prayers, and provide for you, if you try to serve him with your whole heart, and put your entire trust in him."

On the following day the man and his wife signed the temperance pledge, and they are now doing well.

Washington in Tears.

At the close of the Revolution it is well known that Congress was unable to meet its obligations to the army. Division of counsol existed as to the best method of raising the necessary funds to pay off the army before it was disbanded. While thus the hopes of the unpaid army were alternately elevated and depressed, some traitorous person scattered an anonymous circular among them, fomenting the dissatisfaction already existing, and leading to open rebellion. The individual who was suspected to have been the author of this paper was General Armstrong. Washington summoned all the officers into his presence to hear an appeal which he had prepared, and a copy of which is found in Marshall's Life. Neither wild lands, however rich, nor continental paper, however legal, would purchase bread or clothing. The minds of the army had been embittered by poverty and disappointment, and their principles corrupted by the infidel French literature which flooded our land, and poisoned all the fountains of society. On a certain day the loyal and disloyal gathered around the camp of the "Father of our Country." General Gates, against whom charges made had been withdrawn, presided. General Washington arose with his manuscript in hand, to read a rebuke to treason; but tears suffusing his eyes prevented him. What a scene for some American Vernet! He grasped the scroll, dashing away the tears, and essayed again to read. But all again was silent. His noble frame heaved with emotion. In order to suffer his agitated feelings to subside, he began hunting for his spectacles. "Pardon me, gentlemen," he said, "I have grown gray and blind in the service of my country!" What a rebuke were these words to the concealed promoters of treason! Many who before might have faltered, were now melted by those tears. They gathered closer and closer around the noble form, and when he closed, they resolved to stand to the death by their devoted leader. Those tears, under Providence, may have saved our country.—Selected.

Christ our Salvation.

Remember, it is not thy hold of Christ that saves thee, it is Christ, it is not thy joy in Christ that saves thee, it is Christ; it is not thy faith in Christ, though that is the instrument; it is Christ's blood and merit. Therefore, look not so much to thy hand, with which thou art grasping Christ, as to Christ; look not to thy hope, but to Jesus, the source of thy hope; look not to thy faith, but to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of thy faith. We shall never find happiness by looking at our prayers, our doings, or our feelings; it is what Jesus is, not what we are, that gives rest to our souls. If we would at once overcome Satan, and have peace with God, it must be by "looking unto Jesus." Let not thy hopes or fears come between thee and Jesus; follow hard after him, and he will never fail thee.

Alone.—I want to ask the boys if they feel as strong to do right when they are all alone as they do when there is another boy with them, who wants to do right as well as themselves. There is a great deal of danger in bad company; and there is a good deal of strength and safety in good company; but, no matter how good our companions may be, it is not well to be too dependent on them. We ought to be able to stand alone; for we shall probably some time be left alone to resist temptation, without the encouragement or help of others.

A Mother's Love.—A thing immortal; Time cannot change it; Death cannot quench it; Eternity cannot waste nor destroy it! From the cradle to the grave it compasses us about, growing stronger when temptation besets us, becoming holier when adversity tries us, and more God-like to save when the blackness of despair gathers its horrors around us. Forsaking us not, though deserted by all others, it clings to us with a spell which no heart can dissolve, with a strength which no power can sunder.

For the Cynosure.

Fat vs. Muscle.

BY DR. J. H. HANAFORD.

The manifest tendencies of the present age, and perhaps the prevailing error in diet are the selections of concentrated food and articles containing too large a per cent. of carbonaceous food, or that which merely supports animal heat. That such respiratory food is absolutely essential and must be furnished in large quantities, relatively, is not denied; yet it is contended that this supply is far in excess of the actual demands of the system. Indeed, it is true that this respiratory food, or fuel, should be about four times as great in quantity as that designated to sustain the muscles, to say nothing of the elements needed for the nourishment of the brain and the nervous system. It must be evident, if more of this fuel food is used than the system demands that confusion and derangement must be the legitimate result, since nature makes no unreasonable demands. It follows that if such an excess of fuel is employed the furnace of the system, so to speak, must become over heated, resulting in a fevered state of the body, or an undue excitement and general inflammation, more or less severe. This undue excitability results oftener than otherwise perhaps in an irritated or inflamed state of the mucous membranes, more especially those of the throat, lungs and nasal passages, indicated by a parched sensation of these surfaces, sometimes extending to the lips. It is also true that this condition extends to the stomach, liver and bowels, laying the foundation of many and serious diseases and derangements of these organs so prevalent in all communities. It is also true perhaps that most of the heart diseases, through sympathy with the stomach, are referable to this unnatural "firing up," this excessive use of fuel-food.

This fuel-food consists of the sweets of all kinds; the oils, both animal and vegetable; with starch, so abundantly found in the center of the grains, the white mass, in the potato, the leguminous products in sago, tapioca, arrow root, and such articles in general use. And here it may be remarked that the products of the tropics instead of this carbon contain the juices, the sub-acid juices, of course calculated to promote perspiration, the means of carrying off excessive heat. It is also true that the grains of this region are especially rich in gluten, as the muscle-food, with a deficiency of starch-fuel; while, as we recede from the equator the starchy element increases, becomes very abundant relatively, as we approach the coldest regions, in some of which the train oil is taken as a beverage with comparative impunity. If these principles are correct, it is evident that the elements of food should vary with the different climates and seasons, like our clothing, and for the same reasons. But while it is admitted that fuel-food should be used, the natural result of which is to fill cavities and the interstices of the muscle, with the fatty deposit, producing plumpness and roundness and even greasiness when used to excess, there is an imperative demand for an element which will nourish the muscles, nitrogenious, differing widely from the preceding elements. These muscles with the bones constitute the frame work of the body, in the framer of which reside the strength, vigor, and power of endurance—health. This element, the muscle-food, is found in abundance in the outer coats of the grains—gluten—the chemical equivalent of fibrin, or lean flesh, and of course in the muscles of animals; in albumen, animal and vegetable,

These elements with the phosphate for the brain and nerves are distributed through the various edible products, in the precise proportions needed. Yet, as a result of ignorance or of depraved tastes these are separated, one taken in excess, while the others are discarded. While this almost suicidal course is pursued, it is manifest that the bones, nerves and muscles must correspondingly suffer. This starvation of a part of the system is indicated by the decayed and unsightly teeth, the weakened brain, the shattered nerves, and the puny, flaccid and undeveloped muscles utterly devoid of all manly stamina.

But can we control this matter; securing large, firm and vigorous muscles, a proper basis for health? Seek an answer for this question in the course pursued by the pugilists, those contaminators of the public morals, by regular course of training for their degrading conflicts; thus securing a physical stamina, a strength of limbs and body, a power of endurance, a consolidated health which would do credit to better citizens. They are subjected to a regular course of training; they diet long and systematically, are much in the pure air and sunlight of heaven, avoid sensual gratifications, throw aside their tobacco and strong drinks, sometimes their tea and coffee, (they are not such fools as to believe that intoxicating liquors promote health and strength) and, in fine, observe the laws of health. They manufacture health, so to speak, having the same confidence in means employed as the mechanic has in producing his wares. He thus secures a manliness of form, a stamina of muscle, a health and agility, a power of endurance, an ability for usefulness, which might honor the best Christian. It is a burning shame, a standing rebuke upon our advanced civilization, our Christian profession, that, while such men can practice self-denial as a means of qualifying them for their degrading fights, the great duty of preserving our health, the basis of a life of usefulness, is so rarely acknowledged in its full extent by the good citizen and Christian. The demand for health and vigor that we may be useful is far greater than that of rowdyism. It requires more physical endurance to "fight the good fight of faith" than to fight as do these degraded pugilists. "The crown of glory" is of far more valuable than the purse secured by them for a mere physical victory, and demands a far greater amount of health and vigor than these combatants secure. In short, the good citizen and the Christian have special obligations to secure health as means of a life of usefulness.

Willie's Penny.

Willie's penny made heaven rejoice! It would not have bought more than a stick or two of candy, or much helped a starving family. What did he do with it.

His sister was a missionary's wife in Africa, and the family were filling a box to send to her. As one after another deposited their gifts, little Willie said, "I want to give my penny."

"What shall be bought with the little offering?" was the next question. It was decided to buy a tract, and write the history of the gift on its margin, and with a prayer for its success send it on its distant errand.

The box arrived on mission-ground; and among its valuable, interesting contents, Willie's gift was laid away unnoticed, and for awhile forgotten. One day a native teacher was starting from the mission-station to go to a school over the mountain where he was to be employed. He was well learned in the language, and was a valuable help to the missionaries; but, alas! he lacked the knowledge that cometh from above. He was not a Christian, and had resisted all efforts for his conversion. This was a great grief to the missionaries; but they continued to hope.

In looking over some papers, Willie's tract was discovered, with the marginal explanation, and the fact that prayer had been offered in America for its success in doing good. It was handed to the native teacher. He read it on his journey. It opened his eyes; showed him that he was a lost sinner, in danger of eternal death, and that all his learning could not help him. It also told him of One who was able and willing to save, who had died for him, and was waiting to have his great love return.

What years of Christian labor by the missionaries had not done was now brought about by the penny tract. The strong man bowed in penitence and humble submission at Jesus' feet and became a sincere Christian. The missionaries to whom he went, praised God for the change by which they became blessed with a godly teacher. Those who put the tract in his hand were overcome with joy; for there is joy in heaven 'over one sinner that repenteth.' So you see how small gifts and deeds will often accomplish great results, exerting an influence in this life and the next, for little Willie's penny caused rejoicing in heaven and on earth.—Selected.

A Rack O' Bones.

Little things tell a good deal sometimes to a sharp observer. Do you ever think of it, boys? You, who like to get a poor, frightened cat into a corner, and stone her, who like to tie a tin pail to a dog's tail to see him run himself almost to death; you, who like to get a poor, old "rack-o-bones" of a horse and draw up the reins, and put on the whip, to see how fast you can make him go. Do you ever think you are showing your character in pretty black colors to whoever may chance to be watching? What is "a-rack-o'-bones," but a once nice, plump, sleek horse, worn out with hard work, pain, too little food, abuse from unthinking boys and hard-hearted men? He has done his best for you. Is this a good reason why you should abuse him?

Suppose somebody should call your mother a "rack-o'-bones," because she is pale and thin, and sad-faced. She once had a sweet, rosy face, bright eyes, and has lost them in suffering, and working, and caring for you. She has spent the best of her strength, and the best of her life for you, and wouldn't you quickly resent it if any boy should speak slightingly of her?

Can you give me any better reasons why you should maltreat a poor, limpy, shaky, worn-out horse, whose every rib you can count, and that hangs his head almost to the ground because he is too weak and tired to hold it up?

Do you feel manly after you have tormented him? Are you proud to tell of it?—Our Dumb Animals.

How Tender Grapes Are Spoiled.

First little fox—"I can't." Some of you have formed the habit, when an act of self-denial is required of you—some errand for father or mother—of saying, "I can't." Beware of this little fox.

Second little fox—"Not just now." When you are deeply interested in a story and it is school-time, you have said, "Not just now," "Pretty soon," "In a minute or two." How much good do they destroy? Beware of this little fox.

Third little fox—"It wasn't me." When you laugh in the school-room everybody says, "It wasn't me," or when a ball has gone through the school-room window, everybody says, "It wasn't me." It is the best way to say, "I had something to do with that." Beware of this little fox.

Fourth little fox—"I can't help it." A little boy has a wretched temper, and he says, "I can't help it." He has heard grown people say it. A little girl always trips and falls, or is always knocking something off the table, and says, "I ca 't help it." When the French army was in danger of being defeated by the Austrians, a French bugler got into the rear of the Austrian army in the early mist of the morning and sounded a retreat, and the whole army fell back, and the French were saved. Be wise, like this French bugler, and conquer your temper, or you will get to be a coward and unable to stand up before your duties and perform them.

Fifth little fox—"I don't care." Many boys and girls by constantly saying this get into habits of not caring. One little thistle seed floating in the air, if allowed to take root in the earth, will produce thousands of others. A man had a great many servants, and in order to test them he put a great stone in the middle of the road. Twenty passed by without trying to remove it. At last one came up who said it ought not to be there, and with great effort removed it, and found hidden underneath a purse of gold to reward him for his carefulness. So you will lose the esteem of others, the greatest prize you can win, if you do not drive away this little fox.

—The Sixteenth General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, meets in the First Church of Monmouth, Ill., on the fourth Wednesday (27th) of May, 1874, at 7:30 o'clock, P. M.

—Stephen H. Tyng, Jr's, large new church was dedicated on Monday in New York, and the services will continue eight days. Mr. Tyng wants Bishop Potter and the ritualists to let him work in his own way, or he will leave them.

—A report is current that in spite of the Brooklyn council, Beecher's church has dropped from its roll twenty-six names of members who have for various reasons absented themselves for considerable periods. This may have been done before the council, however.

—The church at Leland, Mich., Rev. Geo. Thompson, who was once imprisoned for anti-slavery views, pastor, has been enjoying unusual religious interest. The church is union, founded upon a basis of fundamentals to which all denominations can subscribe.

—Since Mr. Hammond left St. Louis, meetings are continued with little flagging of interest. A daily noon prayer-meeting is also a result of his visit, which will be permanent. Mr. Hammond has held very successful meetings at Hannibal, Mo., and is now in Jacksonville, in this State.

—The General Conference of the M. E. church, south, begins its sessions in Louisville, May 1st. It is thought the meeting will not be of special importance; one or two bishops will be elected, and the matter of union with the northern body may be discussed, but no action is expected.

—The Theological Seminaries of the United Presbyterian church at Xenia, Ohio, and Allegheny, Pa., have had respectively twenty-nine and thirty students in attendance during the last session. A plan for the union of the Seminary of the Northwest, at Monmouth, with the one at Xenia, is under advisement.

The deficit of $128,000 in the receipts of the treasury of the Foreign Board of Missions of the Presbyterian church, promises to be all made up before the meeting of the Assembly, to be held in St. Louis in May. Already $121,700 have been received of that amount, leaving only $5,300.

—The Methodists of England have 7,000 churches, valued at $60,000,000, gold; 1,300 ministers, and 35,000 local preachers, and between 300,000 and 400,000 church members. Upwards of 1,000,000 persons attend their ministry, 600,000 children attend their Sunday-schools, and 120,000 attend their day schools and other educational institutions.

—Evangelical Protestantism in Italy may be summed up as follows: 1. The Waldensian church, with 6,000 communicants, 1,200 children in Sabbath-schools, and a Theological college at Florence. 2. "The Union of the Free Christian Church of Italy," with Gavazzi as a prominent leader, numbering about 30 congregations, and 1,000 communicants. 3. The "Christian churches of Italy," numbering about the same as the Free Church. 4. The Methodist church, with 21 stations, 550 Sabbath-school scholars, and 900 church members.

—The American Mission at Beirut, Syria, sustains a Sabbath-school of 350 pupils, which uses the International Lessons, supports a colporteur among the Bedouins, and its Young Men's Benevolent Society sustains another missionary. The school also has a monthly paper, in Arabic, called the Morning Star, edited by Rev. Dr. Jessup. Its teachers are nearly all educated Christian natives. In the Syria Mission, says a correspondent of the New York Observer, there are 22 Sabbath-schools, and 900 pupils. 2 high schools, 62 pupils; 2 female seminaries, 125 pupils; and 2,107 scholars in the common schools; the contributions to benevolent objects in the mission for the past year were $1,328.

News of the Week.

The City.

—The preliminary proceedings for the trial of Prof. Swing have been taken by the Chicago Presbytery. The trial will not begin for ten days, except at the request of the parties.

—The journeymen shoemakers, members of the Crispin society, struck some eight weeks ago, and have since been out of work. The manufacturers filled their places with new men, and the strikers, having lost their places, have started a co-operative association.

The Capitol.

—In the Howard Court of Inquiry, the Government has nearly completed its evidence, and the council for the defense think of resting their case upon the testimony already taken. This investigation is into the management of the Bureau, and the court has decided that it does not recognize General Howard as resting under any official accusation or suspicion.

—Delegations from New York and Boston appointed by the leading business organizations have visited Pres. Grant to protest against the inflation act. The first named was received coldly, Senators Carpenter and Logan sitting by smoking cigars. The latter were snubbed and on returning home called a meeting of citizens to organize against official and party dishonesty.

—The Civil Service Commission has reported in favor of carrying on the Civil Service Reform and appropriating $25,000 for this purpose.

The Country.

—The Arkansas troubles between the gubernatorial claimants daily assume a more warlike aspect. Both sides are reinforced with men and arms, and each party is one-half of colored men. The U. S. troops are between the combatants and prevent otherwise certain bloodshed.

—The great East River bridge, which is denounced by Mayor Havemeyer, of New York, has already cost $4,300,000, and will cost $10,000,000 more.

Foreign.

—Sir G. Wolseley, leader of the English expedition to the Ashantee country, Africa, says of Coomassie, the capital of the country: "I certainly believe that no more utterly atrocious government than that which has thus, perhaps, fallen, ever existed on the face of the earth. Their capital was a charnel-house; their religion a combination of cruelty and treachery; their policy, the natural outcome of their religion."

—Washington Irvington's "Life of Mohamet" would never be thought an insurrectionary work, but the publication of a translation in Bombay not long since, provoked a riot among the followers of the "Prophet."

—Fifty-three persons were killed by a fire damp explosion in an English mine last week.

—The French Steamship Company have lost a third vessel in six months: the Ville de Havre, the Europe, and this week the Amerique is reported abandoned at sea. An English vessel found her and towed her into port with only a little water in the hold.

—The Chilian steamer Tacna capsized on the 14th with a loss of nineteen lives.

—The Chicago Tribune is responsible for the following particulars of the Masonic contamination of the British Parliament:

"In the British Parliament there are 133 Freemasons—fifty-six in the House of Lords and seventy-seven in the Commons. Fifteen of the Freemasons in the lower House are noblemen; and there are also ten sons of Peers who are not in Parliament who belong to this mystic order. The Prince of Wales heads the list of Freemasons who have seats in Parliament, and Mr. Whalley brings up in the rear. One of the bishops, he of Peterborough, is a Mason, seven dukes, eight marquises, seventeen earls, four viscounts, and seventeen barons make up the list of Peers who wear the apron and have ridden the goat. Neither Mr. Gladstone nor Mr. Disraeli is a Mason."

The "Mollie Maguires."

Probably no State in the country is so overrun with robbers and desperadoes as Pennsylvania. Almost every largely populated city or town has within its precincts a regularly organized band of outlaws, who hold the citizens in terror by their frequent and terrible depredations on person and property.

Scranton is situated at the upper end of the renowned Wyoming coal region. Near here, and in the same corporation, is Hyde Park, a place of some 10,000 population. This has, of recent years, been the scene of many outrages perpetrated by the "Mollie Maguires," a horde of desperadoes who infest the coal country. It is said the "Mollies" originated from a secret organization which existed for many years in Ireland. The band, which is between 1,500 and 2,000 strong, is led by Tim O'Donnelly, whose headquarters are in a lonesome, unromantic spot on Keyser's Mountain. In Hyde Park and this city, no less than twelve persons have disappeared mysteriously, and are said to have been "put away" by the "Mollies," this year.

Their plan of operations is said to be as follows: When the "Mollies" have determined upon the death of any one who has incurred their vengeance, cuts are drawn, and the one on whose lot it falls to dispatch the victim does his bloody work silently, but surely. A man named Jones, a "Mollie," warned a friend about a week since, that he was a "marked man." A few days afterward, Jones himself was found dead upon the highway. Upon examination, it was found he had been stabbed to the heart. Near where he laid was the emblem of the "Mollies,"—a coffin, skull and cross-bones,—to which was attached, on a card, the words: "So dies a traitor." When the band wishes any one to leave the neighborhood, a notice bearing some horrible symbol of death is placed on the door of his residence, with the written injunction that he must leave in twenty-four hours. It is needless to state that the warning is generally heeded.

In the Schuylkill regions, especially about Mahanoy City, Girardsville, Locust Gap, Centralia, Mt. Carmel and Shamokin, the "Mollies" pursue their depredations without any check,—the people living in constant fear of their lives. Hardly a day passes but that a "mysterious death" occurs. A few days since, a miner, Michael Dougherty, was passing along the main street of Centralia, when, all at once, he was seen to totter and fall. Persons ran to him, and upon reaching the spot, found he had been shot. As no shot was heard at the time of the occurrence, the matter was, of course, regarded as very mysterious. The man was carried home, and on the door of his house was found the inscription: "He betrayed the band." This was followed by skulls, cross-bones, and other hidious emblems. By this it was at once known who committed the murder. No attempt is ever made by the authorities to unravel these crimes, as everybody fears the vengeance of the terrible organization. It is generally conceded that there is no law in Schuylkill county.

It is the popular belief that these brigands are bound by the most terrible oath; and, if one is selected to commit murder, and then fails, he is compelled to die by his own hand, in the presence of the entire organization.

It is during a miners' strike that the "Mollies" raise the mischief generally. Your correspondent has been the witness of some terrible scenes at such times. Murders are perpetrated; "mine-breakers" and other property burned. During the "long strike," no less than 100 persons fell victims to the riots and disorder, while, at the time of the "stand-out," last winter, at least twenty-five atrocious murders were perpetrated. —Tribune.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

The report of the Commissioner of Education, for last year, which is now being printed, has a strikingly interesting table showing the gifts by individuals for educational purposes. The names of the benefactors, the amount of each benefaction, and the name of the institution receiving the same, are given in detail. The aggregate for the year for all purposes was $11,226,977, as follows: Universities and colleges, $8,238,141; schools of science, $780,658; schools of theology, $619,801; medical colleges, etc.; $78,600; superior instruction of women, $252,005; secondary instruction, $575,241; libraries, $379,011; museums of natural history, $131,680; deaf and dumb, $4,000; blind, $15,000; Peabody fund, $135,840; miscellaneous, $17,000. Of this amount our own State received, for universities and colleges, $438,325; schools of theology, $20,183; schools of medicine, $29,300; secondary instruction, $54,500; libraries, $110,717; deaf and dumb, and blind, $2,500; miscellaneous, $1,000; making a total of $657,824. The Bureau of Education was the first public agency to undertake the gathering of these facts, the earliest attempt being made by the present Commissioner, General Eaton, in 1871, the showing for that year being over $8,000,000, and for 1872 over $10,950,000.—Ex.

Of 26,202 persons arrested in Liverpool in 1868, 222, or about one in 11,000 could neither read nor write. Of those arrested for drunkenness and drunken disorder, 40 per cent. could neither read nor write. Of 63,000 arrests in London, 17,000 could read and write well; 61, that is, one in a thousand, had superior instruction; 2,000 could neither read nor write; and 84 per cent. could read only, or read and write imperfectly.

The Chicago dailies are beginning the discussion of the propriety of Freemasons laying the corner-stone of the new post-office. The Times of April 19th contains an excellent article on the subject. A prominent business man of Chicago, and a Mason, who is a Presbyterian, says: "The Masonic fraternity have no more business to lay the corner-stone of the post-office than the Presbyterians have."

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

CHAPTER II.

SOME OF THE MEANS USED BY COLLEGE FRATERNITIES FOR LITERARY AND SOCIAL PROGRESS.

Every collegiate institution is a community in itself. A community of persons who have through desire separated themselves to seek and intermeddle with all wisdom; the law of association loses none of its force in a collection of such spirits, but practically seems more strong. College friendships are proverbial. Likeness in character, taste or study; fellowship in religion or unbelief, literary zeal or the pursuit of pleasure draw inevitable lines through every institution. Hence originated the secret fraternity system. Doubtless it had questionable ends at first, such as the propagation of infidel sentiments; but, so far as now known, it claims to seek nothing but social enjoyment or literary culture. Some of the means used to these ends will be described in this chapter.

Beginning with the first society organized in this country the Phi Beta Kappa, some of the attractive features are presented in Allyn's "Ritual of Freemasonry," published 1831, in the following terms:—

"The mysteries of this order are conferred only upon students at colleges where Phi Beta Kappa societies are established, and from among these, those only who have most distinguished themselves are selected for initiation. The Senior class chooses from the Junior, one-third of its number. These are privately informed of their election, and at an appointed time, without any formality, or preparation, are initiated. An oath or promise of secrecy is then exacted from them. But this is in anticipation of any communication to them. An historical sketch of the institution is next given, together with the signs, grips, words, and an explanation of the jewel, or medal, which is always silver or gold, and provided at the candidate's expese. The medal is usually worn, suspended by a blue and pink ribbon in the bosom, or as a watch-key. The sign is given by placing the two fore fingers of the right hand so as to cover the left corner of the mouth, and then drawing it across the chin. The grip is like the common shaking of hands, only not interlocking the thumbs, and at the same time gently pressing he wr-2 ts. The word is Philosophia Biou Kubernetes—or, Philosophy is the rule, guide or governess of life. The three letters forming the initials of the word—in Greek—designate the name of the order and involve the mysteries of its principles. The meaning of the whole is, that it is to philosophy we are to look for a rule of life, and not to religion. To the Phibetian, though he may not think so, it is the same as Voltaire's, "Ecrasez l'infame," or "crush the wretch,"—meaning Christ. Philosophy has ever been the watchword of the infidel."

The ceremonies of initiation in a Yale Freshman society are thus described in "Four Years at Yale," written by a graduate of 1869:—

"Within a week from the commencement of the term about every Freshman has been pledged and preparations are being made for the 'initiation.' The term opens on Thursday, and the traditional time of initiation is Friday night of the following week. As the darkness approaches, the discordant blasts of tin horns and the rattle of bangers upon the pavement admonish the expectant Freshman that the hour of their trial is rapidly drawing near. Each one has received during the day a black-edged envelope, containing a black-edged card or sheet of paper bearing the society badge and this fearful summons: 'Freshman [or Mr.] So-and-so: You will be waited upon at your room this evening, and be presented for initiation into the dark and awful mysteries of the —— Fraternity. Per order.' The half of a card of fantastic design and peculiarly notched edge is also enclosed, and the Freshman is instructed to surrender himself only to the personage who presents him with the other half of that peculiar card which will be identified by the 'matching' of the edges, no two cards of the many given out having been notched exactly alike. Sometime between the hours of seven and ten our Freshman is called for, identifies the card presented to him, and gives himself up to his conductor, who may very likely have a companion, wearing a mask, like himself, or otherwise disguised. Perhaps they visit some eating house where the Freshman treats to an oyster supper; or perhaps he promises to give the supper the following evening; or perhaps he doesn't care to treat at all. Possibly he has been blindfolded from the time he left his room, and has had a tin horn blown close to his ear occasionally, on the way, though this is unusual. But at length they draw near some public building from within which proceed sounds as if of pandemonium itself. The Freshman is blindfolded for a minute or two, is shoved forward, hears a door open and close behind him with a bang, and opens his eyes to find himself in pitch darkness. However, he at once perceives he is not alone, but in the midst of other Freshmen, like himself waiting their turn. The noise meanwhile seems louder and louder and when an inner door opens and a name is called, it becomes almost deafening. Soon our 'Fresh' is wanted. A red devil in the passage way, assisted by a living skeleton, redolent of phosphorus, quickly blindfolds him and he is hurried upward. When has reached an elevation apparently of several hundred feet, a new element in the continual din assures him that he is at last in the inquisitorial hall. But just as he begins to reply to the last nonsensical question put by an attendant fiend, some one jostles against him and down, down, down he falls until he strikes—a blanket held in readiness for him. Then up he flies into the air again amid admiring shrieks of 'Go it, Freshie!' 'Well done, sub!' 'Shake him up!' until a new candidate demands the attention of the tossers. Then he is officiously told to rest himself in a chair, the seat of which lets him into a pail of water beneath, though a large sponge probably saves him from an actual wetting; his head and hands are thrust through a pillory and he is reviled in that awkward position; he is rolled in an exaggerated squirrel wheel; a noose is thrown around his neck and he is dragged beneath the guillotine, when the bandage is pulled from his eyes and he glares upon the glittering knife of block tin which falls within a foot of his throat and cannot possibly go further. Being thus executed, he is thrust into a coffin, which is hammered upon with such energy that he is at length recalled to life, pulled out again and made to wear his coat with the inside outward. This is the sign that his initiation is over and he can now stand by and enjoy the fun. Ranging himself with the turn-coated classmates whom he finds have preceeded him, he looks upon a motley throng of struggling Sophomores arrayed in every variety of hideous and fantastic disguise, shouting, screaming, horn-blowing and putting the Freshmen through the various stages of the ceremony, which in his own case has just been completed, while the Juniors and Seniors stand by as passive spectators of the sport."

But more elaborate processes are not wanting and are often gone through with. The Freshman may be shut in a coffin-shaped box and suddenly raised by a rope and pulley to a height of several yards, when the bottom of his cage dropping allows him to fall on the out-stretched blanket; or two or three fire-arms may be discharged over his head at the moment a trap-door falls beneath his feet, and drops him upon a blanket below. Sometimes he is lowered through the floor in a coffin as into a grave, and often he is dragged and jolted across the stage over blocks of wood in a vehicle much like a hen-coop on wheels. But some of these more brutal sports are now under the embargo of the Yale faculty.

"The ceremony concluded, the newly initiated are pledged to observe the secrets of their society, ordered to assemble at the hall early on the following evening and dismissed,—though not until several have been called upon to 'make speeches,' which are greeted with uproarious mock applause, and sarcastic cries of 'Well done, Freshie!' 'Good for you!' and so on. Next day the Freshmen pay their initiation fees, which vary from five dollars to twice that in different societies, and different years; swing out their badges, most of which are lent them by the Sophomores until their own can be engraved upon the back with their name and that of their class; and at the appointed hour approach their society hall, which they find entirely transformed in appearance since the previous night. The Sophomores are now stretched out upon the carpeted floor in the center of the hall, smoking, laughing and singing, while the Freshmen occupy the seats about. The President orders the reading of the constitution, whereto the new members affix their names. A farewell poem and oration are pronounced, or possibly a play is acted."

That the above account is substantially correct there is no doubt. It is corroborated by graduates of Yale who have witnessed the scene, some of whom have been connected with the fraternities, and others who never were.

This initiation is brutal and foolish enough, but current newspaper reports give additional horrors. The following, from the correspondence of the New York Sun (Nov. 1873), describes briefly the ceremonies of some of the minor societies of Cornell University, Ithica, N. Y.:—

"The candidate is then taken from his room after midnight, and led to a secluded room in a secluded street, where the members have gathered in masks to see the fun. He is blindfolded and pinioned, and then led over boxes, chairs and other obstacles until his shins are barked and he is tired into resistlessness. The room is in a commercial building which is furnished with an elevator, and down this the victim is next dangled at the end of a rope, this frightening process being followed by the tossing in a blanket. He is then saturated with water from squirt guns, after which the blindfold is removed amid hideous noises, demoniac lights and fiendish dresses, and a pledge of secrecy is made. After this, he is usually blindfolded again, placed in a coffin, and some process resorted to which is intended to convince the victim that he is dying. This is sometimes done by suddenly drenching the head with water, and then administering chloroform; or by heating the bare breast nearly to a blister with a hot shovel held close to it, and then clapping on a large piece of ice, under which treatment he becomes insensible. When he awakes, he finds that the bandage and the pinions are removed, and that he is in a coffin surrounded by ghostly forms. If he is sufficiently scared by this, the ceremonies are then closed."

This description has the supporting testimony of the Buffalo Commercial's correspondent at the same place, but must be judged as a newspaper report, to be taken cum grano salis, until substantiated.

Initiations in upper class societies at Yale are more secret; but as they last until daybreak and are attended with heavy noises and confused uproar, it is hardly to be supposed that so much time and trouble would be taken only to make proper impression upon the students listening without. The intent of the initiation, especially with the Freshmen, is to thoroughly scare and intimidate, but not hurt. As says the work above quoted, "There is nothing specially unpleasant about being tossed in a blanket, and Freshmen often toss one another for the mere fun of the thing. But a blindfolded man, in a pandemonium of noises and an atmosphere of tobacco smoke, flying up and down through illimitable space, needs all his wits about him if he would keep cool and reason himself into a feeling of security. No one has any right to enter college until he is old enough to go through these imaginary terrors without any great amount of flinching; but in the rare instances when a very young Freshman shows signs of faintness at any point of the ceremony, the bandage is at once pulled from his eyes and he is declared initiated: a proceeding which is pretty sure to restore him forthwith. Nor is it true that drunken men control the proceedings. A Sophomore or two may be present who have plainly imbibed too freely at their suppers, but they are closely watched by their sober companions and prevented from putting Freshmen through any process outside the regular programme." It is generally believed that accidents do frequently happen, and sometimes of a serious nature; and with some societies the precaution of having restoratives at hand has become habitual.

In the obligations imposed on students by the fraternity there is probably little diversity. Some boldly require a formal oath; others omit the form while the spirit is the same. The pledge of the Beta Theta Pi society as administered in the Lambda chapter, connected with the State University at Bloomington, Indiana, reads thus:—

"ART. XII. Every individual on being admitted to this association shall solemnly bind himself by the following obligation, administered by the president:—

1. I promise to keep inviolably secret all the signs, symbols, objects and proceedings of the Beta Theta Pi, and to yield implicit obedience to its constitution, by-laws and instructions.

2. I promise to place implicit confidence in every member of this association, and to use all honorable means to promote his interests and to aid in his preferment.

3. I promise never to see calmly, nor without earnest desire and decided efforts to prevent it, the ill-treatment, slander, or defamation of any one who wears the badge or bears the name of Beta Theta Pi.

4. I promise to preserve inviolate the secrets of every member of this association delivered to me as such, or when the information requires secrecy for his welfare; and, further, in my intercourse with members to be urbane in my deportment, courteous in expression, and steadfast in friendship.

5. I solemnly promise to uphold as an individual the dignity of the Beta Theta Pi; and, in my intercourse with mankind, to maintain my character as one of its members.

6. I solemnly promise that, if at any time my connection with Beta Theta Pi should be dissolved, I will never reveal anything of the nature, objects, or business of the association."

At Monmouth College, Monmouth, Ill., the Kappa Phi Delta administers two oaths. The first in the ante-room before the candidate enters for initiation; before taking it he gives satisfactory answers to questions concerning his belief in God, the Scriptures, a future state of rewards and punishments, etc.,—an impious attempt at jocularity. The preparatory obligation reads as follows:—

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear in presence of Almighty God, with my hand upon his sacred word, that I do not belong to any fraternity or secret association at this college. And furthermore promise and swear that I will not reveal anything I have seen or may see here. So help me God."

The second oath is administered in the lodge-room after the candidate is placed on his knees before the presiding officer, who says:—

"You do solemnly swear in the presence of Almighty God, with your hand upon his sacred word, and before these witnesses, the members of the Kappa Phi Delta fraternity, that you will not reveal any of its secrets or make known any of its mysteries to any one except a regularly initiated member; that you will always endeavor by your conduct and actions to preserve its integrity inviolate; that you will take the part of a brother Kappa Phi Delta, when assailed in either character or person, to the best of your ability; that you will do everything in your power to promote the interest and well being of each and every brother of the Kappa Phi Delta fraternity; that you will not initiate or recommend for initiation any one whom you think would bring disgrace upon the fraternity or injure any one of its members; that should you possess a Kappa Phi Delta badge you will not dispose of it to any one without the consent of the fraternity; that you will cheerfully conform to all the established rules and regulations of the fraternity; that you will vote for a Kappa Phi Delta in preference to any fraternity or neutral man should he be a candidate in either of the literary societies of the college; that you will respond to all calls of the fraternity and all its established signs and grips given by any of its members. So help you God."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages jnst issued by him, pnrporting to give a full and accnrate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abdnction and Murder,' is the title of a volnme written and jnst published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughont the conntry forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The anthor opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they pnrport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the anthor of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Seed-sowing time precedes harvest. If any of our agents scatter tracts and canvass for the Cynosure without securing subscribers immediately we hope they will not be discouraged, but remember they are sowing seed. Do not forget it after it is sowed, but keep cultivating the field, and we feel that a harvest is sure. One agent says he has spent thirteen dollars in this work with very little return, but he intends to keep at it and try to influence Christian men and women to investigate this subject and put their shoulder to the work of removing these evils.

OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

Reports have come to us occasionally that enemies of the Cynosure have said that its mail list numbered from 500 to 1,000 names. And now the report comes to us that some of our friends say we have a subscription list of from 15,000 to 20,000.

For the first five years and a half we discontinued papers only by special order, and our mail list when most flourishing (just before the great fire of 1871, in which the mail list was destroyed,) numbered between 6,000 and 7,000. After that fire it again came up to more than 4,000, but during these years we were all the time subjected to loss from discontinuances with arrears unpaid. Last summer there were 1,000 names on our list with the annexed dates more than three months behind, and half of these were nearer six months back than three months, and the paper hardly paid expenses.

After six months careful work, sending out circulars, notices, bills, etc., we commenced Jan. 1, 1874, the plan of stopping subscriptions when the time was out.

OUR PLAN

is to send a notice to every subscriber whose subscription expires in a given month, stating this fact and asking a renewal during the month, or if the money is not at hand and the subscriber would like to continue the paper, we ask for information to that effect with a promise to renew as soon as possible. In this way we hope to keep a live interest and co-operation in our work without hurting any one's feelings or running up doubtful accounts which we have no certainty of collecting.

Our readers, generally, LIKE THE NEW ARRANGEMENT, and we trust it will prove a mutual benefit to the cause and to them.

It lessens our numbers considerably just now, but we trust this effect is only temporary, and that our present list, which, on April 17th, numbered 3,886, will increase steadily. We feel that a very large number of our readers desire to see the Cynosure principles established in every social, moral and political circle in our country, and that when they recollect that the population of our country is estimated at near 40,000,000, and the popular vote for President in 1872 counted 6,431,147, they will see that there is room for a great increase in the circulation before the Cynosure can directly influence an average of one in 400 of our inhabitants, or one in sixty-four of our voters.

As long as our readers feel, in the language of a correspondent, that the Cynosure should be the standard paper in every family in the land and labor to make it so, so long will we be encouraged and with God's blessing made more powerful in opposing sin and promoting justice and truth.

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commission." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2.00 a year and requires a great addition to our present mail list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not, as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

Topics of the Time.

TUNAS TITUS KENDRICK.—This gentleman has just been dismissed from the Grand St. M. E. Church, of Williamsburg, for drunkenness and immorality. Last winter this same man delivered an address before the Masons of Brooklyn, which was hailed by the brotherhood as another proof that our greatest and best men are all Masons. Now that he has been turned out of the church for drunkenness and immorality, the Anti-masons can show the people of Brooklyn what sort of ministers defend Masonry, and the Masons can slide him off to some other place to orate and drink, and be immoral again. How long shall these secret and satanic orders fill pulpits with such Masonic saints?

APPLETON AND THE CATHOLICS.—It appears from the public prints that the Appletons in revising their American Cyclopedia have engaged Catholics to rewrite all articles bearing on the interests of their church. Under their revision the history of all matters of conflict between Protestantism and Rome is steadily falsified, and after this assassination of truth, the house sends circulars to Catholics asking them to purchase the lies. It is very likely that they may sell more books to priests; but if they enter on such a course, the time will come when no Protestant who retains his self-respect will have the New American Cyclopedia or any other book published by this firm on his shelves. We have as yet seen only the accusation and not the defense. We hope that there is some explanation, and if any satisfactory one is made we will be glad to make it known to all our readers.

THE FLOOD.—In the State of Louisiana much distress is resulting from the inundation caused by breaks in the levees. The State authorities receive applications for food daily, and the National government has authorized the issuance of rations to the sufferers. Now, as always, pestilence and starvation follow in the wake of war. Georgia and Alabama have had no crops to speak of for two years past, while the whole South is poor, and oppressed by the rule of ignorance and debased whites and blacks. Debts are piled mountain high, laziness almost universal, drinking and gambling quite so. These are the floods most to be feared for our brethren in the South. Years of oppression and rivers of blood are yet to be avenged. It is only by humiliation and prayer that the curse of God can be averted. Neither let us suppose that if the South be ruined the North will escape. We have been partners in the crimes of slavery, and are now partners in the disregard of God's law. We have need to return to God to humble ourselves before him, to remove the evils that exist, and to prepare the way of the Lord in our own hearts, and so far as we may in those of our fellows.

THE VETO.—President Grant has interposed his "I forbid," to save the country from the deluge of paper money, which our Congressional Punch and Judys were about to inflict upon it. For this he deserves and will receive the thanks of every citizen who believes in paying debts and disbelieves in repudiating honest obligations. Of course this veto is perfectly consistent with the present rule of political action. That rule is: "We must get the offices, and will profess and do what is necessary to that end." The politician has but one prayer, and that is: "Oh, Lord, help me to get over the fence in time when the parties shift." Of course this makes a politician a very contemptible man, and equally, of course, a vast majority of politicians are so. Look at the office beggar's meeting in the Palmer House lately. A number of individuals gathered there, who want some public place. They did not declare a principle, or express an opinion that had any bearing near or remote on the interests of the country, their only song was

> We want to save the country,
> And to get a little back pay;
> We are willing to suffer, and bleed, and lie,
> In robbing the Treasury.

Grant is surrounded by such men; those who would chase a black man all over the country for a slave catcher, or hug the greasiest man and brother in Georgia as their interests require. He smokes and drinks, while they write his messages. Is it not about time for an American party?

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.—It is evident that a church has power with men just in proportion as it is pure. Not that any church is to be composed of perfect men, but that all churches should be made up of men who refrain from habitual wrong-doing and repent sincerely of all lapses from the path of holiness. At present the various denominations, little and large, are full of covetous men, that is, of idolators. Hundreds have a name upon church rolls who have no worship of God in their homes and no prayer in their hearts. Men are kept in one church, because if turned out they will pay to another, and when too bad to wish for any church they are dropped, as a pastor lately said, "to avoid discipline." This it is which has given us our gospel of sentimentalism, and filled our churches with theatre-going, wine-drinking, card-playing, dancing, money-worshiping Christians (?). It is an attempt to serve Satan and get to heaven, to fear the Lord and worship idols, to yoke Christ and the devil to a sect on which sinners may ride to glory. Bad as our case is, there is light as well as darkness. There are more than seven thousand who have not bowed to Baal. There are earnest, humble, praying men and women. There are pastors who rise by night to weep over the desolate city of God. Let them have faith and courage. Let the alliance between the saint and sinner in religious matters be broken. Cast societies for the support of the ministry to the moles and the bats. Let us trust in our God and quit ourselves like men. Let us as Christians be more tender-hearted, honest, liberal and faithful. Then will Zion put on her beautiful garments, arise and shine.

TAXING CHURCHES.—A movement originating with the anti-religious element which opposes the Christian amendment, and which has a large support from every class, Christian or otherwise, which cries out against Bible in schools, Sabbath laws, etc., is the repeal of laws exempting churches and educational institutions from taxation. The theory of the movement is: first, a check upon the amassing of vast sums in denominational property, for which the Roman Catholics are most notorious; and second, the subordination of all property interests to the state. The Christian sentiment which most strongly favors the plan, is strangely that which has always most earnestly contended against any union of church and state. But how can any fail to see that the taxation of church property is a direct attempt to secure such an obnoxious union? They now exist in this country independently of such other; both seeking the same ends—the public weal—one by motives applied to the nobler faculties and conscience, the other by influencing the lower nature. They act independently, though exercising a mutual restraint. But to tax the organization which acts on the higher plane, subjects it to the lower, debases it by authority, and in the same degree destroys its influence, its power over the conscience of the masses. It would be a usurpation of force; a violation of the natural law which marks the boundary of each institution; a degradation of government itself, in demanding for its support a per cent. of the voluntary offerings of love and faith. The basis of the effort is a plea for cowardice. Some wealthy church corporations, which transact in real estate, should pay for government protection, it is said; and, fearing to apply the rule to these only, the whole body of churches, poor and rich, must pay for an existence; or because some sixty million of church property is remunerative, the other three hundred million, which is not, should take up a burden which does not belong to it. There would not be a shadow of claim for taxation, were the churches back upon their right and Scriptural ground of support by free-will offerings; on no other can they prosper or fulfill their mission. The apostolic churches were a long way from carrying on a profitable business in rentals and land speculation, or living at the expense of human lives from the rent of saloons, as does the Trinity Church of New York. But the State has no power to lash the church back to duty. The Quixotic attempt would be a sacrifice of both. If the blind lead the blind, shall not both fall into the ditch?

OUR COLLEGES ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE.

MARYVILLE, TENN., Sept. 24th, 1873.

GENTLEMEN:—I believe that secret societies, generally speaking, are fraught with mischief and should be discouraged, especially in our institutions of learning. We do not allow any such organizations in this college. Opposed to them as I was when a student, I will not countenance them while presiding over students.

We are all of us so pressed with duties that we have not time to prepare a well written article for the public eye. P. M. BARTLETT, President.

Against all Secret Societies.

A LETTER FROM PROF. SAMUEL N. SWEET TO GERRIT SMITH.

My Dear Sir:—As your life, which has been gloriously devoted to the honor and welfare of our country, and the happiness of the world, is drawing to a close; and as I, too, although eight years younger than yourself, being now in my 69th year, am fast ripening for the icy embrace of death, will you allow me to write you for the public page, if your honor pleases, on a subject deeply interesting to our beloved countrymen.

Your name is familiar to the public ear, as a philanthropist, and the eloquent assertion of the people's rights, irrespective of sex or color, throughout the civilized world. Being a patriot without guile or concealment, you have always, in common with myself, opposed secret societies. In your published letter from Peterboro, August 10th, 1847, you say: "Secret societies are to be watched and guarded against, as conspiracies against the rights of man." Moreover, you are the great apostle of temperance, the blessed cause of which you espoused more than half a century ago. When the Emperor of China wrote a letter to Sir Isaac Newton, of whom it has been said:

"Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said let Newton be! and all was light."

He superscribed it, "Mr. Newton, of Europe," and it reached the great astronomer. Many thousands bear the name of Smith, in the United States, but if a foreigner should address a letter to Mr. Smith, of America, it would doubtless reach the beautiful little village of Peterboro!

On Wednesday evening, January 28th, 1874, I heard Dr. D. C. Wright, of Rochester, lecture on temperance; and, in common with the audience, I was greatly pleased. I, however, regret very much that he is engaged chiefly in forming societies, called "Sons of Temperance." Secret societies are behind the intelligence of this beautiful afternoon of the glorious nineteenth century. They are dangerous to all governments, especially to those that are free. The constitution of the United States does not permit even the representatives chosen by the people to act with closed doors, except on extraordinary occasions. It is a matter of astonishment, that a nation so jealous of its liberties should yet permit within its bosom self-created societies, to administer extra-judicial oaths in secret! They are instituted to dupe the simple for the benefit of the crafty. They are temples of tyranny, where the initiated swear fealty to an unknown prince. All oaths and promises are void, which bind together a portion of mankind in secret and selfish associations, tending to limit the benevolence which we owe to all; or, which, in terms or effect, deprive others of their equal rights. The Bible says: "No man lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel." The noble cause of temperance is not benefitted, but greatly injured by oaths and promises of secrecy under its mortal penalty.

Did our sainted forefathers emigrate from the mother country in the May-flower, to establish an unhallowed secret society? Did Christ and his disciples withhold the benevolent precepts of the gospel from all who came not with money in their hands, to be initiated in the dead of night? Did they not, on the contrary, offer it to all who were disposed to walk in its morning effulgence, without money and without price? The great Keeper of the green fields beyond the flood, established no lodge of secrecy; closed no doors against any member of the human family. He did not require his followers to wear "lamb-skin aprons;" but windows in their breasts. To join a secret society, is to disregard his bright and glorious example. When Dr. Wright requested all to leave the room, except those who had apprised him they would join the "Sons of Temperance," before they knew the terms of membership, the words of Christ occurred to me: "Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." He gave His followers no catechism, and yet His teaching satisfies the soul as no one else is able.

The late Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, says in a published letter from Charleston, June 29th, 1833, "All secret societies are dangerous, in proportion to the extent of their organization, and the number of their members." The late William H. Seward expressed the same unfavorable opinion of secret societies in his letters to me, in one of which, from Auburn, April 20th, 1830, he said:—"My Dear Sir:—Unparalleled in the history of this republic, is the vindictive spirit with which Freemasonry, inch by inch, visits the advance of truth into her dark cayerns. I look upon you as one with the talent, enegry, and enthusiasm, which our young and righteous cause requires, and I hold it indebted to you for exertion and unwearied devotion to its prosperity. I covet no higher name to bequeath to my children, than that of being one of the early and constant advocates of republicanism, as opposed to false and aristocratical Freemasonry."

Standing secrecy implies shame and guilt. Innocence seeks no cover. Deception and crime cry, "Come night, and shroud us in the mantle of the dark." Secrecy is the badge of a tyrannical government. Ours was not organized by the secret factions of designing demagogues, directed by the midnight conclave. The Father of our country, in his farewell address, warned his beloved countrymen against all secret societies. As happily expressed by Shakspeare,

"It is a great sin to swear unto sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a murderous deed; to rob a man;
To reave the orphan of his patrimony;
To wring the widow from her customed right:
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?"

The argument in this selection is so palpable in favor of violating wicked oaths, that it only needs to be contemplated by the candid mind, to produce perfect conviction. The immortal Washington "won that imperishable fame, which shall never fade, by lifting the glittering steel of the patriot soldier above the neglected oath which had once bound him to the British throne. Fortunately for the country and posterity, he accepted the presidency in the evening of life, and the glory of his administration was equalled only by the laurel of his unrivalled military fame. He was a farmer at Mount Vernon, but he proposed no farmers' secret grange society. "May heaven forefend," that the high priests of iniquity and Royal Arch villains should succeed in cheating farmers, who form the bone and sinew of our Republic out, of their hard earnings.

The titles of Templars and Sons of Temperance, like those of Freemasonry, are vain, foolish, and inconsistent with our republican institutions, which do not tolerate the star and garter of an English lord, nor the coronet of a foreign prince. And yet, members of secret societies clothe themselves in all the colors of the rainbow, and decorate themselves with as many jewels as are worn by an Indian chief; and they expect to be addressed in this country, where, as contemplated by our laws, and State and National Constitutions, we are all upon an equal footing, by the titles of "Worthy Patriarch," "Grand Scribe," "Most Worshipful," "Most Illustrious Highness," "Grand Master," "General Grand High Priest," "King," "Grand King." General Jackson said in his admirable letter of March 27th, 1845, to Commodore J. L. Elliott, declining a sarcophagus: "True virtue and patriotism cannot exist where pomp and parade are the governing passions." In the language of the sweet bard of Avon,

"Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue."

The late Rev. Jedediah Burchard, no less truthfully than shrewd, said: "A sugar devil is the worst kind of a devil." Those who organize or join secret societies, under the pretext of promoting the precious interests of temperance, substantially "write good angel on the devil's horn." All the friends of temperance ought to give each other the right hand of friendship, irrespective of any organization, and unitedly give King Alcohol, "who is lifting in pride and agony his thunder-scared front from his couch of everlasting fire," war to the knife, and the knife to the hilt, and "damned be he who first cries, Hold! enough!"

The prayer of one of the wisest and best men of all antiquity, was: "Oh! thou eternal king of men and angels, elevate our minds! Each low and partial passion thence dispel; till this great truth in every heart be known, that none but those who aid the public cause, can shield their country or themselves from chains."

This prayer of Leonidas, my dear friend Smith and brother in Christ, is embodied, substantially, in the principles we cherish, and which are sanctified in our hearts.

"What Shall we do at Syracuse?"

BY J. L. BARLOW.

The above question stands at the head and brings up the rear of the editorial leader in the Cynosure of April 9th. Of Christian patriots, no more pertinent question can be asked at this time. To Anti-masonic Christian voters, and to all Anti-masons, who handle the ballot, it is one of overwhelming importance. No Anti-mason, with clear convictions, can longer give his vote for the minions of the lodge. To do so, is to give his sanction to the prolonged existence, and the destructive work of secretism. American politics to-day are wholly under the control of the lodge, and no politician of State or national reputation, dares to speak or act in opposition to its sacred or open behests. Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, did dare to speak against Masonry in Chicago four years ago, and to-day he is politically dead, and every effort is being made by the Masonic institution to ruin him as a man.

Both the great parties of our day are worked in the interest of this secret despotism, with Masonry at its head. Every Anti-masonic vote cast for either of these parties, as at present constituted, serves to strengthen the hands and consolidate the workings of this illegitimate power; and correspondingly to weaken and render powerless the hearts and efforts of those who love a holy religion and a free, untrammeled government. If these things are true, how important the inquiry, "What Shall we do at Syracuse?"

Hitherto, we have met simply as Christians. We have prayed. That was well. God has mercifully answered our prayers in the direction of our labor, which has been to awaken the public mind to a sense of the appalling dangers surrounding us. We have become acquainted, and thus mutual helpers in a work to which we feel that we are called of God, not only as Christians, but citizens. Once we have indeed, ventured into the field as voters, but it was feebly done, and with divided counsels; and yet with results, of which we have no reason to be ashamed. We have tried our steel and know its temper. Much of our power is latent, and is yet to be brought into action, and effectual steps to do this are to be taken at Syracuse.

We have prayed. Now it is time to strip for action. We know our enemy, and where to find him. The ballot has put him where he is, and made him what he is. The ballot must unmake, and dethrone him as a power in our government, and an enlightened public opinion must drive him from the land. To attempt this through either of the parties, as now organized, is to stultify and make ourselves the laughing stock of the lodge. The anti-slavery men tried this mode of action, and as a general result, secured "northern men with southern principles." Success only came at last through the formation of a new party, and at the end of a cruel war. Let us learn a lesson from the past. Let us be apt pupils in the school of Providence. Should we accept the advice of some—make no political issues at present, wait on the parties for Anti-masonic candidates—I have no doubt we should get them, as soon as we seem to be a power to be respected; but our candidates so found, would prove to be Anti-masonic with Masonic principles, and thus our victory be delayed, or indefinitely postponed. I am for no such temporizing action. I have seen enough of it. Such action is but a temporary expedient at best, and its tendency is to retard, not advance, a good cause. It is "going down to Egypt for help."

The Cynosure says: "Every effort has been made to get men of national reputation to address us at Syracuse. Thus far the effort has failed." I AM GLAD THE EFFORT HAS FAILED! If "men of prominence and standing in American politics, though they are with us in sentiment, shrink from making martyrs of themselves by coming among us," let them "e'en gang their ain gate." If our cause is not worth the sacrifice, it is not the cause of God and humanity, and they are excusable for their timidity. But if it be, as we believe it to be, the cause of truth and righteousness, these are not the men to lead us now or hereafter. God is our leader, and all our acts as Christians and citizens should be wrought in view of this fact. If he wants a Moses to lead us out into the "Desert of Conflict," lying between us and the "Canaan of Victory," we shall find him among our own "kith and kin," and on the way he will develop a Joshua who will bring us across Jordan into the "promised land." Give us as earthly leaders, men who are not ashamed to be of us while we are small and despised, men who are sufficiently enlightened to see God in this cause, and who are in it because he is, and we will follow them as representatives of the cause, and of God.

We want no great name or names to help or make our cause. The cause shall make the men. 'Tis principle we follow. Men are nothing to us only as they represent the principle. We have men enough among us to man a national ticket. Men who are not time-servers, nor office-seekers. Such are the men we want to lead us; and it must be our work at Syracuse to bring forward, nominate, and persuade such men to go before us in the impending conflict, and to follow them through the varying tides of battle to final victory, which is as sure to come, as that our principles are right; and he is no true man who refuses the leadership solemnly tendered him by such a body of men as we expect to see at Syracuse in June next. We have been sailing along the coasts of Decision and Political Action long enough. Let us land and burn our ships behind us, unfurl our banner to the breeze, and push into the fight, trusting in God for the result. There are enough among us whom every true Anti-mason would follow. But the above in letter or in spirit, is my answer to "WHAT SHALL WE DO AT SYRACUSE?"

An Abominable Trinity.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

"But I say, that the things that the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils."—I Cor. x. 20.

In the legend of the foundation stone as given by Sickels and other Masonic authorities, God is represented as revealing himself Masonically to Adam by inscribing his name on a cubical stone of white porphery, which stone was hidden by Enoch in the bowels of Mount Moriah, because he foresaw the flood, and feared that the true name of God would be lost. It remained thus hidden for 1,400 years, until Solomon in building the temple discovered it. This true name of God, which was unknown to the rest of the world, was the Master Mason's word and used in the Master Mason's lodge held in the Sanctum Sanctorum of the Temple. On the death of Hiram Abiff this word was lost; for though it was still known to Solomon and Hiram of Tyre, yet their Master's oath required them never to speak it except in the lodge, and there could no longer be any lodge, as one of the three members composing it was dead, and hence, for the Master Mason lodges of the future, a new word was substituted.

But that the true name of God might not be lost the foundation stone was placed in an arch under the Holy of Holies, where it remained for 470 years, until the nation of the Jews returned from Babylonish captivity; when the Royal Arch degree was instituted and the true name of God—which all this time had been hidden from the world—became the Royal Arch word. Now this true name of God which is known only to Royal Arch Mason, is not Jehovah, but Jahbuhiun; which, according to Dr. Mackey (see Lexicon, p. 230), is made up thus: Jah, the Syriac name for Jehovah; Bal or Baal, the god of the Moabites; and On, or Aun, the god of the Egyptians and Hindus. In other words, that Baal and On were but varying names of the true God, and that when he revealed himself in his true character, by his true name, it was Jehovah-Baal-On or Jahbuhiun.

That the ancient Israelites worshiped Baal is true. It is also probable that they worshiped On, or the sun; but such worship was idolatry, punished with death. And it is just as absurd to suppose that God revealed himself as Baal and On as that he was Dagon, Moloch or Ashteroth. If Royal Arch Masons worship Jahbuhlun, they worship a very different being from the God who is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. To worship God as Jehovah-Bal-On, or Jah-buh-lun, is to worship, not God alone, but God and two devils associated in trinity.

Now God has said, "I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils. Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils (1 Cor. x. 20 and 21).

Is Uncle Sam a Freemason?

[From the Chicago Times.]

A number of derricks have occupied a prominent place on the South Side for some considerable time. They are supposed to indicate the cite of a future palace presumably the property of the public. At all events, this government building is being erected with money collected from the people of the United States, without distinction of religion. At all events, who ever owns the concern, actually or prospectively, it is not the property of a secret society. Nevertheless, a number of men, by accident and for a brief time, subordinate officials of the government, have decided that this new custom-house and post-office is the property of a secret society of which they are members. In accordance with this decision, these subordinate officials have even gone so far in their unwarranted and illegal impudence as to declare that this secret society shall take possession of this government building on the day on which its corner-stone is to be laid, and shall hold possession, to the exclusion of all taxpayers who are not members of this secret society, and shall conduct public services there according to the rules of their secret sworn organization, notwithstanding that these services are not, and never can be, authorized by law; notwithstanding that these services are excessively odious to an immense number of the taxpayers; notwithstanding that the presence of this secret society and its officers in a government building can never be made legal; and notwithstanding that these services can never be rendered tolerable or acceptable to an immense number of taxpayers who are not Freemasons.

With the principles and purposes of Masonry, The Times has no discussion. With Masonry in the abstract or the society in the concrete, this article has nothing to do. But that the usurpation of a government building by a secret society, is an outrage upon community, every reasonable man must admit, and every conscientious Mason must affirm it more strenuously than any other man. The society itself does not seek to put such an insult and indignity upon the rest of the taxpayers. The insult and indignity are inflicted by the ring of subordinate government officials who thus seek personal advancement in a powerful sworn organization, and thus prostitute Masonry and betray the government for their own personal benefit. If a body of the citizens who are not members should take possession of the building on the appointed day, to the forcible exclusion of the officers of this secret society, as such, they would be only vidicating their inalienable rights. The law, no less than public sentiment, would sustain them.

How only the Decline of the Republic can be Prevented.

The next century will show us social changes material, in my opinion. Great changes in the relations of capital and labor; great changes in the position of woman; changes in the nature of government, in the relations of church and state—these are the prominent facts of the next one hundred years. If they come, well. If they do not come, that boy is born, to-day, who, like Gibbon, when he wrote the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,"—that boy is born, to-day, who will write the decline and fall of the American Republic. Because to any thoughtful man it is evident that the grasp of associated wealth in an age when the sin of not being rich is only atoned for by the effort to become so; the grasp of associated wealth, of bank and railroad and manufacturer on legislative independence, on the possibility of individual independence, is so rigid and despotic and inevitable that, unless we evade it by some great social changes, it will not be possible for this republic to survive. We see a power infinitely grander than that of the feudal barons of three hundred years ago, infinitely more irresistible than that.

To-day, Mr. Gladstone said, speaking of the church, —the disestablishment of the English Church: "We cannot trust the church beyond the clasp of the Government's hand; as a rival power wielding £90,000,000 sterling, it is too grave a charge to the British Government." Ninety million pounds—$450,000,000—too grave a charge for the British Government, three times as strong as ours; and yet one man, the head of the Pennsylvania Railroad—Mr. Scott—wields $450,000,000, and the very sweep of his garments as he marches east from San Francisco to Philadelphia is more than sufficient to sweep down legislatures as he goes.

I look for no safety here except in great social changes. I believe that the day is gone by in this country when you can get half a man's power out of him on a system of wages; it was possible two hundred years ago. Ignorant, short sighted, narrow viewed, the dependent laboring class accepted the best they had offered them, and lived from day to day and hardly overlooked the margin of another week; they were contented with the system. But intelligence, education, responsibility, the ballot, a share in the Government, has dispelled all that content, and unless we have co-operation, unless we have labor taken into a great co-partnership with capital, labor will tear capital to pieces. That is in the future.—Boston Journal.

A Lutheran Testimony.

In a journal of proceedings the Lutheran Standard publishes the following article of the constitution, and remarks upon the same, adopted by the Free English Lutheran Conference, Webster Co, Mo;—

Art. VII.—No one shall be received into connection with this Conference, unless he have previously furnished due evidence of his occupying a sound position in regard to doctrine and of his leading a Christian life.—No pastor shall be admitted who is a member of a secret society.

Remarks:—This article is drawn up to warn against the danger of receiving any minister into office, who is a member of secret societies. It is required of pastors to lead a Christian life; but no Christian can lead a strictly Christian life, if he is a member of a secret society, according to the saying of our Lord, John 3. 20: "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." St. Paul says, 1 Tim. iii. 2. "A bishop then must be blameless, The husband of one wife." He must be blameless in all things which he has to reprove in his congregations. "The husband of one wife" is expressly mentioned on account of the heathens being polygamists: a minister has to reprove this, and therefore he should not have been a polygamist himself in former days. Ignorance may exist about any sin prevailing among Christians, but it is not therefore excusable in a minister; he should be well posted in everything pertaining to Christianity and his office. Secret societies are excluding Christ, whilst every Christian should "do all things in the name of Jesus Christ;" belonging to a secret society, therefore, implies a degree of denying Christ, and being "unequally yoked together with unbelievers." Their so-called good works are not really good works, as they do not originate in faith: they are but works of selfishness. They want members to assist them in their own affairs, and not to aid the needy and poor. Therefore they lead back to heathenism although they profess Christian works of love and charity.

The Petition on the Corner-Stone.

(To every subscriber and reader of the Cynosure who belongs to the United States:—Cut this petition out at once. Paste it on paper. Get all the names you can, and the last week in May, send to Rev. L. N. Stratton, Syracuse, N. Y. where our Convention meets June 2d. We will send them to Washington in mass.

SUB COMMITTEE.)

TO HIS EXCELLENCY U. S. GRANT, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:—

The undersigned citizens respectfully ask your Excellency to prevent the laying of the corner stone of the United States Custom House, Chicago, by the Masonic Fraternity, as set for June 24th next; on the ground:

1st. That no sect or "order," secret or open, should use the property of the whole people for its particular display or aggrandizement;

2d. That such use of public buildings has no color of justification in the Constitution or in the laws, and

3d. That the Masonic order is obnoxious to multitudes.

Delegates' Certificates.

We have 427 subscribers in the State of New York. We hope to see at least half of them at the Syracuse Convention. If you make up your mind to go, which the sooner you do the better, please state that fact to your church, your prayer meeting, or at a meeting of your neighbors called together for that purpose and tell them that if they choose to appoint you a delegate you will report the proceedings of the Convention on your return. We have blank certificates that we will forward to any one writing for them. Do not fear that any locality will be too fully represented.

These remarks we hope will be considered and acted upon by friends in other States as well as those in New York.

The Association originated in a meeting held Oct. 30th, 1867, in the City Hall of Aurora, Ill., attended by persons opposed to secret societies, where a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements for a National Convention. This was held in Pittsburgh, May 5th–7th, 1868, when the National Association was organized. Its subsequent meetings have been held: Chicago, June 8th–10th, 1869; Cincinnati, June 9th–11th, 1870; Worcester, Mass., June 7th–9th, 1871; Oberlin, Ohio, May 21st–23d, 1872; Monmouth, Ill., May 14th–16th, 1873. The Association employs a General Agent and Lecturer, and has secured State lecturers for Indiana, Ohio and Illinois, whose names appear in the list of lecturers. The support of the Association is entirely voluntary. Funds are greatly needed to carry on the work already begun, and contributions are hereby solicited from every friend of the reform. Send by post-office order, registered letter or draft to the Treasurer, 11 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Reform News.

—The General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, is to be at Spartansburgh, Pa., this week.

—The citizens of Noble county, Ind., met at Albion on the 23d to hold an Anti-secret convention and nominate county officers.

—The friends in Illinois may address Rev. H. H. Hinman at Farm Ridge, LaSalle county, for lectures. He was obliged to remove to this state to be with aged parents, and his transfer of fields has been approved by the Executive Committee.

—The State meeting in Ohio being now fairly under way, let every man do his part to make it a meeting in every way worthy the state and the cause.

—The approval of Bro. Givens to assist in Indiana is welcome news. He is a seceder and can meet many special applications. The call from the State Ex. Committee should be heeded by all the workers in Indiana.

—The grange is having a dolorous existence in Rock county, Wis. The same energy in every county of Wisconsin would make it a leading Anti-masonic State. A counterpart to the advertisement will be seen in the notes on the ninth page.

Lecture in Berea, O., by the General Agent.

Berea, O., April 25, '74.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Rev. J. P. Stoddard, lecturer and agent of the Association opposed to secret societies, spoke in this place last evening. There were many present, who, like the writer, do not fully sympathize with the views of the Association. But it is fair and just to say that Mr. Stoddard made a very interesting speech. His manner was conciliatory, his arguments candid, and if not always convincing, they left the hearers in good humor and with many suggested thoughts. He very carefully avoided bigotry of statement, and fully recognized the right of every man to to think for himself.

Various secret fraternities are largely represented in Berea, and the subject is one of general interest. However various the people's views, Mr. Stoddard would undoubtedly have a large hearing should he make a second visit to this place. BRIEF.

Anti-masonic Political Action.

IN ROCK COUNTY, WISCONSIN.

FOOTVILLE, Wis., April 14, 1874.

We have just gained a victory over secrecy in our town election. The Masons and grangers worked together; but we elected our officers in every instance but one. One of our supervisors beat the "Most Worshipful Master" of the Footville Blue Lodge of Masons; he lacked but one vote of having two votes to the Mason's one. How strange! an Anti-mason was elected; is the world coming to an end? No, but oath-bound iniquity is coming to the light. This is the strongest grange town in the county, and the grange and Mason ticket was beaten. One of the inspectors of election (an energetic Mason and treasurer of the State Grange) was so indignant that he went home without signing the election report, and now he says the rabble beat them.

Last November, the cry among grangers in this State was, Hurrah for a reform govefnor; we are going to reform church, state, railroads and agriculture. It would seem that this party was second to nothing but the Supreme Being in power for doing good. But what did they do? They elected Taylor for governor, a man pledged to whiskey rings and railroad rings. This man was a blind-folded, block-stumbling, elevated granger. He has given immense tracts of land to railroad companies, and he has repealed the Graham liquor law, or aided to. How proud I am to know what a protection our noble Governor is to the State. ("Yes, such protection as the wolf gives to the lamb.")

But the grangers are having some trouble. Two grange stores in this State have suspended; liabilities, one $20,000, the other $13,000, and others will follow. One man in this county joined the grange, took one degree and left the noble, elevating institution; he says they blind-folded him, led him over blocks and pinched his legs twice. He paid for four degrees and took one, he now advertises in the country paper the following:

"FOR SALE:—Three degrees of the grange at grange prices, or will trade for an old Clow reaper. Any one who purchases these degrees, I will make a present of the first degree as I received it in Harmony Grange, No. 76."

We have learned that the pass-word for this year is Adam, and we soon expect to hear that Adam and Eve were grangers, and that it is the most ancient and honorable institution in the world. One of my neighbors joined the grange, (they are all pledged to trade at the grange store,) went to their cheap store and purchased tea and coffee; but when he used the articles, he found the tea damaged, and the coffee not a good article. Another granger in this county purchased a bill of goods amounting to twenty-three dollars. He went to another store and found he could get just the same amount for twenty dollars. This cut him up some, but he went home and commenced using the articles, but to his surprise he found the tea was damaged and the other articles very inferior, and this cut him down some. The next night the grange met he went and cut himself loose from the money-saving (shaving) institution. I was talking with a very prominent granger a short time since, and we figured up what the institution had cost in this town; and he admitted that it had cost more than all their agricultural implements for the same time.

Come all who wish to be elevated,
Come, join the grange and be elated,
Stumble over blocks, sprain ankle or knee;
Come one, come all, say Adam, and drink damaged tea.

W. C. STEVENS.

Those who have canvassed for the Cynosure in the past and who are still in this good work are greatly encouraged by its enlargement. Many who had previously refused to subscribe, are now easily induced to take the large paper. Let all who have not tried to get subscribers for the sixteen page paper TRY NOW. Fifty cents pays for the paper three months, and the report of the Syracuse Convention is alone worth that.

IN MONROE COUNTY, MICH.

BEDFORD, Mich., April 9, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your readers will doubtless recollect that last spring we elected every candidate on our Anti-masonic ticket, the least majority being over sixty, and the highest over 100 votes.

This winter Bro. Stoddard visited us by request and lectured three times, and preached twice. This spring we posted notices for a caucus and nominated a ticket, placing at its head, "Anti secrecy Ticket." Out of 218 votes cast, one of the highest officers received 205 and another 209 votes. The least majority was between sixty and seventy, every man on the ticket being elected. The opposition was very scattering, and seems to have been a weak effort by the Masonic sympathizers. Although Masons have heretofore held the most important offices in the township, I think there was but one that run for any office, and that was for constable.

There is a lodge in this town said to contain seventy members; how many reside within the town I have no means of knowing. Truly, Masonry must be an image or a myth, for when we sought to smite it, it was nowhere to be found.

Some said they wished to vote our ticket, but could not vote its title, so they cut off its head and voted for our men, others denying that there was any issue against secrecy. Others charged us with holding a secret caucus to nominate an Anti-secret ticket. One Masonic justice of the peace, whose term of office expired this spring, has been appointed notary public, and yielded up his office without an effort. So long as Masons are educated in our township offices and thereby held up to public view will they be sent to the Legislature to make our laws and grant Masonic charters.

JAMES S. HITCHCOCK.

IN M'HENRY COUNTY, ILL.

NUNDA, Ill., April 13, 1874.

DEAR SIR:—I wish to say to you that we run an Anti-masonic ticket at our town meeting, and were beaten, but gave them a big scare. The other was called the People's ticket, had majorities from twenty to fifty in a vote of 270. So we made good show for the first time. Yours respectfully,

J. MCMILLAN.

How to Deal with Them.

BRATTLEBORO, VT.

Editors Cynosure:

The great majority of the people of our village are opposed to liquor drinking, and have kept temperance meetings going very assiduously. One of the editors of the village papers used to take a prominent part in these proceedings, and at the same time turn a penny by advertising liquor for sale in his paper. At last he was told by one of the principal men of the village that he must stop his liquor advertisements; and he did.

Now, Mr. Editor, I think that we Anti-masons ought to take the same course with newspapers that advertise the lodge by publishing its stupid proceedings. We ought to refuse to take such papers; for the lodge, in my opinion, is more demoralizing than the grog-shops. If we sustain papers that sustain the lodge, we thereby sustain the lodge itself.

I have one friend who has dropped his religious paper that he had taken for years, because it would not publish Anti-masonic articles, choosing to go with the worldly crowd, fearing Masonry more than it did Anti-masonry. And I have another friend who will not commune with the workers of darkness, but has come out from among them. This is the kind of courage and decision that we need if we would reform a corrupt church. This is preaching the gospel as I understand it. ALPHA.

The Tract Work.

Our friend, Mr. Honeywell, who publishes and distributes thousands of copies of the tract, entitled "Address of the Young Men of America, at his private expense, suggests that the friends of the tract work so far as practicable, consult together, and have his tract, entitled Address to the Young Men of America or another one prepared, read, amended if desired, adopted at the Syracuse Convention. Then raise the money for publishing 200,000 of these leaflets.

"When our youths' know to a positive certainty that lodge victims are held by such murderous penalties as ex-Masons report, they then can be no more coaxed into lodges than they could be into a kennel of rattlesnakes, by a gentlemanly assurance that rattlesakes never bite.

The destruction of slavery cost us immense sacrifices. Masonry I hope will cost us less. We shall not sacrifice more in keeping the feet of our sons out of snares, than Christ did in taking ours out."

Coming to the Light.

The once hidden things of darkness are being revealed, and men no longer need go into captivity for want of knowledge. Since leaving Chicago, I have conversed with two Odd-fellows, who have taken the encampment and lodge degress, and one of whom had been "High Priest." Both confirm "Bernard's Expose," and one of them says it was used as a book of instruction in his lodge.

He related an instance which sets the perfidy of some members of this order in its true light. A certain M. D. wishing to secure the aid of the order before going to a western town, was received and passed through the degrees so rapidly that he did not have time to learn them thoroughly. My informant said that he furnished the Noble Grand with a copy of Bernard, who presented it to the doctor with the assurance that it would enable him to master the work of the craft. If this was intended as a kindness by the N. G., it was certainly an insult to the Dr. It was virtually saying, "You have been swindled and deceived, for you could have bought for a few shillings what has cost you the price of your initiation, and your manhood and liberty. Yet, if we may judge this N. G. by hundreds of adhering members of the order, he would have loudly affirmed, had the Dr. asked him as to the correctness of Bernard, before joining, "It's all a lie."

Such is the hypocrisy and deceit which lurks in these secret conclaves, but which, thank God, is "coming to the light." J. P. STODDARD.

Lodge Charity.

Some three years ago, an employee on the Flint and Pere Marquette railroad who was a Mason, accidently got killed by the cars, and was buried, I believe, according to the ritual of the order. Since that occurence, while in conversation with Masons and their supporters in regard to Masonic charity and benevolence, I have often been told by them, that the Masons not only bore the expenses of the funeral, but also paid up and lifted a mortgage of some four hundred dollars which at the time of his death encumbered his house and lot in the city of Flint, and freely bestowed this munificence on the widow and children of the deceased.

Now, for some two years past, I believe this Masonic story was, perhaps, a fact; but you can easily realize my astonishment when I found that the same mortgage had not been paid, but was actually closed, and sold according to law, at the court house in Flint on the 12th day of March, last.

Respectfully yours, A. OLDFIELD.

OUR MAIL.

D. J. Harris, York Centre, O., writes: "I am still trying to increase the circulation of the Cynosure, but find it to be rather slow work; yet, thank God, it is a good work. Several say they want the paper but have not the means to spare at this time (do not forget these but call on them hereafter). Others say that they will subscribe as soon as their time of subscription expires on some other paper they now take. Bro. J. R. Baird, of Pennsylvania, lectured in the United Brethren church of this place last fall with great ability. The result was, many got to thinking and some who had intended to join the Masons went home from the lecture saying that they had had enough of Masonry."

Joseph Warden, Waverly, Iowa, writes:

"My motto is 'onward and upward.'"

P. Fahrney, Dale City, Pa., writes:

"I have suffered much since I came here on account of my anti-secret proclivities. I have circulated tracts and papers but not until the present time was I enabled to get a few subscribers. The people are timid but the prospects are brightened."

An old veteran in the Anti-masonic warfare says that Masons are very brave on parade days but are good for nothing in a stand-up fight. Persevere and press on the battle.

Joseph Keel, Bolivar, O., writes of the Cynosure and Free Press:

"I believe in the fear of God, and under his divine guidance they are uncovering the dark sinks of iniquity, that the people, if they will, may look in and see for themselves the corruptions in this age of the world."

A. N. Hudson, Lowell, Mich:

"I took my paper with me to my appointment yesterday and the result was two three-months subscribers and the promise of two more in two weeks when I go again. I shall try it again next Sabbath at my other appointment and keep trying as long as there is any hope of success."

Where there's a will there's a way. We cannot but be encouraged to work on when we have such earnest, faithful agents working for the paper. Here is another.

D. S. McConihay, Lewiston, W. Va., writes:

"Being employed on a farm I have but little time except wet days and Sundays."

He sends a club of ten three-months subscribers, saying:

"I think I will try to raise another, and may get one of twenty next time."

J. W. Lewis, Grand Detour, Ill., writes:

"I like the appearance of the new paper much, and will do what I can to increase its circulation, praying that it may prove a power in destroying the powers of darkness."

Sarah A Proctor, New Rutland, Ill., writes:

"I thought I would get a few three-months subscribers, (ten names are enclosed) hoping thereby to get people's minds aroused for investigation on the subject of secret societies and the evil they have done and are still doing. I hope at the end of three months they all will renew their subscriptions, or some at least."

Will not all who have obtained three-months subscribers keep a list of them and during the last part of June make an effort to call upon them and obtain their renewals? Unless some friend does this work we may lose many subscribers that a timely personal request to continue might save to the paper and to the cause.

Peter Woodring, Waverly, Iowa, writes:

"I will send you one of our county papers in which you will see a notice of our anniversary meeting and my advertisement of the Cynosure. I believe in bringing the paper to the notice of the people even at my expense."

We have received two papers from Dover, N. J., advertising the Cynosure, announcing J. W. Searing as agent, who will receive subscriptions. Such movements showing a business like determination to do something greatly encourage us.

Rev. L. N. Stratton, Syracuse, N. Y., writes:

"Nothing could you have done at the Cynosure office to make its friends and foes alike behold and wonder at its prosperity and increasing power, than by securing its enlargement. Thanks both to you and the dear Lord."

We thank our dear brother of the American Wesleyan office for his cordial, generous-hearted words. Like some others of our warmest friends he seems to mistake the meaning of the enlargement of the Cynosure. It means, we ought to have a list of ten thousand or more subscribers. On April 17th there were by actual count 3,886, and Bro. Stratton will endorse the statement that this must be doubled before we have a paying list.

In enlarging the paper the publishers endeavored to show their faith in the importance and sure success of the anti-secrecy reform by their works. And every day strengthens our conviction that the friends of reform will show their faith by working to increase its circulation.

J. A. Richards, Aurora, Ill., writes:

"I went to Little Prairie and worked two hours last evening and secured five subscribers for the Cynosure. I might have got more, but I was forced to leave early this morning for this place. · · · I am in earnest in this great work."

J. A. Gibson, Brownington, Vt., writes:

"I am pleased with the Cynosure and feel the importance of the work in which it is engaged. · · · If I have it weekly (it was sent fortnightly) I hope to do more good with it."

T. Kingsnorth, Leroy, Mich., sends five subscriptions and says he recently sent ten dollars for a Life Membership. We hope for many more such Life Members of our Association.

J. L. Manley, Geneva, Ind., writes:

"Send the Cynosure. I cannot do without it as long as I can get money to pay three months subscription I will send it.

A determination to stand by an important movement when it costs something is what, with the blessing of God, brings success.

A. C. Read, Albion, O., writes:

"The Lord bless the whole family of the Cynosure readers and increase its members a hundredfold."

In ordering tracts he says:

"I want those that will be best for the interest of the cause in which we labor, which is the downfall of Satan's empire on earth, and the upbuilding of Christ's glorious kingdom here."

He sends three new subscriptions. His health is improving very slowly. He has been confined to the house by sickness for sixteen weeks.

Rev. L. D. Felt, Markesan, Green Lake Co., Wis., writes:

"I hope to be able to send you some new subscribers before long. Will do all I can to advance the interests of your valuable paper. Wish all our ministers had a copy."

Henry Mohler, Covington, O., of the German Baptist church, writes:

"Our church don't allow any secret society members to belong to it, under our constitution."

N. B. Blanton, Coffeyville, Kan., writes:

"You may consider me a life subscriber for the Cynosure. · · · It seems from my standpoint that St. Louis would be the best point for the Convention next year."

What do our Missouri friends think about it?

T. B. McCormick, Princeton, Ind., writes:

"I have lectured five times at Dale, Spinar county, where we organized a county association, of which you will hear from the secretary; and I lectured once in Folsomville, Marriot county, and I think good was accomplished. The ball is moving but I am alone in this part of the State as a lecturer. · · · Help will come when God sees best. I had to commence the war against slavery here in 1854 and although it resulted in my being an exile for nine years from my home I do not regret it. God is always for the right."

Forty Years Ago.

The Vigilant Maintenance of Principle must Preserve our Liberties.

SOLOMON SOUTHWICK, 1828.

Those writers, or those orators, who, losing sight of the frailty and turpitude of human nature, do little else but glut our ears with their glowing pictures and loud praises of our freedom and prosperity; who talk of such fictions as Cincinnatus, intent only on his pottage and his plow, after enjoying the honors of the country; and while they depict George III. as a tyrant in the fervid periods of the Declaration of Independence, forget entirely that he was not the first tyrant and will not be the last by thousands, to scourge a long-suffering and patient people with the rod of oppression.

Such writers and orators are the bane and the curse of our country. They lead us into a wrong estimate of the world, and ourselves; they lull us into a false security, they inspire us with a false confidence. They lead us to believe, contrary to the experience of all ages, that liberty once achieved, is in no danger of being lost, and that instead of eternal vigilance, which all true history proclaims as being essential to her preservation, we have only to chant her praises in anniversary strains, and to pour into the ears of the people on every return of this jubilee the most romantic fictions and the most fulsome flattery; to make divine gods of Roman and Grecian demigogues and angels of their followers; and, by a natural flattering association of ideas, liken every popular American, whether a civil or military chieftain, and every private American citizen to these imaginary historical gods and angels of antiquity. These Cincinnatii feeding on turnips for the good of their country and the Decii plunging themselves into bottomless pits for the same godlike purpose.

Fellow citizens, these are the illusions of young and ardent minds, the fictions of heated imaginations, the romances of history beautiful and sublime, but poetical and visionary. It is not by contemplating such pictures that we are able to preserve the precious inheritance won by the blood of our fathers, but it is by vigilance, eternal vigilance alone, that that choice boon of heaven is to be preserved. It is not by railing at George III. in his grave, and flattering our progenitors and ourselves that we are to remain free; but it must be by preserving the sovereignty in our own hands, by diffusing and perpetuating the blessings of education, by cherishing in our own minds and impressing upon the minds of our own children the value of piety and religion, as well as that of morality and patriotism, and by watching with a jealous eye in all their steps, and curbing by all possible restraints the public functionaries from the highest to the lowest, to whom we delegate either directly or indirectly the powers prescribed by our constitution.

The profound Machiavel has said that a free government in order to maintain itself free, hath need every day of some new provision in favor of liberty. This is as true as though it had been the voice of Moses or Christ, or any one of the prophets or apostles; and yet how far have we as a people been from acting up to it! If we could not every day have improved our condition, have we siezed upon every opportunity in which we could have done it? We have in fact reversed the admonition in practice; and instead of making every day some new provision in favor of liberty, we have almost every day added some new link to the chain of slavery. We have forgotten too much of what is real in the history of human affairs, and remembered too much of what is romantic. . . It is time then to change our course; to look at the dark as well as the bright side of men and things; to survey the spots on the sun as well as to bask in the genial warmth of his beams. It is time to recur to first principles; to trust implicitly to no man's professions; but make his moral and political conduct the standard of our respect and confidence. It is high time to determine, that we will not vote for any man, who does not come forward and pledge himself on paper, in the presence of God and his country, to the course he will pursue, if elected.—For myself I shall not hereafter vote for any man, who will not, if a Freemason, openly renounce and denounce the Masonic institution: nor will I vote for any man as a legislator, unless perfectly satisfied that, if elected, he will use his utmost endeavors to procure an amendment to the constitution, to exclude not only Freemasons, but the members of all secret societies, from the jury box, and from all official honors and emoluments.

It will not be sufficient for me—however it may be for others—for any man to say that he is not a Mason; or if a Mason, that he has not attended a lodge for some years past, and such like apologies: but he must come out openly, boldly, and without reserve, and proclaim himself a decided, inflexible and zealous Anti-mason, or he shall not have my vote: for what I have done myself, and have thought myself bound by my duty to God and my country, to do, I have a perfect right to exact from others before I yield them my confidence and my vote. I shall act upon the principle, that he who has not the moral courage to take an open, bold and manly stand, in a righteous cause—a cause in which the salvation of his country demands his service—is wholly unworthy the support of freemen; and for one freeman I shall withhold my support from all such time-servers, trimmers and intriguers: and I hope and trust in God that every sincere and honest Anti-mason in the State will resolve to act the same part. We must effectually destroy the hydra-headed monster—Masonry—or all that we have done, or may do, short of that mark, will be in vain. All other public questions vanish into utter insignificance, when compared with this. In this cause, then, let the line be drawn—let it be fairly understood, that he who is not for us is against us: for until this great work be consummated, our country is not free—and our beloved and venerated fathers have spilt their blood not to disenthral, but to enslave their posterity! Let the line, then, be drawn, I repeat it; and let us toe the mark—resolved, as men who know our rights, and dare defend them, to stand or fall on the glorious and imperishable basis of truth and liberty.

LESSON XIX.—MAY 10, 1874.—THE THREE GREAT FEASTS.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—LEV. xxiii. 4-6, 15-21, 33-36. Commit 4-6, 15, 16, 33-36; Primary Class, Golden Text.

4 These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons.

5 In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover.

6 And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread.

15 And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven Sabbaths shall be complete.

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord.

17 Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the firstfruits unto the Lord.

18 Ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of sweet savor unto the Lord.

19 Then ye shall sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings.

20 And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the firstfruits for a wave-offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest.

21 And ye shall proclaim on the self-same day, that it may be a holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

33 And the Lord spake unto Moses saying,

34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the Lord.

35 On the first day shall be a holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord; on the eighth day shall be a holy convocation unto you, and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do servile work therein.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

In our last lesson we had the offerings, as food for God's table; to-day we are invited to feast with him. These feasts were festivals; they were like the Fourth of July, and Thanksgiving. They were monuments pointing backward and forward. They were types, representing great truths that were to follow. In our chapter eight are mentioned, but the Sabbath was quite distinct from the others. Learn the names of all, and ask your teachers what the four that were omitted from our lessons were intended to teach, and what benefit the feasts were to the Jews. Ask how they traveled to the feasts. If they sung any hymns or songs, and what they were.

What is the first topic? Which of our lessons was upon this? What day did it commence? The name of the month was Nisan. What kind of bread did they eat? How many days did they eat it? Was Jesus ever at the passover? (Luke ii. 41-51; Mark 14. 12-26) Who is our passover? (1 Cor. v. 7.) Have you ever been to this feast? If you have, the feast of unleavened bread teaches how you ought to live. The doctrine of this feast is REDEMPTION.

What is the second topic? What feast have we passed over? (verses 10-14.) Ask your teacher what 1 Cor. xv. 20 means. What is the feast of Pentecost called in Ex. xxiii. 16, xxxiv. 22? The name signifies the fiftieth. Why was it so called? (verse 16.) What did it celebrate? (Deut. xvi. 13-15.) What were they to offer? How were they to reap the fields? (verse 22.) What occurred fifty days after Jesus (the first sheaf) rose from the dead? (Acts ii.) What kind of a harvest was that? Have you ever been gathered into the fold of Christ?

What is the third topic? What two feasts have been passed over? (verses 24-27.) What day did the feasts of tabernacles occur on? How long did it last? What did they live in during this time? (verse 42.) What did this feast celebrate? (verse 43.) Did they ever forget this feast, (Neh. viii. 17.) Read Deut. viii. 10-20? and Rev. vii. 9-17.) Will you be at the feasts of Tabernacles? What feasts must come before this?

Lessons. God has given us many mercies; let us have season of thanksgiving. For his REDEEMED ones, those the Spirit has SEALED, he is preparing at a great feast of thanksgiving. I will go.—The National Sunday School Teacher.

Useful Hints.

An earnest and successful Sunday-school laborer, now of Pittsfield, Mass., in his printed New Year's pastoral address, among other very excellent suggestions, puts this all-important truth thus: "We recommend to you all, and especially to Sunday-school teachers and scholars, the following plan for Bible study:

RPERAADY.
SPTRUADYY.
TPHRIANYK."

Mix your praying through all your reading, study, and thought. Remember each member of your class by name when in your closet. "Tell Jesus" what you would have for each. Expect glorious results.

A Startling Question.

Here is a little story with comments, from the S. S. Times, which is for every superintendent and teacher—a story to be pondered with "strong crying and tears."

A poor child straying into a Sabbath-school one day, asked simply, "Is this the way to heaven?" The superintendent was for a moment startled. Was his school, indeed, the way to heaven? Was he trying to make it so? Were his teachers intent upon the same subject? The artless question struck home. From desk to class the question went around with a thrill. What were they all doing? Whither were they all tending? The question was like an angel suddenly come into their midst to make a record of all that transpired in that school. O, superintendents, teachers, make sure of this one thing, With all your efforts to impart knowledge, make the salvation of the soul of paramount interest! Whether your school be a model, or be struggling up to perfection, be sure that every scholar shall feel that it is the road to heaven?

Home and Health Hints.

BE CAREFUL.—A single hard lift, an hour of heating work, an evening of exposure to rain or damp, a severe chill, an excess of food, the unusual indulgence of any appetite or passion, a sudden fit of anger, an improper dose of medicine—any of these, or other similar things, may cut off a valuable life in an hour, and leave the fair hopes of usefulness and enjoyment but a shapeless wreck.

—An Englishman writes to one of the scientific journals stating that he has discovered a new cure for rheumatic gout. He had suffered tortures from that disease for several years, but, by insulating his bed by means of glass stands and sockets under each foot, he began to improve immediately.

—Warts may be removed with kerosene oil. Apply it daily with a camel hair pencil. They will generally disappear in about two weeks.

—A serviceable filter may be readily made as follows: Take a common earthenware flowerpot about nine inches in diameter and ten inches in depth. The drainage hole is stopped loosely with a clean piece of sponge. A layer of about two inches of animal charcoal is first placed in the pot, then the layer of clean sand, upon which a layer of three inches of clean coarse gravel is placed. The pot can be set over an earthen jar, into which an abundance of pure water will filter for all drinking purposes.

GENUINE ERASIVE SOAP.—Two pounds of good Castile soap, half a pound of carbonate of potash, dissolved in half a pint of hot water. Cut the soap in thin slices, boil the soap with the potash until it is thick enough to mould into cakes; also add alcohol, half an ounce; camphor, half an ounce, hartshorn, half an ounce; color with half an ounce of pulverized charcoal. This is excellent for removing grease, etc., from clothing.

SAUCE FOR PUDDINGS OR ROLLS.—Cream six ounces of butter until light and white as possible; then stir in gradually the same weight of finely pulverized white sugar. It looks very inviting made up into the shape of a little pyramid, thickly strewn with grated nutmeg. In addition you may use at pleasure vanilla or any other seasoning you prefer.

DELICATE CAKE.—One and half cups of sugar, half a cup of butter. Rub this to a cream, add half a cup of sweet milk, in which dissolve a half teaspoon of soda, and two cups of flour in which one teaspoon of cream of tartar has been rubbed. Add a little salt. Flavor with vanilla, lemon, or nutmeg. Beat the whites of four eggs to a froth and add last.

Sleep for Farmers' Wives.

A farmer's wife writes a letter to the Rural New Yorker, which she wants the "men folks" to read. It is a plea for more sleep. Have you a wife, she says, who goes about in a listless, spiritless fashion, as though she could but just drag herself about? Or is she cross and fretful, and do you wonder how she came to have such a temper? Ten to one, all she needs to make her bright and happy is rest, sleep, and loving words. Hire efficient help, that the wife who has passed a restless night may take advantage of baby's morning nap, and have one of her own, or, if she chooses, lie down in the afternoon and make up the lost sleep. You can afford it if you will. Do you begrudge a hundred dollars a year for your wife's comfort and health? Why, no breeding-mare would ever be worked as some men work their wives! Give women their home rights; help them to bear their burdens; give them a few kind, loving words every day, and you will have healthier and happier wives, children and homes.

Farm and Garden.

Testing the Vitality of Seed Corn.

Many of those who are obliged to depend upon corn ripened last year will, undoubtedly experience difficulty in its germinating promptly, for the reason that, owing to the peculiar season, the crop ripened imperfectly. These remarks will not, however, apply to those who, as heretofore advised by the Western Rural, have saved the seed in the autumn. We do not hesitate to say that in those sections of the country where, from any cause, the corn has not ripened as it ought to have done, there may be trouble in the germination of the seed.

To test the seed, therefore, we advise that those in doubt shell from various ears more or less of the kernels. Mix them together and, counting therefrom ten or a dozen of the grains, plant them in a favorable place for germination. Note how many of the seeds grow readily. From the percentage which grow, an estimate may be made of the proper number to drop in each hill, in planting the field, to ensure a stand.

Another plan for testing seed corn is to examine the general appearance of the grain. If it break from the cob, presenting a black appearance at the point of attachment, and, if it leave the cover and filament with the cob, it is probable, but not certain, that the seed is not sure. It may germinate slowly, or it may not germinate at all, according to the conditions under which it is placed. It is safe to reject such as seed. On one side of the kernel and that side lying towards the tip of the ear, will be found a groove or indentation; at the bottom of this, and next the surface and, covered with the pellicle of skin, will be found the germ of the future plant. If the grain be bright, and if, upon raising the germ it be found to be of a bright straw color, inclining to white, plump, clear and bright, and of a distinct shape, not wrinkled and shriveled, the indication is that the germ is good; but, if otherwise, if it be dull shriveled or imperfect throw the ear aside.

Another test is to take the ear and break it through the middle. If it break brittle, and the cob is bright and firm, and the grain firm, the probability is that it is good. The two conditions between good and bad may be easily discovered by breaking an ear that you know to be good, and examining it in comparison with one that you suspect to be unsound.

Thus a person with a little experience may easily select sound from unsound corn from the crib. Nevertheless. we now advise, as we before have done, that this plan of selecting seed be not dependent upon another year. It is far better and cheaper in the end to select the seed at the time of ripening; hang it in an airy place to dry, and hereafter keep it dry; and if hung over a gentle smoke to assist the process of drying, so much the better. The smoke will not injure the corn, but it will tend to render it unpalatable to the horde of insects that always lie in wait to prey upon it when planted. —Western Rural.

A Talk about Plaster.

At a late meeting of the Ottawa, Mich., Farmers' Club the subject of the use of plaster was introduced by the President, Mr. Wild.

Mr. DeWitt had used plaster very freely and always with good effect.

Mr. Wild and also Mr. Ferguson, agreed that the use of plaster adds one-third to the clover crop.

Mr. McNaughton had experienced great benefit from its use on clover, more on sandy land than on clay. He always got a good catch when he used plaster on the land with the seed.

Mr. Little thought we used too little, and would recommend to double the quantity now used.

Mr. Wild thought we should now sow more clover than we do and use more plaster.

Mr. McNaughton believed that best way to keep up land was to sow clover and plaster. He also gave some instances of the good effects of ashes on wheat.

Mr. Hall said that the plaster prolonged the growth of wheat, but was no benefit to it. It would do good on clover three years.

Mr. Randall recommended sowing plaster on the snow. Clover sometimes failed to grow when not plastered.

Mr. T. B. Lillie used clover, but thinks barnyard manure the main stay to keep up the fertility of the farm.—Western Rural.

Sure Cure for Cattle Lice.

Take one heaping teaspoonful of copperas; mix with bran or any other kind of meal. If you haven't any meal, mix with salt. Two doses will drive them entirely away. It will not only kill the lice, but it will keep off the diseases and give the cattle an appetite. I have tried it tweny-five years, and never knew it to fail. What "Subscriber" says about cattle lice will kill the cattle quicker than it will the lice. If the cattle, either those with the cloth on, or others, lick the cloth with the mercurial ointment on, it will kill them; or if they take cold it will kill them.—Western Rural.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, April 30, 1874.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard started Monday morning for New York, to help prepare for our National Anniversary, June 2nd. The Aurora (Congregational) Association, at its late meeting with the First Church, in the city of Aurora, gave to Prof. Blanchard its approbation as a licentiate for the Gospel ministry. This will enable him with propriety to assist ministers of the Gospel wherever he may go. Mr. E. D. Bailey was approbated by the Association as a licentiate at the same time. He is a member of Wheaton College, who has been laboring successfully with the church at Big Woods, Ill., the last winter.

The following notice appears in the Chicago papers of the 25th inst. If its arrogance and impudence have even been equalled, we know not where or when. Read it:

"Special Masonic Notice.—The present and past grand officers of the Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter, Grand Commandery and Grand Council of the State of Illinois, resident in the city; also the present and past officers of the Supreme Council, 33d degree, together with the past and principal officers of all regular Lodges, Chapters, Commanderies, Councils and those of the several bodies of the A. and A. Scottish rite, of this city, are requested to meet this (Saturday) evening, at 7 1-2 o'clock, in the "Armory," American Express Company's building, Monroe street, near State, for the purpose of making arrangements for the laying of the "corner-stone" of the United States Government building, on the 24th of June next."

Now we ask, has the Chicago "Armory" ever been occupied and used by any other sect or order of people but the Freemasons? Would Methodists be permitted to use it for their purposes?

And again for the thousandth time, what business has a secret order, sworn to selfishness and proscription, to make arrangements about United States buildings? And further, do not the citizens, who are not Freemasons, and who have been put in mockery on the committee of two hundred, see that these "present and past Grand Officers" treat them with utter contempt. If this attempt of Freemasonry to take the corner stone business out of the hands of the non-Masons, who are appointed on the "two hundred," does not awake them to remonstrate at having their names used as a mere cover to the lodge, then they are fallen low indeed. Will some Freemason "rise to explain?"

MASONRY SUBVERTING THE REPUBLIC.

Elsewhere in this number will be found editorials from the Tribune and Times of this city on the intended laying of the corner-stone of the new United States Custom House in Chicago, by Freemasons. Of all sects, parties, organizations, orders, secret or open, a Freemason lodge is the most unfit to put its insignia on a United States public building; and the proposal of the lodge to practice its heathen ritual, and place its anti-Christian date on the corner-stone of our new Custom House, is a piece of impudence and effrontery which has seldom been equalled and never surpassed. The Grand Lodge of Illinois laid the corner-stone of our new State House at Springfield, and it was resented as an insult to the State. The result was, the stone was taken out of the wall, and buried in the earth out of sight. A similar attempt to lay the corner-stone of the new State House at Albany, N. Y., was resisted by leading New York papers and ignominiously failed; the stone being laid by the Governor. A similar attempt and failure, partial, or entire, occurred in the State of Iowa; and the example of our State was cited by those who resisted that profanation. That a United States Secretary at Washington, should attempt to force a national recognition of the lodge upon the people of Chicago and the North-west, argues great boldness or ignorance, or both; since the attempt has been so unmistakably condemned by the popular voice. There are about a half a million of Freemasons, one-eightieth part of the people of the United States. By what right or show of propriety this secret sect puts itself forward to represent forty millions of people in this country, in laying the corner stone of its public buildings, is beyond the possibility of a guess. The ceremony is religious; consisting in part of prayer to the god of the lodge; but it is not pretended that the religion is that of the Bible; or the god prayed to, the God of revelation. And as a civic ceremony it is more impudent and revolting still, as its chief lexicon (Mackey) declares, "The government of a Grand Lodge is therefore completely despotic." It is heathenism insulting Christianity, and despotism insulting liberty. Every voter and every voter's wife and child should be moved to their heart's center by this attempt. Dr. Post, of St. Louis, in his address to the Pilgrim Memorial Convention in Farwell Hall, before the fire, referred to the lodge as setting up the hollow forms and titles of king-craft and priest-craft, that those hated foes of humanity might creep back into their empty shells. Let Chicago be draped in black if this infamy is attempted.

[The above Editorial is, except a line or two, republished from Cynosure of April 16th. It was so forcible and so marred by the compositor that we are requested to reinsert it.—Office Ed.]

OUR PETITION TO PRESIDENT GRANT.

As instructed by the National Committee, the subcommittee have met and agreed on the form presented in this number of our paper. It was thought best not to insert the fact that Secretary Richardson, who controls the Custom-House building, had treated similar remonstrances with silent contempt; because of the thousands whom we hope to have sign this petition to President Grant, but few know that his Secretary has so treated like petitions, and could not properly certify that they did know it, by signing the paper. As the paper now reads, honest Freemasons can consistently sign it if they will.

Now let every man and woman who can give an hour's time to it, cut out the petition from the Cynosure, paste it on paper, and commence getting signers at once; and, the last week in May, forward them to Syracuse, "care of Rev. L. N. Stratton." Let us roll up from ten to fifty thousand names, and forward to Washington from the Syracuse Convention.

Meantime, let no possible effort be omitted to arouse the people, especially the people of Chicago, to avert and ward off the impudence of that harlot of the nations, the lodge, from the United States Custom-House in Chicago. This is the harlot which is making the nations drunk with the filth of her fornications.

REVIEW OF GROSH'S DEFENSE CONCLUDED.

We ask the reader to refer again to the disclosure of the oaths of Odd-fellowship by Dr. Willis, in our second article on this topic, and see if evil does not lurk in that obligation, evil of no slight degree, of fundamental character, which, though scarcely perceptible at first, is yet capable of vast and horrid and fatal expansion.

First, there is hypocrisy in it. It is a real oath pretending to be only a pledge of honor. It binds to evil while pretending to bind to good only.

Secondly, it is an unjustifiable oath, so that it has in it the moral wrong and leaven of profanity and blasphemy.

Thirdly, it is a rash promise to do good or to do evil without the opportunity of knowing which it may turn out to be. Such blind promising is sinful; a snare to the soul; an enslavement, or utter abrogation of conscience; a renunciation of allegiance to God by trusting to man instead of God, i. e., taking man's word that the thing is right instead of using the means God gives us to learn for ourselves from him that it is right. This is to reject the Lord from being our guide and king.

Fourthly, in all these oaths there is an insidious promise to deceive; or, in other words, to lie. Dr. Willis, to mention no other, has revealed the secrets of the order. The members can not now "conceal" them as they have sworn to do, but by deception or lying. They must do this deliberately and wilfully, and that continually by word or action. Even if Dr. Willis has not given a true expose (which he surely has) yet some one else may truly expose the whole secret, and then the oath "to conceal" comes into full force, and it becomes an oath to be a perpetual deceiver through life, and to go to the judgment with this huge life-long lie in one's right hand.

Fifthly, the acknowledgment of an especial obligation or covenant with all Odd-fellows is contrary to the sound doctrine of equal rights and to the divine law of impartial benevolence towards all men. For, if this obligation requires us to do for Odd-fellows only what the command to love our neighbors as ourselves requires towards every human being, it is not an especial covenant unless it is understood to imply that we may do less for outsiders than this universal law of love demands. If it requires more than the law of equal benevolence does towards our brother man, it is evil; if it requires less towards outsiders than that divine law does, it is evil; and one of the two it must imply or it is not an especial covenant. Unless, again, you say it implies only the speciality which Christians are directed to concede "to them who are of the household of faith." But if this is the meaning, it is evil, for it is a changing and perverting of a law of Christ. It is taking "the children's bread and giving it to dogs." What have carnal fraternities to do with the divine legacies of Christ to the members of his spiritual kingdom? What relation has the partiality they exercise towards their fellow conspirators to obedience to Christ's law of special beneficence to the faithful, whereby Christians honor God and goodness, and concede to the views of heaven their God-given legacy? None at all. The especial covenant of Odd-fellows we must think means a release in a greater or less degree from the practice of what the law of impartial and equal love requires towards the brother man, who is not a brother Odd-fellow; and the doing for the brother Odd-fellow not merely what this divine law requires, but more than it requires, or rather what it positively forbids: helping him out of dangers "arising from his own imprudence" in the way of extricating him from justice; pointing out his advantage, i. e., helping him to take the advantage of other men, as he would not do were his brother not an Odd-fellow. Otherwise the specialty of an Odd-fellow's covenant has no meaning or reality. It requires, in short, a relaxing of God's law to man as such and a work of supererogation, a transcending of that law towards brother Odd-fellows. Not doing for one what God requires, and doing for the other what God forbids. We repeat, therefore, our opinion is unshaken that Odd-fellows are oath-bound to evil, if such a thing can be; bound to do good or to do evil, and it is hid from them. Still the evil exists and tends to a preponderance that is sure in the end utterly to extinguish the good and leave but the final ruin which God links inseparably to the wrong.

But, says Mr. Grosh, "would you consider yourself bound to do evil if you had taken our obligations as you understand them?" No. If I had taken those obligations I should consider them null and void from their very sinfulness, and should feel myself bound by them only to repent of having taken them, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance by violating them as often as I had opportunity, and to do all in my power lawfully to destroy the fabric that rests on such an evil basis. And I do earnestly advise and entreat in Christ's name every Christian to absolve his soul at once from the unholy bondage of those sinful oaths, and to come out from the fellowship of those who acknowledge their binding authority, and henceforth to worship and obey the only living and true God, who has revealed himself in Christ and him only.

Away with these shackles of profane covenants and precepts of men and deistical worship, this bowing the knee to Baal and paying endless tribute to invisible empires. Away with such robbing of Christ and his cause, such shackles of bondage, from all Christian's feet; that with single eye and purpose you may run your race and be accepted of Him who will have your all or nothing. "What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" Or who is he that can authorize a man to eat at the table of the Lord and at the table of devils? to bear the part of fellowship in the worship of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and in the worship of a god invented by men? to meet the demand of deism and idolatry?

GENERAL UTILITY OF THE "ACT TO ENFORCE THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT."

We know that the emergency which brought out this "act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights" was the outrages committed by the Ku-Klux Klan upon the colored people. Many of its provisions appear to bear with equal force against Masonry, for instance, Sec. 5 of this act is as follows:

"No person shall be a grand or a petit juror in any court in the United States, upon any inquiry, hearing or trial of any suit, proceeding or prosecution, based upon, or arising under the provisions of this act (viz: an act to enforce the fourteenth amendment) who shall in the judgment of the court be in complicity with any such combination or conspiracy: (viz: a conspiracy of two or more persons . . . . by force, intimidation or threat to prevent, hinder or delay the execution of any law of the United States. . or by force, intimidation or threat to influence the verdict, presentment or indictment of any juror or grand juror in any court of the United States, etc.) and every such juror shall, before entering upon any such inquiry, hearing or trial, take and subscribe an oath in open court that he has never, directly or indirectly, counseled, advised or voluntarily aided any such combination or conspiracy."

Do not Masons by "intimidation" and "threat," if not by "force," "prevent, hinder," and "delay" the execution of laws in the United States courts?

Would not any Mason, (if public opinion was set right) be prohibited from holding the place as juror, under this act, because he has "voluntarily" aided the Masonic conspiracy against equal civil rights?

Has not Congress, in the fourteenth amendment, and the act to enforce it, done her part towards prohibiting Masonry from corrupting the decision of United States courts?

Will some of our readers connected with the legal profession write for the Cynosure an article on this subject, answering our questions and throwing light on the subject generally?

The Masonic Display.

The opponents of Masonry, represented by Mr. Philo Carpenter, are improving the opportunity of the forthcoming ceremonies attending the laying of the corner-stone of the new Government building in this city to make their stereotyped protest against the Masonic order. Few people, however, will be moved by the protest, as it is not aimed against the laying of corner-stones by Masons, but against the Masonic fraternity itself as an organization. These men base their hostility to Masonry primarily upon the ground that the order ignores religion, and is setting up a school of morals in which religion does not figure, and therefore must be dangerous to the public. We do not fancy that these worthy men will ever be molested by the Masons, or that the community will be harmed by them, or that there is any danger growing out of the establishment of schools of morals, if they are really such, even should they be as numerous as the sands of the sea-shore. The advantage of secrecy in such schools, however, we fail to appreciate.

There are, however, reasonable grounds of complaint in this instance which will commend themselves to people. Why should the Masons lay the corner-stones of public buildings any more than the grangers or other secret organizations? Why should the erection of a public building be made the occasion of glorification of the Masonic order and a processional display? By what authority, except that of past usage, do the Masons appropriate the corner-stones of every public building, and make the ceremonies entirely Masonic, and therefore entirely incongruous with the general character of the occasion and having no reference to it, thereby aggravating a great many people who are not Masons, for it is an undoubted fact that, to the majority of people, these Masonic ceremonies, when forced upon them, are displeasing. It would be just as appropriate for the grangers, the Good Templars, the Odd-fellows, or even a secret society of students in the University of Chicago, to come forward and demand to lay the corner-stone of the new government building, as for the Masons. When finished the building will have no Masonic significance; it will not be occupied by Masons; and will not be devoted to the propagation or spread of their principles. The only point of contact with the order will be the fact that trowels will be used in its erection, and that Masons wear the trowel as a device upon their aprons. We admit, however, that this slight coincidence does not constitute any valid reason why they should summarly appropriate every corner-stone for their own glorification. The new Government building, when finished, will, it is to be hoped, be an ornament to the city, as it will be a great public convenience in affording increaced facilities for the transaction of the postal and commercial business of Chicago. It will be devoted to the uses of the United States Government. It is, therefore, only appropriate that the municipal and Federal authorities, or the architect, should be intrusted with the duty of laying the corner-stone. As an act of strict justice, the stone-masons by whose labor its massive walls will rise are more deserving of the compliment of laying the corner-stone than the Masonic fraternity, who have no claim to it at all, and who exercise this traditional privilege as an advertisement of themselves, and an occasion for an imposing display of banners and regalia.

REPLY TO THE ABOVE.

To the Ed. of the Tribune.

In the Tribune of the 25th inst., you say, "The opponents of Masonry, represented by Mr. Philo Carpenter . . . . base their hostility to Masonry, primarily upon the ground that the order ignores religion, and is setting up a school of morals in which religion does not figure, and therefore must be dangerous to the public."

As you do not wish to do us injustice, or intentionally to present a very numerous and rapidly increasing portion of the American people in an absurd and ridiculous light, I beg leave to say, that we base our opposition to Masonry primarily on the ground that it is a false religion, made of the same "stuff" with the religions of Asia and Africa; and so is no system of morals, but subverts the ground of all morality and all true religion.

But we base our opposition to this "order" laying the corner-stones of our Government buildings on the clear and substantial ground that it is itself another government, hostile to every principle of our Republic; that it has its own constitution, laws, courts, penalties, taxes, legislative and executive officers, is governed by its own oaths; and recognizes a foreign allegiance. That, in short, it is what the patriot Samuel Adams, called, "That solecism in politics, AN IMPERIUM IN IMPERIO."

Now, if these indictments can be sustained by the authorities and history of the Masonic order (and they can), I respectfully submit that in the language of Webster, while speaking of the order, "It is a cause of jealousy and just alarm," which every patriot is bound to aid in exterminating. The court records, and records of the New York State Legislature abundantly show, that instead of being a harmless system of irreligious morals, it is a system which has once successfully defied the judicial power of that State, and that it can do it again. At all events, this is its true and real character "to the best of our knowledge and belief;" and we are entitled to be properly represented by the Tribune.

Meantime we thank the Tribune for its frank and manly utterances on the subject, though differing from us.

Respectfully yours,

ONE REPRESENTED BY MR. CARPENTER.

NOTES.

—A preacher of the German Baptists writing from Kansas to his church paper, the Christian Family Companion, gives his experience with secrecy. A revival effort was made last winter and a number were converted under his preaching; but before they were proposed for church membership a grange was started in the neighborhood and all the converts united, nor would they give up the unholy alliance when, coming forward for admission to the church, the principles of the Christian religion were shown by the pastor to be opposed to any secret system.

—The "Supreme Lodge" of the Knights of Pythias, met in Pittsburgh, April 23d. It seems that the "Supreme Scribe," C. M. Bouton, is a supreme defaulter also. This organization is very supremely officered, having a Supreme Chancellor, a Supreme Vice do., a Supreme Scribe, a Supreme Banker, and several other "supremes" most important of all being that the whole thing amounts to supreme nonsense.

—Odd-fellows were the glory of the land on Monday, when they celebrated their fifty-fifth anniversary. At Dixon, Ill., ex-Vice President Colfax was the attraction—aside from the Odd-fellows themselves,—but the weather was so bad that he only had time to say that he had been an Odd-fellow twenty-five years; that he was glad of it; that we are living in the most eventful age the world ever knew; that Odd-fellowship was one of the greatest of the events; that it was Friendship, Love and Truth. Then he smiled; then it rained; and then the brotherhood went under cover and danced all night—if the usual programme was carried out.

—The ice once fairly broken, and the lodge will have lively times at law. The decision of a Cleveland court against an Odd-fellow lodge, was lately published. Now we have the following from New York: "NEW YORK, April 23.—Maj. Burrell, who was initiated into the Hoboken Lodge of Freemasons, has instituted suit for the recovery of the initiation fee and interest, because he is unable to take the second degree, and desires to leave the order." Of all the swindling institutions in the country, the lodge is greatest, and when its dupes get their reason, it must disgorge.

Petition.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee on Friday last the following petition, to be presented to Congress in 1876 (Centennial year,) was adopted and ordered to be printed. This will be inserted again, and every subscriber should cut it out and get every name signed to it he possibly can. It has been carefully drawn up and with the best legal advice:—

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, believing (in the words of Daniel Webster) "That all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government," respectfully ask your honorable body to withdraw the charter given by Congress in April, 1864, to the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia.

That it be made unlawful to appoint to official positions under the government of the United States, persons who are under and acknowledge the binding character of oaths administered by secret organizations.

We further petition that in United States Courts, in all cases, criminal or civil, the right of peremptory challenge of jurors who are members of any secret society shall be granted to all parties in litigation who are not members of such societies.

And that membership in any secret society by the presiding officer of a court shall be held to be a sufficient reason for change of venue whenever demanded.

The Home Circle.

Sweep Before your own Door.

Do we heed the homely adage handed down from days of yore?
"Ere you sweep your neighbor's dwelling, clear the rubbish from your door;
Let no filth, no rust there gather, leave no traces of decay,
Pluck up every weed unsightly, brush the fallen leaves away."

If we faithfully have labored thus to sweep without, within,
Plucked up envy, evil-speaking, malice, each be-setting sin—
Weeds that by the sacred portal of the inner temple grow—
Poison weeds the heart defiling, bearing bitterness and woe;

Then, perchance, we may have leisure o'er our neighbor watch to keep—
All the work assigned us finished, we before his door may sweep;
Show him where the moss is clinging—token ever of decay—
Where the thistles, thickly springing, daily must be cleared away.

But, alas! our work neglecting, oft we mount the judgment seat,
With his failings, his omissions, we our weary brother greet;
In some hidden nook forgotten, searching with a careful eye,
We the springing weeds discover—some slight blemish there descry.

For his slothfulness, his blindness, we our brother harshly chide,
Glorying in our strength and wisdom, we condemn him in our pride,
Ask not why he has neglected, thus before his door to sweep;
Why grown careless, he has slumbered, failed his garden plot to keep.

On the judgment seat still sitting we no helping hand extend
To assist our weaker brother, his short-comings to amend;
For his weariness, his faltering, we no sweet compassion show—
From our store no cordial bring him, no encouragement bestow.

But, while busied with our neighbor, urging him to ceaseless care,
Calling to the thoughtless fillers, to their labor to repair—
Lo! unseen the dust has gathered, weeds are growing where of yore
Flowers rare and sweet were blooming when we swept before our door.

Ah! how easy o'er our brother faithful ward and watch to keep!
But, alas! before our dwelling hard indeed to daily sweep;
Harder than to share the conflict, "by the stuff"
at home to stay,
Easier far to sit in judgment than to humbly watch and pray.

—Christian Work.

The Cobbler of Hamburgh.

On a fine summer evening in the city of Hamburgh, a shoemaker sat at work beneath an awning in front of his shop-window. Crowds of artisans were passing in the street, and above his head was a starling, which seemed to keep up a busy talk with its kind owner; for while it sang and chattered, he would sing one of his fine old German psalm tunes.

While thus engaged, a young Jewish student stopped, and said: "Well, friend, you seem a merry fellow." Hans looked up, and replied: "Merry! to be sure. I am right merry, my brother; and why should I not be so?" "All are not so," replied the student with a sigh;" "and your poverty might afford a sufficient excuse for sadness. I confess, friend, I am surprised to see a poor man like you so cheerful." "Poor!" exclaimed Hans; "how knowest thou, friend, how my account stands with the bank? Poor! I am richer than thou knowest." "It may be so," said the student with a smile. "I must have heard of thy name in the Exchange, or of thy ships, but I have forgotten when." "Enough," said Hans; "thou hast confessed thine ignorance of me;" and then stopping his work, he said calmly and solemnly: "Stranger, I am not poor; I am a King's son!" The Jewish student, with a smile, made a low bow, and went upon his way.

It was even so; though the world knew him not, no more than it knew his Elder Brother, that poor artisan was an adopted son of the Great King; his name was known among the courtiers of the palace of the Golden City, and his prayers and alms had come up as memorials to his honor. He had much wealth laid up where thieves could not break through and steal. He had his Father's will in his hand, which he had read attentively from day to day, and thought often of his mansion, his crown, his titles and his enduring possessions. Like Peter the Great working as an obscure mechanic, or Alfred the Mighty working as a menial in a miserable hovel, this cobbler was fulfilling the good pleasure of his Father till the time to receive his inheritance should come. Dr. Payson said that if Christians realized their relation to God as children, each could not avoid crying in the streets, "I am a son of God! I am a son of God!" So Hans communed as a son with his heavenly Father, and sung because he was happy.

A week passed away, the student came again to the cobbler's door, and making a low bow with his cap in his hand, he said: "Good-evening to your royal highness." "Halt, friend!" cried Hans; "I am glad to see you again. You left me abruptly the other evening. I suppose you thought me mad. I am not so. I tell you again I am a King's son. When you interrupted me I was singing a song about my kingdom. Would you like to hear it?" "Surely, if it pleases your royal highness," replied the Jew, doubting the cobbler's sanity. Hans sung a hymn on "Thy kingdom come," and then asked the student if he understood its meaning. His reply was a shake of the head. Upon which Hans began to pour out his soul in explanation of the kingdom of his Messiah, about the promise in Eden, its fulfilment in the coming, death, resurrection, and reign of Christ, of whose kingdom every subject was a son, and joint heir to all its riches and honors.

The Jew sat as a child at his feet, gazing upon him with his full black eye, and so absorbed with all he heard that he was only aroused as from a waking dream by Hans taking him by the arm, and saying: "Now thou seest I am a King's son, and why I am happy; for I know and love this Jesus, and all things are mine, whether life or death, things present or things to come; and, young man," he asked with emphasis, "believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest. For unless I mistake thy countenance greatly, thy fathers did; and thou, my son, believing in them, must also believe in Him whom they have foretold, and whom God hath sent to perform the mercy promised to thy fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to thy father Abraham."

The Jew was silent before the truth of God. Unutterable thoughts passed through his mind. From curiosity he was led to inquiry, and from inquiry to knowledge. Like Moses beholding the miracle of the burning bush, he felt that he must turn aside and examine. "Where," he asked meekly, "can I learn more of this; for I see that thou believest and hast peace?" "From this book," said Hans, handing him a Bible. "Go home and read there about the kingdom, and return to me when thou hast studied the passages I shall point out to thee. I shall, like Moses, pray for thee, and ask One to pray for thee whom thou knowest not, but who knoweth thee, and who is greater than Moses." The young Jew grasped the hand of the cobbler, made a respectful bow, and departed.

He had seen something wonderful, and he resolved to know more about it. He had seen a man in humble life happier than any noble or king, and who appeared to have acquired the habits and manners of a new life. His religion seemed to have ennobled him, so that it touched his trade and made it honorable; touched his station in society, and rendered it not unworthy of one holding good rank in the household of God. It was evident that rank with God and wealth with him did not depend upon externals; for the honorables of heaven were often poor, and yet might convey the greatest riches to others. This cobbler enjoyed all the privileges of his Father's house. The shadow of the throne was over him, he communed with the King, received the best society of the court, and was happy in its feasts, music and emoluments. Proving that the life was more than meat, his calling comprised whatsoever things were costly, beautiful, sublime and bliss-bestowing. So the Jewish student read and weighed the evidences of the New Testament in comparison with the Old. He came to Hans and conversed about his doubts and discoveries and expectations; and the poor disciple became the teacher of the lettered student. The result was his conversion to the faith of Christ. He became the Rev. Mr. N———, for many years an eminent and successful missionary to his Jewish brethren in Siberia.

Let every Christian remember his rank; see that he does not dishonor it; but in every way recommend it to the attention of the world. It does not become a king's son to adopt the manners of a clown. The sons of God should be without reproach, and shine as lights in the world, putting always first the interests of their Father's house. He whose citizenship is in heaven's nobility, should be above the world's mendicity. It was an old saying in the primitive times of the church: "I am a Christian, and such conduct is not permitted unto me;" and he who remembers God's words, "I will be a Father unto you," should so dignify his calling as to render it the greatest power on earth for the benefit of mankind. When God's children prove by works that their names are enrolled in the heraldry of the New Jerusalem, converts will be everywhere multiplied. —American Messenger.

The Only True Home.

The home is never truly home except as the marriage union is sanctified by God and the whole domestic life is ruled and blessed by the law of the Spirit of Jesus Christ. This alone it is that surely exalts and redeems. I care not how bright and beautiful may seem the future that now opens itself to affianced hearts, nor how fine the mansion or elegant the appointments which they may call their own, nor how refined their tastes, how choice their associations, or how abundant their stores—there is no immunity from peril, no realization of the highest bliss, unless the Lord of life and glory abide in the house, its ever welcome and cherished guest and friend. A shadow rests upon every family circle where his name is not known, where there is no open or secret voice of prayer, and where is not inculcated with sedulous care the profoundest reverence for God, for Christ; for Scripture; for the institutions and observanees of our holy religion; and for the mighty, heavenly truths, principles and realities that outlast the perishable and fleeting things of earth and time. This alone it is, I repeat, that truly exalts and redeems, purifying love and strengthening trust, eliminating every discordant element and perfecting every sacred tie, creating in each soul a deeper, tenderer interest for the lasting good of the other, lessening the crosses and glorifying the daily cares of life, giving a juster significance to the marriage union and a loftier elevation to its multiform experiences and allotments, and diffusing every where a gracious atmosphere of "sweetness and light."—Rev. Dr. A. P. Putnam.

"Provoke not your Children."

M. I. R., in north-western Ohio, is a confirmed infidel. His father was a deacon. One day in harvest, little M. I. was left at the house after dinner, with instruction to bring a jug of water to the field at the end of an hour. The hour was made to comprise a few more than sixty minutes by the playful boy. As he approached the men, jug in hand, the father, enraged with impatient thirst, picked up a stone and hurled it at the boy. It whizzed close by the lad's ear. He was frightened, as well he might be; for an inch of variation of its course in one direction would have caused his instant death. His fright soon changed to indignation; his indignation to settled hatred; for this was only one of many acts of a like character. Said little M. I. in his heart, "If that is religion I want none of it." From that hour he began to treasure up argument and habitual hate against the Christian religion. No angel hand showed him a better way. Now it is probably too late. How blessed are the influences of love and reason. Oh, for more of that persuasive power in parents which leads the child to do right and yet feel that he is doing as he pleases. To convince a child of the hatefulness of an evil way, and the loveliness of a good way, is a blessed art. The parent who well considers how much easier it is to lead a child in a bad way that in a good way, how much quicker the mind will grasp evil than it will good, feels the need of divine grace.—Telescope.

Mental Stimulants.

It is strictly true that the three intellectual pursuits, literature, science, and the fine arts, are all of them strong stimulants, and that men are attracted to them by the stimulus they give. But these occupations are morally much nearer to the common level of other occupations than you suppose. There is no doubt of a certain intoxication in poetry and painting; but I have seen a tradesman find a fully equivalent intoxication in an addition of figures, showing a delightful balance at his banker's. I have seen a young poet intoxicated with the love of poetry; but I have also seen a young mechanical genius on whom the sight of a locomotive acted exactly like a bottle of champagne. Everything that is capable of exciting or moving man, everything that girds him with enthusiasm, everything that sustains his energies above the dead level of merely animal existence, may be compared, and not very untruly, to the action of generous wine. The two most powerful mental stimulants—since they overcome even the fear of death—are unquestionably religion and patriotism; ardent states of feeling both of them when they are genuine; yet this ardor has a great utility. It enables men to bear much, to perform much which would be beyond their natural force if it were not sustained by powerful mental stimulants. And so it is in the intellectual life. It is because its labors are so severe that its pleasures are so glorious. The Creator of intellectual man set him the most arduous tasks—tasks that required the utmost possible patience, courage, self-discipline, and which at the same time were, for the most part, from their very nature, likely to receive only the most meagre and precarious pecuniary reward. Therefore, in order that so poor and weak a creature might execute its gigantic works with the energy necessary to their permanence, the labor itself was made intensely attractive and interesting to the few who were fitted for it by their constitution. Since their courage could not be maintained by any of the common motives which carry men through ordinary drudgery—since neither wealth nor worldly position was in their prospects, the drudgery they had to go through was to be rewarded by the triumphs of scientific discovery, by the facilities of artistic expression. A divine drunkenness was given to them for their encouragement, surpassing the gift of the grape. —Hammerton's Intellectual Life.

—Humble worker, make up for your want of ability by abundant continuence in well-doing, and your life will not be trivial. The repetition of small efforts will effect more than the occasional use of great ones.

Advantages of Temperance in Eating.

The ancient physicians of Egypt ascribed all diseases to the overloading of the stomach, and their Materia Medica was limited to emetics and cathartics; and abstinence from food was their chief advice.

Cheyn said that if we would keep our stomachs clean, we should find our heads clear. The lamentable prevalence of brain diseases is more attributable to the overloading of the stomach, than to overworking of the brain. The brain is weakened by the general prostration of the whole system, and first proclaims the misuse of its powers.

The ancient philosophers, from Pythagoras, all agreed that it was needful to relieve the stomach by a careful abstemiousness, when they desired to make demands upon the imagination or reason for the exercise of all their forces.

Mr. Pitt, when he intended delivering an oration before the House of Commons, dined on cold mutton.

Newton confined himself to a slight diet, while he was composing his dessertation upon colors.

Boerhaave remarked that the oppression of food on the stomach almost extinguishes the active powers of the mind.

A mathematician can resolve a problem before dinner; while after a full repast his mind would be too dull and inactive either to study or demonstrate. A blind man who had learned to distinguish colors by the touch, could do it only when fasting.

Law, the founder of paper credit, and a financier of much ability, was remarkable for his abstemiousness, and ate the smallest possible amount to support life when engaged in subjects of deep calculation.

The newspapers of the day are filled with notices of sudden deaths, attributed to heart disease, when often the verdict should be, "died from over eating." Habitual over-eating produces dyspepsia, nausea, headaches, colics, and many of the other ills so common to mankind.

The quality of our food and its preparation, are often of as much importance as its quantity.

Temperance and simplicity in food will contribute more to our health and vigor than all the medicines or tonics in the druggists' shops.

Sir James Eyre, one of the physicians to Queen Victoria, says, perhaps we might lay it down as a rule that the majority of men eat twice as much as is really required for the support of health and strength, but in most cases the error is to be referred to ignorance of the laws of health, rather than the mere pleasure of over-indulgence. It is a common mistake among all classes that the more we eat the stronger we shall be, and nothing is more fully believed than that our vigor depends upon the quantity as well as the quality of our food.—S. O. J., in Pure Gold.

The Name of Mother.

Oh! how much is in that name—"Mother!" It is the whispering of a gentle voice that rocks to sleep in the cradle of its love every care of life. It has a charm that sustains and cheers us when everything else earthly fails.

Mother! It is the voice that we never tire in listening to, and its sweet tones make us forget life's burdens.

A mother's love! can any one fathom it? Pure, deep, and truthful, springing from no improper or selfish motives, it is always ready to make any sacrifice, however painful, for the pleasure of the object of its affections. We look in vain through the world for another example of such love as hers.

Have you a mother? Cherish her, comfort her, cheer her by your pleasant looks and consoling words; devote the remainder of your life, if you are both spared, to the care and comfort of her "who had thine earliest kiss."

Have you no mother? None to go to in the trying hour? None to share your troubles and to whom you can tell your grief? Do you realize the absence of the hands than all others most gentle and loving? Live then, to meet her above? Let your life be a constant remembrance of her who has gone!

Dear child,

"Be kind to your mother, for when thou wast young,
Who loved thee so fondly as she?
She caught the first accents that fell from thy tongue,
And joined in thy innocent glee."

Youthful reader, thy mother is the best earthly friend. The world may forget you—thy mother, never; the world may willfully do you many wrongs—thy mother, never; the world may persecute you while living, and when dead plant the ivy and nightshade of slander upon your grassless grave; but thy mother will love and cherish you while living, and if she survive you, will weep for you when dead such tears as none but a mother knows how to weep. Love thy mother? Do you love her? What is the proof? Jesus says "He that loveth me keepeth my commandments." Now, if you love your mother it will manifest itself. Every little boy and girl who loves mother will be kind, attentive, obedient, ready to do quickly whatever told, cheerfully, smilingly. A son that will disobey his mother, exhibit a spirit of unkindness toward her, treat her disrespectfully or abusively in the least, is sure to smart for it sooner or later. Nature herself cries out in vengance against it; all heaven gathers blackness. The most fearful, awful judgments are denounced against disobedient, recreant sons and daughters. Hark? "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother; and all the people shall say, Amen." Deut. xxvii. 16.

"The eye that mocketh at his father and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." Prov. xxx. 17.

There are a great many occasions when mothers do not see fit to give their children leave to go where and do what they wish, and how often are they rebellious and pouting in consequence of it! But this is not pleasing to God. The true way is cheerful acquiescence in mother's decision. Trust her, and smooth down your ruffled feelings by the sweet and beautiful thought, "My mother knows best." It will save you many tears and much sorrow. It is the gratitude you owe her who has done and suffered so much for you.

Keep nothing concealed she ought to know; never do anything you would be ashamed to tell her. Be willing always to open the secret recesses of your heart.

Be sure to make your dear mother a special friend, a friend above all others, and chief confidant. Conceal nothing from her; but make her acquainted with the company you keep, the books you read, and even the faults which you commit.

Happy the sons, happy the daughters who are not afraid to communicate to their mother their most secret objectionable thoughts. Whilst they remain thus artless and undisguised they are free from danger,

"A mother's love, how pure,
How tender and how strong!
How long it will endure;
How passive bear each wrong!"

To Put Away Faults.

One day I was watching a great Newfoundland dog. He had been told by his master to fetch him a basket of tools that the gardiner had left in the shed. The great dog went to obey his younger master. He took hold of the basket with his mouth, but he could not lift it. What did he do? Give it up? No, never! One by one he took the things out of the basket and carried them to his master.

One by one! That is what we must try to do with our faults. Try and get rid of them one by one. Jesus knows how hard it is for you to do this, and so he has given you a word that will help you to do it, and that word is "To-day."

I will show you how. Take one fault—we will call it bad temper—and in the morning, when you get out of bed, ask God for Christ's sake to help you "to-day" to overcome that bad temper. Perhaps by and by something will begin to make you feel angry; then remember your prayer, and try and drive away the angry feeling, and say, "Not to-day."

If you have learned any bad, wicked words, like some poor children in the street, who do not know any better, then ask God for Christ's sake to help you to-day; then, when you are tempted to do so, remember, "Not to-day; I will not say wicked words to-day."

And do the same with all your faults. Take them one by one, and try for one whole day not to give way to them. It will come easier then.—Guiding Star.

AURORA ASSOCIATION.—This conference of Illinois Congregational churches, met on the 21st and 22d inst., with the First Congregational Church, in Aurora. Rev. S. B. Goodenow was elected moderator, and Prof C. A. Blanchard, scribe. The sermon by Dr. J. B. Walker was much enjoyed by the Association and audience. Reports from the churches were generally encouraging, though there are several destitute of pastors. Three young men, E. D. Bailey, C. A. Blanchard, and Jno. A. Watterworth, were licensed to preach. The address from the "Pews to the Pulpit," delivered by Dea. Towne, of the New England Church, Aurora, was very able, permeated by the Spirit of Christ, and adapted to do much good. Also the essay on the "Womans' Temperance Movement," was well received. Its author, the moderator, is well-known to the Cynosure readers as an able writer. The communion of the Lord's Supper was administered by Rev. L. Farnham and Rev. J. L. Granger, assisted by four dea cons from various churches. After this service, the Association adjourned to meet at Naperville in Oct.

—The forty-ninth anniversary of the American Tract Society will be held in Dr. Crosby's Church, New York, May 13–17.

—The American Missionary for May announces that the receipts for the first three months of 1874, have fallen off eleven thousand dollars, as compared with last year.

—Dr. Adams, of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York, has resigned after a forty years active service in the Christian ministry in that city.

—On the 30th of December last, the Presbyterian missionaries in Japan, organized a presbytery, which will be represented in the next General Assembly at St. Louis.

—Rev. J. E. Roy, western agent of the American Home Missionary Society, has been on a trip to Texas. On his return, he spent several days in Little Rock, the Arkansas capital, and sent several interesting letters on the gubernatorial fracas to the Tribune of this city.

—Minnesota has 182 Baptist churches, 5,987 members. There are eight associations. The members are of many nationalities—American, German, French, Scandinavian, Danish, African. They have only fifty-six houses of worship, but are building twenty more.

—The revival meetings at Jacksonville, Ill., have taken a powerful hold on the people. Numerous audiences attend every evening, and 1,000 persons have signed the covenant that with the help of God, they will serve him during their lives. Mr. Hammond went on Thursday last to Hannibal, Mo., for a few days.

—There are in California not less than 550 organized churches of all denominations, and 600 church buildings erected, with an aggregate accommodation for 225,000 sittings. Church property is valued at $7,-500,000. The Methodists lead in the number of local societies, having 190.

—Last year the ministers of twenty-five Episcopal churches of London wore "eucharistic vestments." They are now used in thirty churches. Last year only eight Episcopal churches in London used incense. Now it is used in fourteen. Altar lights are used in thirty-six churches. The practice of confession is increasing.

—An endeavor, successful thus far, is being made to establish a college at Aintab in Central Turkey, 600 miles from Constantinople. One hundred thousand dollars is needed for the object, a portion of which amount has been subscribed in England and by the people of Aintab. Contributions are solicited.

—The revival work in Glasgow, Scotland, does not abate, and it is said that large audiences could be got together every two hours, if the strength of the workers, Moody and Sankey, could bear it. The young men assemble in the city hall on Sunday. to the number of 3,000, and have beside, meetings during the week.

—Rev. Henry D. Moore, the high Mason of Vine St. Congregational church, Cincinnati, has lately been installed pastor over the Congregational church at Springfield, Ill. The efforts of the fraternity in the former, to sustain Mr. Moore and a large church, were neffectual. They probably found the support of one set of religious ceremonies enough.

—The Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, D. R. Barker, pastor, has been experiencing a wonderful revival, which has raised it up to a self supporting basis. This is perhaps the only church of this denomination in Iowa which sent pastor and delegate to the National Anniversary at Monmouth, and one of the few which have no fellowship with the false worships of the lodge.

—The New York City Mission reports thirty mis sionaries in the field and 5,555 visits have been made among the poor in the month of February. The mis sion has seven stations; five Sabbath-schools, with 1,-500 scholars; four churches, with 627 communicants; ten temperance societies, with 4,000 total abstinence members; two lodging houses and two reading rooms. The Rev. Dr. Hall is chairman of the Board of Management.

—Dundee, Scotland, under the labors of D. L. Moody and Prof. Sankey, is enjoying the same wonderfully glorious revival that followed their labors at Edinburg. The revival at Edinburgh still continues, and for months the one absorbing topic among all classes of society, in the street, the cars and places of business has been the great subject of salvation. Crowds of from three to five thousand attend these revival meetings, yet they are noted for their quiet and order, and the absence of excitment is as remarkable as the revival itself.

—Bishop Edwards, of the United Brethren church, reports the following statistics from the district comprised by the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and parts of New York, Ohio, and Tennessee: preaching places, 1219; organized churchss, 1,102; classes, 1,173; church houses, 565; parsonages, 56; Sabbath schools, 667; officers and teachers, 6,588; scholars, 34,749; present number of members, 38,547; net increase the past year, 2,056; total collections for all purposes $220,482,01.

—Mrs. Watson, an English lady, for more than thirty years has devoted herself and her fortune to the service of her Master, and has conducted schools in Athens, Candia, Valparaiso, Smyrna, Beirut, Sidon, and Lebanon. In Lebanon she has established a number of schools for the natives, including Roman and Greek Catholics, Druses, Maronites, etc. She has also built a church at Shemlan. Recently three girls' schools have been opened by Mrs. Watson in Lebanon villages, which are taught by native teachers trained by herself. The greater part of the expenses in all her enterprises she bears herself.

—It is said that the Greek Church has been doing an effective missionary work in Japan. Since the Buddhist faith has fallen into decline in that country the Japanese have been greatly interested in finding a new religion to take its place, and missionaries from Russia have taken advantage of these favorable conditions to propagate their faith with great zeal. Their labors have been attended with much success. Not long ago the Bishop of Kamtchatka visited a city of Japan, and received a hundred converts into the church at one time. It is reported that a number of Buddhist priests have been converted, and have assumed the functions of Christian minister of the Greek Church.

News of the Week.

The City.

—Globe Theater, a wooden building on the West Side, was burned on Monday morning. It was a low resort in the midst of houses of prostitution, but was, after the great fire, the largest building of the kind in the city.

—The Straits of Mackinaw are open for navigation at a much later date than usual this year; but lumber craft have for a week or two arrived in considerable numbers at this port from the upper lake region. Several inches of snow fell on Monday night twenty-five and thirty miles west of the city.

—Dr. Thomas, of the First M. E. church, preached a sermon Sabbath before last in vindication of Professor Swing, which did not so much accomplish its avowed object, as to call attention of the public to the doctrine of Dr. Thomas himself. A minister of the Rock River Conference writes that he is ashamed of such "meddlesome discourtesy," and such teachings would land the community in religious doubt and chaos.

The Capitol.

—An appropriation for the Centennial Exposition will be discussed by the House next Tuesday. The Pennsylvania Senate voted 1,000,000 to the building, and not the U. S. Senate as lately stated.

The President's veto has humiliated the inflationists, but exalted him in the eyes of the large majority and the wiser portion of the people. The currency bill will come up again this week. Meanwhile, compromise measures are talked over, and one authorizing free banking and a reduction of the greenback circulation to $300,000,000 is likely to unite the parties.

On Monday, eulogies were pronounced, and formal resolutions of respect were adopted in the House, in memory of the late Senator Sumner, by Congress. The most effective speech was made by Lamar, of Mississippi, who once left Congress to join the Rebellion. His plea for restoration of confidence and good feeling between the North and South, was very eloquent and effective.

The Country.

The number of foreign bound passengers on the ocean steamers is much less than for many years—a wholesome reaction.

The Federal Council of the Internationals at New York resolved on the 26th to dissolve as the organization has proved a complete failure in this country.

—Pres. Mitchell of the Milwaukee and St. Paul road says it will be impossible to run trains at a profit under the new railroad law of Wisconsin, and his road will stop running when it goes into effect.

A little four-year-old boy was found horribly murdered near Boston lately, and the perpetrator of the deed proved to be another boy of 15 who acknowledged the crime, and is thought to be insane.

—The whisky ring of the Pennsylvania Legislature lately gained an important victory in passing a bill permitting manufacturers to sell as well as make liquors. A large number of ladies from different parts of the State were present during the discussion and vote, giving their silent influence to the right.

—It is reported from New Orleans that the Mississippi floods have brought partial or entire ruin upon 25,000 persons in and near that city. Northern cities are contributing largely to their relief. Many of the finest plantations of Louisiana are under water, a number of women and children are reported drowned, hundreds are without food and shelter, and vast herds of stock are dying for want of food.

The Arkansas troubles are lessening since Tuesday last when the Baxter crowd and the U. S. troops had a skirmish in which some of the former were wounded. Amid all the conflicting statements it is difficult to determine which side has most right and which most wrong. If an honest court can try the case, after the combatants have had enough of war, the people may know the truth and justice be done.

—The temperance movement has been quiet for some time in Columbus, O., but on Monday Wagner, a saloonist, invited the public to a grand opening. A band of ladies went to the place and were ejected forcibly by Wagner. There is great excitement, and Wagner is on trial for assault, The District Court at Des Moines, Iowa, ordered all the saloons closed, but has been disregarded. They propose to fight till the last. The Constitutional Convention of Ohio after several days discussion have voted to submit to the people the question of license with restraining laws, or "no license."

Foreign.

—Castelar has written a letter in favor of a Federal Republic for Spain.

—The Emperor William closed the session of the German Reischstag on Saturday with a set speech of little importance.

—Count Chambord has learned wisdom from his former attempt and failure to become King of France, and has renewed his conspiracy.

—The expenses of the British government on account of the famine in India, are estimated at $32,-500,000, and a loan is proposed to meet the bill.

—The remains of Livingstone were buried in Westminster Abbey on the 16th, attended by one of the largest funeral processions ever known in England. Stanley was one of the pall bearers.

—News from Poland gives particulars of the attempt to force the people to accept the Russian national church. The priests of twenty-six parishes in one province have been imprisoned. The peasants refused to recognize the Russian priests, in some places stoning them and attacking the military sent to force them to church. At one village the troops opened fire, killing many peasants. At another village a number of officers and solders were killed and fifty-seven peasants shot down. Superstition seems matched against superstition for self-destruction.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

There are other customs more or less frequently connected with college fraternities which, from their doubtful or immoral character, cannot be looked upon as useful in forming right character or taste. They will be briefly mentioned.

The stated meetings of the Yale "upper class" societies often continue till after midnight; with some the regular time for adjourning is two or three o'clock in the morning. Special meetings and initiations always continue till near daybreak.

In announcing to candidates their acceptance, the members of Yale societies proceed from room to room at midnight and after singing a coarse song, announce their errand, receive the acceptance of the candidate and dispatch the fruit, cakes and wine provided. They then light fresh cigars, sing another song or two, cheer a little and pass on. "The procession grows more and more hilarious, and its songs hoarser and huskier as to utterance, until towards the last it is little better than a disorderly crowd whose members are apt to laugh when some one smashes a street lamp with a banana, or tosses an orange through a window; and when it has given out its final election, it lingers longingly about the concluding 'treat,' and perhaps is at length obliged to drag away by main force a few of its tipsiest members, who drowsily insist on 'making a night of it,' then and there." At initiation suppers wine is always provided and sometimes stronger drinks, with which the "upper class" men "celebrate" themselves into beastiality after the Freshmen have retired.

Occasionally special meetings are held, and after the close of the literary exercises a sack containing one or two bushels of peanuts is emptied on the floor, and an indiscriminate scramble is made for them by guests and entertainers. This instructive exercise is followed by cigars.

In some societies the sober, substantial students are overborne by the "fast" and "loud-mouthed" party, which gives an ill repute to the whole membership. In others the scant literary exercises are helped out by music and dancing, smoking, card-playing and occasional suppers. One Delta Kappa Epsilon chapter, on special occasions, when a number of guests from other chapters are present, prolongs its meetings until after midnight, and then marches through the streets, to the number of half a hundred or more, singing society songs before young ladies' boarding schools, or shouting them out under the college windows.

Enough has been said of these features of college fraternities to show that much of their energy is spent in practices of a debasing and demoralizing character. That their effect upon the social nature or intelligence of the student is to lower the standard of both no one, who admits the above facts or the many others that could be produced, will deny. It may be claimed that the picture is over-drawn, that a just representation of the system is not given. It may properly be urged in reply that the oaths or pledges of concealment, which cannot greatly vary from those quoted, are a violation of the principles of the Bible; a stain and clog upon the conscience; and introductory to similar forms in the outside world that are everywhere deprecated by right-minded men. The initiations, rowdyism and immoral practices described may be unknown in some institutions where an active and strong moral influence prevails. This difference would in a great measure vanish if opportunities for indulgence were more favorable. The societies are year by year becoming more unified through national conventions and society journals, and acquaintance begets likeness. Membership in a fraternity means responsibility for its acts. Every chapter shares in the moral delinquency of a single one, as every church and member of a religious denomination is scandalized by the misdeeds of any of its component bodies.

But there are unexceptional features of the college society system. Jealousy and strife are its natural and universal companions. President Hitchcock, in his "Reminiscences of Amherst College," (p. 320) says of the societies, secret and anti-secret, of that institution:

"These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy and heart-burning among the students and towards the faculty. The secret societies would of course have little prestige were they not strongly exclusive, so as in fact to leave out a majority of the students, nor unless those selected embraced the elite as to scholarship. But the majority thus passed by, or rather as they would regard it, made the mudsills on which these societies rested, would not be very well contented in such a position, and the same faculty that had granted permission for the formation of the secret societies could not refuse the application for one of a contrary character. But this subjected them to the jealousy of the secret societies. There would be a desperate struggle among the students to obtain the leading men in the classes for the different societies, and they would ere long come to regard this matter as one of the most important interests in college."

This is the uniform testimony from every institution where the secret society has been established. It is always and naturally regarded as a selfish combination to secure privilege and promote clannishness among students. Jealousy and suspicion cannot be otherwise than aroused against those who maintain such obligations as have been given in these pages. If there are two or more societies in an institution the evil is aggravated by ambitious strife, not inaptly termed "college politics," in which is displayed on a smaller scale, but with the same bitter zeal, the intrigue and wire-pulling of a political campaign in the outside world. The fraternities in this respect serve, not as educators of culture and sense, but of finesse and low strategy—an acquisition valuable to the class known as "politicians," but not to the upright citizen. The points of dispute in these contests are of course various, but the open literary societies have perhaps suffered most from them. The "Linonia" and "Brothers in Unity" at Yale were justly among the most celebrated organizations of this kind in the country. But the wrangling of the secret cliques killed them. A graduate of Yale writes of their elections as carried on of late years: "The amount of political intrigue and wire-pulling and log-rolling expended in deciding the first election in these two societies was almost fabulous. The three lower classes were vitally interested in the matter, for each had a share in the spoils, and a vice-secretaryship might be as valuable in taking one man to Sigma Phi as a presidency in taking another man to Bones or Keys. The bargains and coalitions and combinations and cross-combinations made between the six Junior and Freshman societies were therefore all but innumerable." An instance of this contention lately occurred in Chicago University, and is thus described by a student in a letter dated March 10th, 1874:

"At a recent election in one of our literary societies the members of the two secret societies formed opposition parties, and after considerable "pulling and hauling," illegal voting, etc, succeeded in electing a candidate not desired by the majority of the society. An anti-secret party was immediately formed, the election proved null and void, and the proper man elected. Thus it is that these Greek fraternities are breaking up the literary societies in our colleges throughout the United States, but especially in the East; and our college papers, with their eyes closed to these facts, are wondering what is causing the decline of our once so flourishing and beneficial literary societies."

These coalitions have not been confined to students, but have often affected the decisions of faculties, particularly in the assignment of "college honors" and prizes. As an instance, Amherst College had at one time 268 students, of whom 126 were secret society men, 142 were not. Of the forty prizes given, the former received thirty-one,—more than three-fourths of the whole, while they numbered less than one-half. The number and value of such distinctions given to themselves is boastingly displayed by some societies to draw in members. Indeed, an undisputable authority says that the incumbant of a Greek professorship in one of the largest of the State Universities was, before his appointment, a prominent representative of the college secret societies, and is largely indebted to them for his position.

A recent instance of apt scholarship in the peculiar sociality of the college society was lately witnessed at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. Professor C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Ill., was, on invitation of the citizens, delivering a series of lectures against secret societies in Journal Hall of that city. One of his lectures was on the college "brotherhoods," and the interested students were present. Their behavior is thus described in the Ithaca Journal of January 23, 1874:

Items for Temperance Workers.

In Pennsylvania where license prevails there are 13,765 liquor dealers, one to every 270 of the population.

The proposition to substitute tea for brandy in the Russian army has been submitted to "specialists," who are to report upon "utility and results produced by brandy and tea."

Bock beer, or what is generally called buck beer, is a brewing of double strength, which is made at this season of the year. The custom is ancient. In olden times the brewers believed that a spirit called "Bock" presided over the spring brewing, and imparted to it more than ordinary strength. In time belief in the spirit was dispelled, but the beer in the latter part of April was made of double strength, and gradually became known as "buck" beer, whence the pictures which ornament the windows of the saloons.

The amount of liquors made and consumed in Austria is very large. The empire is said to contain 2,622 breweries, producing annually 1,136,480,806 liters of beer, or about 249, 150,747 gallons. In addition to this, the wine production amounts to about 243,000,000 gallons annually. The population of the country is about 40,000,000, so that the average consumption of every man, woman and child in the empire is about six gallons of wine and six and one quarter gallons of beer.

The cost of liquors in the United Kingdom in 1871 was $541,000,000, and the liquors drank there in six years, from 1865 to 1870 inclusive, would build 22,000 miles of railroad, 7,000 more than they now have. The quantity of grain used for the six year's drink would make bread sufficient to support the whole population of the United Kingdom for two years, and the amount spent would build a fine house for every family of five persons. In New York city three glasses of liquor are drank for every loaf of bread eaten, the liquor costing thirty cents and the bread ten. If the waste occasioned by drink could be stayed, a national debt would be unknown and taxes would be trifling; if it continues without abatement there is danger that the debt will increase beyond the ability to even meet the interest.—Carleton Sentinel.

The Duke of Orleans, who was the eldest son of King Louis Phillippe, was the inheritor of whatever rights his father could transmit. He was a very noble young man—physically noble. His generous qualities had rendered him universally popular. One morning he invited a few of his companions to breakfast, as he was about to take his departure from Paris to join his regiment. In the conviviality of the hour, he drank a little too much wine. He did not become intoxicated—he was not in any respect a dissipated man. In taking the parting glass he slightly lost the balance of his body and mind. Bidding adieu to his companions, he entered his carriage; but for that one extra glass of wine he would have kept his seat. He leaped from his carriage, but for that one extra glass of wine he would have alighted on his feet. His head struck the pavement. Senseless and bleeding, he was taken into a beer shop near by and died. That extra glass of wine overthrew the Orleans dynasty, confiscated their property of one hundred millions of dollars, and sent the whole family into exile.

Facts and Figures.

The following is the amount of currency in circulation in Great Britain, Germany and France: Great Britain, $686,421,540; Germany, $557,772 098; France, $1,200,545,441.

In the course of last year, there were published in England five hundred and seven new novels, and two hundred and twenty-one new volumes of poetry. To these may be added, for the year's product, half as many more books of the same sort published in this country. A similar fertility has occurred in previous years. But how many of these books have had any just pretensions to be read or remembered! To be as charitable as possible, it may be asserted, that nine-tenths of the annual crop of novels and poems represent only the waste of human aspirations.

The Chicago Council contains forty members, of whom more than one-third are directly interested in the liquor-traffic; five are manufacturers of intoxicating beverages, and ten keepers of public drinking saloons. The school committee is composed of five members; one is a distiller and two are saloon keepers. The committee on licenses of all kinds, of the same number, contains two manufacturers of liquors and two saloon-keepers. The chairman of two important committees, that more than all others have to do with finance, are men who not long since were indicted by the grand jury of the county for bribery. No one can reasonably doubt that such appointments mean riot and rascality. That schemes are on foot to inaugurate the same style of administration in all our cities and larger towns in the west, is openly proclaimed.

The English Journal of Science notes that the stokers of steamers in hot countries, laboreas in steel works, iron mills, etc., can work without visible detriment to health in temperatures of from 100 to 212 deg. To this it may be added, that, in some parts of California, Americans can farm in the sun all day, with the thermometer ranging over 110. In fact, it is the humidity of the atmosphere in heated terms that works detriment to health and life. In a permanently dry air, there are no sunstrokes or congestions at a high temperature.

The most stringent lottery law in the country has recently been passed by the Ohio legislature. The public or private promoters, backers, or venders for or on account of "any lottery, policy, or scheme of chance of any kind or description, by whatever name, style or title the same may be denominated or known, or whereyer located," are, upon conviction, to be "fined in any sum not less than $50 nor more than $100, and be imprisoned in the county jail not less than ten nor more than ninety days, at the discretion of the court." No exception is made for church fair lotteries or newspaper gift distributions. The purchaser of a ticket in a lottery can, if dissatisfied, recover the amount and one half more, together with exemplary damages not less than $50.

Literary Notices.

Lectures and Letters is the fifteenth of the N. Y. Tribune extras; containing a letter by Bayard Taylor on the discoveries on the Site of ancient Troy; six lectures by the celebrated physician, Dr. Brown Sequard, on the nerves; four by Prof. Proctor on astronomy; and one by Prof. Chandler on the Germ Theory of disease. This series is bringing a vast amount of current and valuable literature within the reach of all.

The Galaxy, along with considerable lighter matter, has interesting sketches of foreign life and character in Paris and Scandanavia, and brings up some almost forgotten history connected with the Revolutionary war and French treaties of that time. A Spanish writer, Cespedes, writes of the Temperance Crusade from a foreign stand point.—Sheldon & Co., New York.

The Sanitarian for May appears enlarged and improved with papers on ventilation, Hygiene of dwellings, the Sewerage Question, puplic Health Reports, etc. of value to intelligent readers. Published at 234 Broadway, New York.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

The American Wesleyan, whose editor writes from personal knowledge and honest good will, speaks thus of this institution:

We have a heart full of good sentiments for Wheaton College. Its advantages are suiperior.

1. It is easy of access. It is but an hour's ride from Chicago, with which communcations can be made almost hourly any day, by the frequent trains. Most other points of the State and nation by the same means lie within easy reach.

2. Wheaton College has large and commodious buildings,—not Gothic, nor Doric, nor yet "barnic," but massive tasteful, convenient and well furnished.

3. Wheaton College is located in a healthy region, where the surface is broken into billowy undulation and beautiful hills affording a well drained surface.

4. Wheaton College is an institution of enterprise. It is abreast with the advanced scientific thought of the times. It has a faculty of fourteen members, who are thorough, earnest and profound. They use the same standard text books of science as Harvard and Yale, without the well known infidel creed of the former, or the worm-eaten systems of secretism as allowed in the latter.

5. No hazing is permitted under any pretext; no secret society can breathe its free and generous air and live; no profanity or smoking is permitted; no lounging away the Sabbath is indulged when attendance at church is so easy; but with a genial, joyous, generous life surrounding them, students become enamored of the place, and stand upon its grounds as though enchanted. Every element of usefulness and true manhood has its every opportunity to develope. At larger institutions the professors can spend but little time with each student, and in literary exercises, unless one possesses unusual brilliancy, he is lost in the sea of mind that floats around him. Not so at Wheaton, every one has a part to play in the acts of that mineature but model world.

6. Wheaton College is reformatory from foundation stones to turret-tops. Kneeling in the prairie grass upon that beautiful summit more than twenty years ago, a few Wesleyan Methodists, friends of the slaves, of the country and of Christ, consecrated that spot forever to the service of the Lord. That consecration is still borne in mind, and adhered to by the present owners and occupants of the institution. Though cast out by the majority of Congregationalists from that intimate relationship and cordial support which as brethren they should give this noble college; nevertheless, neither the president nor faculty have a single step to retrace. We know their metal. When the battle is over you will find their bodies in the breach.

7. As Wheaton College teaches Wesleyan principles, for which cause the world and the popular churches cast it out as evil, does not this very fact point it out to Wesleyans as an object of our sympathy and support? And now as eighteen thousand dollars are needed to lift it above all indebtedness, we trust that our brethren will not listen to its appeals in vain. Give it students, money and prayers.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

The author has presented information concerning the Old Mysteries and their antagonism to Christianity; the Masonry of Washington and his virtual secession from it; the harlotry of Masonry, English and American, in assuming charge of international politics, and treaties between England and the United States; the disgusting intervention of the lodge at the close of the French and German war; the Masonic baptisms; all these and more Gen. Phelps has given, accompanied with clear philosophical dissertations of his own.

The Cynosure is now printed Wednesday and mailed Thursday. At the earnest request of some of our subscribers we shall soon mail the paper one day earlier, so that those most distant may be sure of getting their paper by Saturday.

OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST was counted on April 27th and footed up 4,028 names. Last week we published the footing for April 17th which was 3,886. This you can see is a gain of 142 in ten days.

From the 27th of April until the 2d of June, the date of the Syracuse Anniversary, there are thirty-five days. If the rate of increase to our subscription list continues what it has been during the last ten days it will number at the date of the Convention 4,525.

Can we not do better than this? We want to report 6,000 subscribers at the Convention. If half our present list would send in one new one soon we could do so. The political state of our country calls loudly for such a paper. The voters want a sound political platform. We have one. We would like to send out 30,000 Cynosures containing a report of our political Mass Meeting at Syracuse.

Remember that if you have five dollars of the Lord's money that with it you can send twelve persons the Cynosure for three months; for ten dollars you can send the paper to twenty-five persons. These will receive a full report of the Convention if their names are received in time.

Some of our agents are doing all they ought in this work. Are you?

A Subscriber from Canada writes: "Please send me some extra Cynosures immediately. I want them to take to Conference." Cannot at least 100 others do this during the month of May? Will our Monmouth friends remember the United Presbyterian meetings to be held there in in May and have Anti-masonic books and tracts on hand?

If you cannot act yourself, aid and encourage some one who can, to do so.

A friend in Ohio during the last week has persuaded a young man to enter the work as agent.

A donation occasionally comes in for the free distribution of tracts. For every dollar sent in a friend adds another, hence such gifts count double.

The President's veto seems to have struck the death knell of the republican and democratic parties. Now is the time for reformers to strike long, strong blows. "There is a tide which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune." Could there be any greater fortune for the American people than the establishment of anti-secret society, temperance principles, in favor of the Bible as the standard of morals? Can effectual work in this direction be done better than by securing a large circulation for the Cynosure?

Only 1,972 more subscribers are needed to bring our list up to 6,000. This is one fair day's work if all interested will engage in it. Will you?

We have many working agents in Indiana, and their State Agent says 1,000 Cynosures should be put into the State this year. We have 470 subscribers there now,—nearly half the number we are aiming at. How soon will the other half be obtained? We hope Indiana will claim the National Meeting at Indianapolis next year. One or two thousand Cynosure subscribers would aid much in preparing for it.

The "Mollie Maguires" are a terror only in certain parts of Pennsylvania now. But tares are sown when good people sleep. Is it not best to understand this and, wide awake, work diligently to get the good seed, the Cynosure carries, planted not only in Pennsylvania, but throughout the United States, territories and also in Canada?

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commission." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2.00 a year and requires a great addition to our present mail list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not, as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

Topics of the Time.

IMPIOUS JOKING.—The very small wit of an increasing number of popular writers and speakers ekes out an existence by the abuse of Scriptural passages and expressions. These familiar phrases are very convenient to point a joke or turn a low pun with minds empty of decent reverence, and of low intelligence. The latest and lowest instance comes from a reputable organization, the Philosophical Society of Chicago. This is a society of the "composite" order, made up of Jews, infidels, doctors of divinity, physicians, preachers, lawyers, etc., all gentlemen of standing, who have united to become truth seekers. On Saturday evening last this society was entertained with a lecture on the subject: "Our Father who art at Washington." What might have been said is not very material, for a mind that can delight itself in blasphemy of this sort can do nothing but grovel. But what have three D. D.'s of the Congregational, Episcopal and Methodist persuasion,—Haven, Powers and Thomas—to say of such a performance in the society of which they are reputed members?

A RATIONALIST'S OPINION.—Prof. Huxley's scientific promulgations surely have not tended to settle commonly received opinions of the Creator and his works. But he has written a testimony in favor of the use of the Bible in public schools which should cause a blush of shame (if that can be) on the cheek of the self-constituted defenders of theological truth who have joined the cry of infidels and Romanists on this question. Huxley writes like a man accustomed to examine the principle of things, and his well known rationalistic views give him opinion greater weight. He says:

I have always been strongly in favor of secular education in the sense of education without theology; but I must confess I have been no less seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up, in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters, without the use of the Bible. By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized and made to feel that each figure in the vast historical procession fills, like themselves, but a momentary space in the interval between two eternities; and earns the blessings or the curses of all time, according to its effort to do good and hate evil, even as they also are earning their payment for their work?

SENATOR SCHURZ'S EULOGY on Hon. Charles Sumner, delivered in Fanueil Hall, Boston, on Wednesday, April 29th, would certainly impress an ordinary, unbiased reader as a clear, historical, truthful and powerful exposition of the life of one of the noblest of nature's offspring.

Mr. Sumner seems to have been all that nature could make him,—a pure, generous, industrious, truthful patriot, whom history, art and travel had enriched with her choicest treasures.

Having gone through the Latin school at the age of fifteen, through Harvard College from which he graduated at nineteen, then passing from the law school through the conditions of lawyer, teacher, lecturer and author, enthusiastic, laborious and successful, exciting the admiration and most honest and cordial endorsment from such men as Judge Story, he spent three years in Europe, enjoying the best possible opportunities which learning, wealth and culture could offer, for becoming acquainted with the politics, science and literature of Great Britain, Germany, France and Italy. At the age of thirty-four years he first came prominently forward into public life in the delivery of an oration at the request of the authorities of Boston on the Fourth of July, entitled "The True Grandeur of Nations." His life seemed to be an earnest, honest effort to promote the grandeur of this nation; and so far as he influenced them of all others. His noble, unremitting toil in the anti slavery conflict is pictured by Senator Schurz, with all the beauty that illuminates truth when displayed by a master artist. His great influence during the days of secession and rebellion in leading the way for the emancipation of slaves is brought out distinctly.

His wise conduct when chairman of the committee on foreign relations in the Mason-Slidell case, in connection with the Alabama Claims and the wanton injustice of his removal from that position, teaches the folly of slavery to party and the depravity of the children of men who abuse merit when it conflicts with transient, personal, selfish interests.

When he withdrew from the Republican party the base ingratitude of politicians and a large number of the people towards their great benefactor, the censure of the legislature of Massachusetts, and added to this a severe attack of the disease which a year later caused his death, shows us the wisdom of remembering the days of darkness "for they are many."

As was said at the outset, Mr. Sumner seems in the portrayal of his life by his discriminating and candid eulogist, to have been all that nature in her best possible conditions could make him. Descended from an upright, courageous English family, enjoying all desirable advantages in early life for the best literary training, with a strong and noble physique, no fierce encounters with poverty for his daily bread, he put forth a majestic and graceful manhood refreshing true hearts as a carefully trained shade tree pleases a correct taste.

He was all that nature could make him. Involuntarily we say how much greater are the triumphs o grace. How much safer are the treasures laid up in heaven.

Imitate Mr. Sumner in his honesty, in his purity, in his industry, in his devotion to truth, in his opposition to the hidden works of darkness, in his generous love of humanity, but make the soul of all this Christ and his kingdom.

Those professing to know, say that Sumner was an earnest Christian. If this is true, Senator Schurz's eulogy, so clear and so complete in other respects, is certainly defective in not showing that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ sustained and comforted him in the trials of his life.

For the Cynosure.

Family Affairs.

BY A. THOMPSON.

HUSBAND.—Wife put the kettle on, I love to hear
Its pleasant song, and see our smoking cheer,
And while you get the supper, I'll unfold
A plan for getting honor, ease and gold.

WIFE.—Why bless you John I never knew before,
Your mind upon such dizzy heights to soar,
Has mad ambition caught you by the hair
And bound you fast on her deceitful chair?
What would you be? no alderman, I ween;
That for your genius would be low and mean,
And though as governor a while might do,
Yet, John, the Senate is the place for you.
There your great parts all unobscured might shine
And fill the nation with your fame and mine.

HUSBAND.—Ah! your old pranks—there, Nancy, that will do,—
Had ever woman such a tongue as you?
Were you a Senator, I would be bound,
You'd beat old Butler on his chosen ground;
But if you can your ridicule retain
I'll show my plan, and strive to make it plain,
You know our foundry is a large concern,
There full a thousand all their living earn,
And you would think that in proportion due
To what the workmen of the business knew,
Were honesty and soberness combined
That each and all a proper place would find.
It is not so, another force appears,
And into place the oath-bound brother rears,
Sets him on high and bids him grandly ride
O'er worthy rivals cooly set aside.
'Twas but to-day, I heard our boss declare,
My steady habits and my skill and care,
And recommend me as a worthy man
To be a foreman in the place of Dan
Whose drinking habits, long a deep disgrace,
At length have dispossessed him of his place.
What's the reply?—"I would be pleased indeed,
To give to John the place of Daniel Reid,
But he's a 'cowan;' give a hint from me,
And bid him travel through the third degree."
Thus spoke the owner so that I might hear
What was of course intended for my ear.
And now my plan if you declare it good
Is to be numbered with the brotherhood.

WIFE.—Amazing wisdom, oracle of light,
What deep sagacity you show to-night!
Yes, round your neck the Mason's halter draw
And bow the subject of Masonic law,
And humbly sware through all your mortal life
To keep your secrets from your worthy wife.
Yes, join and pay for pass-words and degrees,
For empty titles and for private fees
In one year more than you have given
In any two to spread the bliss of heaven!
And you may be a general or a priest,
A great high something at the very least.
Yes, join the lodge, and every night at tea
I'll read a lecture from a new degree,
Of bleeding throats and organs torn out,
Tongues, hearts and bowels scattered all about,
Of fiery vengeance chasing to the grave,
Of malice's tongue let loose upon the slave
Who dares by any art or plan disclose,
The awful secrets that the order knows,
Of human ashes scattered to the blast,
Of horrid hell when mortal life is past,
The double hell that waits the hapless knight,
Who stains on earth his sacred honor bright.
Yes, join the lodge and I will undertake
To keep you posted up and wide awake
On all the wisdom and the lore profound,
That women never knew nor cowan found.
But mind you, John, as sure as you're a man,
I'll always look as homely as I can;
I'll let the cobwebs gather on the wall
And feed the chickens daily in the hall;
I'll wear the hat you hate so much to see,
And never give you sugar in your tea;
I'll never put a patch upon your clothes,
Nor draw a needle through your holey hose,
But look as crossly sour as spinster Lee
If you prefer the Masons' lodge to me.

OUR COLLEGES ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

EUREKA COLLEGE.

Messrs. Philo Carpenter, J. W. R. Sloan, L. N. Stratton, Esqrs., Committee:

GENTLEMEN:—Your circular letter of Sept. 18th, requesting the views of the President and Faculty of Eureka College upon the subject of "The Influence of Freemasonry on the Social, Civil and Moral Character of the citizens of America" has been received

While, except for the request made, no such article would ever have been written, and while there is not an entire uniformity in our views, I am disposed to state in brief my own convictions and those of my co-laborers so far as I know them, not, however, holding myself responsible for an exact representation of the latter.

No more than two of our number have ever been connected with any of the secret orders, and I believe none with the Freemasons. No member of the Faculty could be called a zealous supporter of secret societies. Two or three are quite earnestly opposed, and the remainder regard the question as of individual application not of serious import in connection with our social, civil and moral well-being.

Perfect impartiality is indispensable in considering this subject, and at the same time it is very difficult. What right has one who has never been connected with a secret order to assume to speak in regard to that of which he can know nothing? On the other hand, how can he who, it may be, overcoming scruples and doubts to do so, has thoroughly committed himself to a movement, present with freedom its defects to his own mind or to others? Whoever attempts to become the champion of one or the other side of the controversy upon this subject, will most certainly fail to be entirely impartial. We may, however, do great good, and such emphatically must be the result of the opposition represented by the Christian Cynosure. And yet there is not so great force to the objections set forth in the inquiries just given as is sometimes supposed.

An intelligent citizen is a competent judge of the claims of Freemasonry, though never having been initiated into its mysteries. The system has its fruits which are apparent to all. Its votaries have moved among us in all the relationships and stations of life and certainly its effects must be visible to the careful observer. We cannot suppose that any flagrant immoralities are practiced in the secret conclaves since there is no perceptible baneful influence upon the characters of those who are during a life time participants in them. Nor does it exert any very great influence in politics, since members of the order belong to all parties, often oppose each other, and very rarely, as is true even in regard to religious sects, is membership in the Masonic fraternity a deciding point in the election of officers. Civil freedom has not been jeopardized nor life and property been made insecure. Factious opposition to forms of government has not been observed as a result of Masonry in its entire history, nor has education or progress been impeded. Ministers of the Gospel remain in its membership asserting the entire consistency and propriety of such a course. Since, then, no fundamental evil can be alleged against it, we must institute more careful inquiry to determine what are its tendencies and its character. Admitting perhaps good influences from it, has it any principles of evil whatever? Are there any reasons why it should be abandoned?

As a foundation for proper judgment upon social, civil or moral questions the Bible must be recognized as the standard of right, the revelation in it of Jesus the Christ, the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, must be held as fundamental and the fact must be asserted that no moral principle, eternal and indestructable though such principles are, has come to the world from any other source than the divine. Masonry did not introduce philanthropy and morality into the world, and though it may claim to have practiced them, that is no sufficient argument for retaining the system if there are less objectionable means of doing the same.

What are the evils connected with Freemasonry?

1. Time and means are expended unnecessarily.

2. The attendant upon evening conclaves is drawn away from the family circle when he should be at home, and to that extent the social tie is weakened.

3. The pledge and obligation of secrecy are stronger than required for the legitimate accomplishment of the objects usually set forth as designed by the institution.

4. The candidate for admission is in the most solemn manner initiated into that of which he has not before complete knowledge; and if he shall find any thing fundamentally wrong, he is virtually prohibited from denouncing it. A morally responsible being has no right to take such a step in the dark. Being the guardian of his own conscience he cannot so act on the assurance of any other human being whatever.

5. No human institution has the right to exact oaths. Even the church has, formally, none, and civil governments if they require them can only do so because they themselves are ordained of God. Freemasonry has no such right, having no divine origin.

6. Freemasonry gives undue sanctity to that which is not divine; in its regular proceedings, on funeral occasions, etc., it mingles in unhallowed associations its own pretensions with the solemn rites of religious worship.

7. It performs its charitable acts not in the name of Christ; the individual gives the cup of water in his own name or that of his order. Christ does not, therefore, as he justly should, receive the glory of all our good deeds.

8. Many Freemasons openly contrast the church, as a means of good, with their order, and thus injure the influence of God's own organization. Many of them are satisfied with their order and reject the church founded by the Son of God and for which he gave his life and which he requires every free moral agent among men to enter and sustain.

9. Selfishness is an ingredient of the philanthropy of the order, since it distinguishes in its benevolence between its members and other men, and gives rather as a mutual aid society than because Christ, who has commended his own love to us by the infinite gift of himself, requires us to love one another.

Though Freemasons regard these objections as unjust and invalid, thousands are influenced by them who may not openly oppose, but yet cannot conscienciously attach themselves to the organization, and will always regard its influence as detrimental to our civil, social and moral life. A. M. WESTON.

My Conflict and the Result.

MR. EDITOR:—Some years ago, as you know, our "Grand Traverse Conference" passed resolutions against Masonry. (I first started the fight by sending a long essay in Conference against Masonry.) The Masons were enraged, and rose en-mass to crush the Congregational churches of this region.

I was called out to lecture against them, first in Northport, where they had a lodge, then here. All the Masons signed a petition to me requesting me to give them the lecture I gave at Northport. I did so. They were out; had a crowded house, a Mason chairman, and first rate order throughout for two hours or more. But they changed color and turned and scowled, but no one said a word till they got out of doors; then the chairman said, "It is all a lie." But that same man was overheard to say, next morning, to three other Masons, "I watched Thompson close last night, but there was not a point I could deny."

But though they could not deny, they resolved to crush me. They said, "We will starve him out;" and they tried it. They would not give anything for preaching, or to build the church; nor would they let their families give, who were regular attendants on the preaching. They gave me a good "letting alone;" only they talked against me behind my back, reported many lies about, and tried to prejudice the people against me. I went steadily forward in my work without noticing their lies, and the Lord helped, though they would not. The church was finished; the people stood by me. I lived without Masons' money; and THEY FAILED, broke down, and had to leave, while I hold still the field, and the Lord is blessing us and sinners are being converted. Glory to his holy name! The work is his, and his shall be all the praise. Before they left they seemed conquered in their prejudices. They bowed and smiled and spoke pleasantly to me, and one of them (said to be the highest Mason in the State) came to me and confessed his wrong toward me, and wished my forgiveness! And again said to me, "For your encouragement, Mr. Thompson, I wish to say that your influence over me has been FOR GOOD. I am resolved henceforth to throw my influence on the side of temperance" (he had been a free drinker.) He since wrote me a very friendly letter from Salt Lake City, saying that my "counsels to him were among his greenest memories." That Mason once said to me, "They talk about Morgan's being murdered by the Mason. It is all a myth." I answered, "It is too late in the day to talk so. The thing has been undeniably proven too often." He said again, "If one who had been a Mason, should come out and tell everything just as it is, you could not believe him!" What nonsense!—first acknowledge he told the truth, and then say you can't believe him! Why? "He is a perjured man." How perjured? "Because he has revealed what he swore never to reveal." Indeed! Then he has revealed Masonry or else he is not a perjured man! So, by Masons' own showing, Masonry has been revealed; and why all this ado about keeping it secret?

I once said to a Mason who had just taken the first degree, "Now, my friend, you better come up to my house and I can tell you all about it without your having a rope round your neck and being blindfolded and dragged and bamboozled around so." He replied (without thinking), "O, well, that has all been gone through with!" Another seven-degree Mason, who has staid with me—a M. E. minister—preached the funeral sermon of a very wicked man, but preached him straight to heaven, and said, "Masonry is the highest style of a profession of religion!" And a wicked, seven-degree man here says, "Masonry is all the religion I want." But this religion does not make them good men.

I have exposed their abominations and nonsense in the hall and in papers, in public and in private. They have threatened, but no violence has been inflicted. Truth has been triumphant.

Now, for years, I have been exposing the needlessness and wickedness of running iron furnaces on the Sabbath; showing that they can be run successfully and keep the Sabbath; and for this exposition of their wickedness the present iron company seem to be "down on me," and refuse to do anything toward sustaining preaching. Very well. Let them keep their money. I will try to be faithful, and trust in the Master for my support. But rebuke their sins I must, though obliged to work hard with my hands to support a large family. The prayers of Christians are invoked, that we may see, in greater power, the glory of God and triumph of truth. Yours for righteousness, GEORGE THOMPSON.

The Newspaper Press.

Why is it that the newspaper press of the country is so silent on a subject that is of such vital importance to our religion and our government, as the one which our Association advocates, viz: OPPOSITION TO SECRET SOCIETIES? Is it possible that Anti-masons are all wrong, and the newspaper editors of the United States, whom we outnumber ten to one, are all right? You will find the average American newspaper editor quite ready to publish the proceedings of Masonic lodges; but if you attempt to get him to publish Anti-masonic proceedings, you will have a cold shoulder turned upon you at once. You will have to pay pretty largely to have the use of his columns, and may not succeed even then; for the lodge is all-powerful, and there is not one press in two hundred that dare to offend it by publishing the truth against it.

Never was poor Spain so ridden by priests, as the American press is by Masonry. Even editors who pretend to the highest respectability, and whose opinions pass current with Masons and Masonic politicians, have either taken or refused money to allow moderate Anti masonic articles to go into their papers. Anything in favor of Masonry they publish with great facility, giving place in their columns cheerfully to the most stupid, unwholesome stuff that comes from the lodge, thus depraving the tastes, perverting the judgment, and confusing the ideas of moral right of their readers, but not a word will they ever print against Masonry. They will fully suppress the truth, and give only one side—the false side of the question. Let any unbiased, independent man read the Cynosure, or any other Anti-masonic paper, only for six months, and he will be surprised to find how completely the American press, both religious and political, has hoodwinked its readers, and prevented them from knowing the truth.

There is hardly a newspaper of high character in the country, whether religious or political, excepting a few Anti-masonic prints of recent date, which has failed to base its interests on the corrupt favors of the lodge. Let us take for example the New York Tribune, which claims to be at the very head of all the newspapers of the country, what are the facts in the case? How many articles against Masonry has any one ever seen in that paper during the last fifteen years? A candid answer to that inquiry would have to admit that for one such article there has probably been a hundred of the opposite character. By Masonry is meant, of course, a generic term, embracing all secret organizations. Whatever newspaper publishes the proceedings of secret societies, without adverse comment on them of any kind, favors those societies; and whatever paper favors secret societies, favors corrupt influences and false ideas.

Nothing is more dangerous to liberty in a free country, than the newspaper press. While a free, manly, independent, disinterested press is the guardian of liberty, a corrupt press is the utter ruin of liberty; and no press could be more corrupt than that which courts the impure favors of the Masonic lodge.

We are to know the tree by its fruits; and by this simple rule let us again revert to the first newspaper of the country. What did the New York Tribune do toward exposing and defeating the corruptions of the "Tammany order," a secret ring which has overwhelmed New York City with such an immense debt? If we are not mistaken, it sought to palliate and cover up that outrage at the expense of the city government. And now that an issue of the first importance arises between importers and the government, the Tribune devotes a large part of its columns in favor of the importers against the government. Its columns reverberate with the loudest thunder of indignation against a little secret ring of detectives employed by the government against known dishonest parties; but against Masonry, the worst and most pernicious of all secret rings, one that naturally leads to the existence and support of all other secret rings, the Tribune has but little to say. The Grange ring, which is one of the most dangerous aspects which Masonry has yet assumed, finds the Tribune better than posting bills and franking privileges, for advertising and furthering its proceedings. To be attending to little rings and give no heed to Masonry, is but tithing anise and cummin, and neglecting weightier matters—matters which must be attended to first and foremost above all others, or our republican government cannot be saved. It may amuse and divert idle readers to see the terriers of the Tribune ferret out little nibbling mice, while the real Masonic rats are quietly at work destroying the dikes and embankments of republican government against the desolating floods of fraud and corruption, which, like a swollen Mississippi, are threatening to pour in upon us.

What the American public now needs, is a press that dares to tell the truth; and to assail false principle in whatever gigantic proportions it may appear. It needs a press that adopts HONESTY instead of POLICY for its standard, and which makes plain and straight the paths of truth, in order to lead men out of the mazes into which Masonic indirection has led them.

REFORM.

Secrecy.

BY PRES. SMITH, OF NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE.

Remarks are sometimes made in justification of secrecy which do not seem to be very logical. No just discrimination seems to be made; but it is inferred that because secrecy is justified and demanded by peculiar circumstances, it may with propriety be adopted as a general rule of action.

Secrecy cannot be condemned as always wrong. It has, indeed, of itself, no moral character. Secrets may be committed to us which we should sacredly keep; not because they are secrets, but because to publish them would be an injury to society. If the same things should be communicated to us, not as secrets, but with the intention that they should be spread abroad, we should be guilty of the same wrong in giving them publicity.

It is proper that every individual should keep some things secret—that some of his thoughts and actions should be known only to himself and God. There may with propriety be family secrets. In the present state of society it would be very imprudent to reveal everything said and done in the family circle. But it does not follow that a family is justified in keeping a guard at the door to prevent others from entering. or in putting its members under oath not to reveal anything said or done. The church may have secret sessions, though such sessions are generally of doubtful utility. If they are allowable at all, it is that those who are interested may be more free in investigating wrong doing, and in giving expressions to their opinions, while the results of their deliberations are afterwards to be revealed. This certainly would not justify a church in holding secret sessions as a general rule. The same may be said in regard to the secret sessions of a legislative body. If they are ever justifiable, it is for temporary purposes, and as an exception to the general rule. Secrets are admissable also in war. But this does not justify those who are engaged in benevolent efforts, and who have no thought of waging offensive or defensive war against their fellowmen, in adopting secrecy as a principle of action.

It may truly be said that secretiveness is not a mark of superior virtue. We esteem men, not in proportion to their disposition to conceal their thoughts and actions, but inproportion as they manifest a disposition to act without disguise. The child is free from guile and has no secrets; and, in after life, just in proportion to its purity of heart and life, will it have less occasion for secrecy. So it is with a family or a community. The more exalted its members are in intelligence and virtue, the less tendency there will be to secretiveness on their part. If there was no sin in the world, there would be no need of secrets. There will be no secrecy in heaven. "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid that shall not be known."

In regard to this point, Henry Ward Beecher makes some excellent remarks, as follows: 'Secretiveness is an instinct of our lower nature. It is the result of the law of force, for the most part. The Spirit of Christ is one which refuses to work by principles of secrecy. There is nothing that forbids incidental secrecy, as in the family. There are some things best not to be known. But mostly secretiveness belongs to a state of life where force rules, driving men to secretiveness for protection. As we rise in the scale, however, our true nature is best served by relinquishing secretiveness to the brute creation. Fish taken in the Mammoth Cave are said to have no eyes. There being no function for it, the organ itself remains undeveloped. And so men brought up in secrecy lack that moral sense which otherwise would grow in them by use. Under despotisms, unity for liberty can only be secured by secrecy; and the price paid in demoralization of character makes it very questionable whether it is best. The open testimony of martyrs has done the world more good than all secret plottings. Although in the retreats of the family or in one's own heart some things may be withheld, it may be laid down as a general rule, that, in the operations of society, secrecy belongs to the lowest range of manhood, and not to the higher range and spiritual kingdom." There can be no doubt that when secrecy is adopted as a rule of action, it has a demoralizing tendency.

Let a virtuous man adopt the principle of secreting his thoughts and actions from his fellow-men, or let a body of men do the same, and, however pure their intentions may be, as they are removed from the healthy restraints of society, the tendency must be to lead them to approve of sentiments and deeds which otherwise they would condemn. Moral, political and religious societies are in danger of becoming corrupt, even when their doings are exposed to the criticism of those without. But the danger must be greatly increased when all their acts are hidden from public view, and all are bound under strong oaths not to reveal anything that takes place. How long would a church retain its purity if all that was said and done in its meetings was withheld from the public? What an opportunity would be afforded for hypocrites and unprincipled men to work evil? Who does not see that by acting thus in secret, without a possibility of exposure, the bad would have the advantage of the good, and would be likely to take the lead in the operations of the association?—Evangelical Messenger.

Politics as a Religious Duty.

[From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.]

No man has a right to shirk politics. Fat offices exist, and if we do not care for them, rogues will seize them just as thieves steal your stray dollars or diamonds. Worst of all, once in office, the power of office will be used to rob, outrage and ruin. Some governors, congressmen, judges and law makers ought this hour to be in the penitentiary.

Decent people complain about politics; suppose we stop scolding and compel reform. It can be done and if ever done, done by those who now do nothing but listlessly whine about the wickedness of power unsalted by the churches. Let us begin now, and at the right place. Chicago illustrates the comforts of cauterizing the wrong end of an evil. Suppose we begin further back among candidates and platforms. We shall thus properly shape future elections, and at the same time, by healthy fear among the elect of yesterday, may prompt them to serve more faithfully.

Let every good man now promise God that he will put his hand on politics. If caucuses are not abandoned to the tricksters and slumites, primary elections will not be held in saloons, amid whiskey, smoke, and oaths enough to make a careless daily reporter tremble for the country. If necessary, refuse to go to prayer-meetings that night; talk right out on the subject; scan delegates; go at first, even to a saloon caucus; insist on good order; disregard the bullies who try to get all power by repelling you with sneers about "fanatical Christians;" assert your right to shape the state; be your dignified self there just as you are in the crowd about your post office; silence party hacks, and astonish them by the sight of gentlemen doing their duty.

To your astonishment, that very first election will put on new features, and your delegates, nominees and your elect servants will gather strength when they see that you propose to stand by them just as scamps have clung to their companions.

Reformed national politics depend wholly upon reformed local politics. National politicians are powerless without the all-prevading support of local managers. Begin at home. Put every local politician on his good behavior, and he will see to it that general issues are shaped to your liking through the machinery he knows so well how to move. Parties are not kept together by devotion to abstract principles with national applications. Poor human nature is not made up after that pattern. If you neglect your local constables, coroners or supervisors, your whole party in state and nation will fall apart. Lesser ambitions and more local desire to get the much for the little create the ward, township and county influence that cements men. There will never be any necessity for attacking a national platform if you hold the reins of decency tightly over your neighbor who wants to carry his election.

The National Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies, Sixth Anniversary in Shakspeare Hall, Syracuse, N. Y., June 2, 1874.

—For the information of inquiring friends brother Stratton of the Wesleyan writes that several hundred delegates will be entertained at Syracuse. No special reduction of railroad fare is yet reported. The present rate from Chicago is $17 ; the trip is made in twenty-six hours on trains leaving at 8:30 A. M. and 5:15 P. M.

PLEDGES MADE AT MUNMOUTH should be paid without delay. Those interested will please notice and save being notified more particularly.

Ohio Anti-secret State Convention.

After consulting with the friends of our reform as generally as practicable as to the time and place of holding our State Convention for organization, we have concluded that we can do no better than to appoint it at Flat Rock, Seneca Co., O. This is not as central as we could desire, but all the circumstances indicate that this will be the most successful place for such a gathering on short notice. In this appointment we have the concurrence of Rev. L. Moore, President of Northern Central Ohio organization, and other friends, and hope that it may meet the approbation of our friends generally throughout the State. As the National meeting at Syracuse is fast approaching, and as we hope to be fitly represented in that body, we fix the time for holding our State meeting to commence Tuesday evening, the 19th of May, and to continue until Thursday evening, the 21st. We hope all our friends who can possibly atttend will do so, as the convention will be one of much interest to our cause in this State; and we hope the influence will be healthy on other States. Come one, come all, and let us put this State upon a basis in which she can be effectively aggressive against this enemy of God and humanity. We wish to be able to appoint one or more delegates at this meeting from every county in the State to the National meeting in June. Hope the friends will all take an interest in securing funds from each county sufficient to defray the expenses of their respective delegates. We will see that able speakers are present on the occasion. Papers favorable please copy.

D. S. CALDWELL, State Agent.

Carey, O., April 13th, '74.

P. S.—Persons from all parts of the State will stop off at Bellview, and will be conveyed to place of meeting.

Is Indianapolis, St. Louis or Lansing the place for our annual meeting next year? Or shall we look still farther? One important work for the National Anniversary will be to lay out the plan of next year's labor, at least so far as to fix the place of the next annual meeting. If this is done it will aid much in making that meeting what it ought to be. Will not friends interested let us know their views on this subject?

Reform News

—Rev. H. H. Hinman, who has taken the lecture work in Illinois, called on Monday last. He lately lectured in Lockport near Chicago. He has been kept from lecturing for a few days by the unsettlement of affairs incident to removal, but will now be ready to correspond with associations or break ground in new localities.

—Elder A. D. Freeman has been chosen delegate to Syracuse from the Greenwood (Ill.) Baptist church; and will attend.

—The Dupage County Association of this State has announced a semi-annual meeting for May 6th in the College Chapel at Wheaton. Delegates will be appointed to Syracuse.

Brother Kiggins writes that the following delegates have thus far been reported from Ind.: "State Association, J. T. Kiggins ; Lower Wabash Conference (U. B.), W. M. Givens ; Jay county, Rev. Aaron Worth , Hamilton county, J. L. Fall ; Cherubusco Circuit (U. B.), Rev. David Holmes ; North Ohio Conference (U. B.), West District, J. K. Atwood. Two or three more are likely to be elected, while some will go on their own account."

Organization and Lectures in Spencer County, Indiana.

On Monday, April 13th, 1874, a county anti secret association was organized in Dale, Spencer county, Indiana, of which Rev. I. Scammahorn was elected President; Rev. A. Brooner, Vice-president; Rev. H. Burr, Secretary; and N. G. Walter, Treasurer. Some of the most prominent citizens of the county, as well as some of the most pious in the churches, are connected with this movement. A committee was appointed to secure additional signers to our constitution, by signing which they become members of our organization.

We expect to hold a meeting at an early day for the purpose of laying out our plans for future operation in procuring and distributing tracts, circulating the Christian Cynosure, employing lecturers, etc. We have entered into this work in the name of Jesus, and have already had evidence that God approbates our course. We earnestly beg the prayers of all Christian people that our faith may not fail, nor our zeal grow cold.

In accordance with previous arrangements, Rev. Mr. McCormick, a Congregational minister, was with us and delivered four able and convincing lectures. Bro. McCormick's gray hairs indicate that he is past the meridian of life, and will, in a few more years at most, quit the field and recieve his reward. He is remarkably good natured, always seems cheerful and lively, but never light and trifling. His deportment during the time we were with him gave evidence that he had been with Jesus and learned of him. During the time of his lectures he never seemed angry, petulent, excited, or embarrassed. He entered upon his work so calmly and yet so earnestly, that even his enemies seemed to be astonished; and if an expression that sounded rough and uncouth should fall from his lips, there would scarcely be time for prejudice to arise in the minds of the hearers, until it would be so moistened by the tears which flowed copiously down the furrowed cheeks of the earnest reformer that it would lose its harshness and carry with it a convincing power that would seem to silence opposition.

During his stay among us a prominent Mason was heard to say "McCormick's record is clear, anyhow, for I have known him for years".

His lectures consisted in expositions of, and strong arguments against, Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, etc. At the close of each lecture he gave opportunity for any person to ask questions, which several persons did, all of which he answered in a Christian manner. In answer to the question: "Have you been a Mason?" He said, "If I should say I had not, I would lie". Having read some in Webb's Monitor and denounced Freemasonry for being a Christless institution, a man who said he had taken fifteen degrees in Masonry arose and said "I wish to ask if the name of Christ is not found several times in that book?" "Find it if you dare," said the speaker, reaching him the book. No search was made for the name, and the audience was left to judge whether or no it could have been found.

During the lectures Masons and Oddfellows were frequently invited to deny anything which they considered false, and as they did not do so we concluded that truth had been revealed. After the lecturer had left, a letter, which had been either accidentally or intentionally dropped by a Mason, was found, from which it appears that two prominent Masons of Dale had written to Dr. Swan, of Rockport, a Baptist minister, urging him to meet McCormick at Dale to defend Masonry. The letter found was signed by Dr. Swan at Rockport. Begging pardon of the brethren concerned, (knowing that the hidden things must sometime be revealed anyhow) we will quote from this letter:

"GENTLEMEN: Your note of the 10th inst., is before me, and in response I have to say (with regret) that I will not be able to be in Dale on next Monday night, consequent upon imperative engagements in another direction. But, indeed, I would love to be there and handle McCormick awhile with cast-steel fingers, case hardened, and ground to a sharp point."

Reader, please bear in mind that this man is a Christian professed !—a miniser! This grates upon our ears some thinglike the horrid oaths of Masonry.

In conclusion let me say, dear brethren in the Lord, our work is a great one. The enemy is strong. His bulwarks are powerful. The struggle is to be a fearful one. But we know in whom we trust. O let us keep near to God. Let us have the same mind that was also in Christ Jesus, and while we have no compromise to make with sin, let us entertain no hardness towards those connected with the great evil which we oppose. Blessed Jesus, arm us for the conflict. H. BURR.

Correspondence.

Masonry and the Grange.

ST. CHARLES, Minn., April 6, '74.

Editor of the Cynosure :—Some things have lately transpired here which look as though Masonry was seeking to shelter behind the grange. I notice an account of an election last month for town officers in an adjoining town where I lived several years, and know eight of the ten officers elected as follows:

First Supervisor, Mason, granger, Democrat.
Second Supervisor, Mason, granger, Democrat.
Third Supervisor, Mason, granger, Democrat.
Clerk, granger, Republican.
Justice, Mason, Republican.
Constable, Mason.
Treasurer, Mason, Democrat.
Assessor, Mason, Democrat.

This town has at least two Republicans to one Democrat, and I think not one-tenth of the voters are Masons, and the paper correspondent from that town reports it as a "great victory for the Anti-monopoly party" after a "hot contest." Masonry of course was kept out of sight, but you will notice seven out of ten officers are Masons, four grangers, and perhaps one or two more of each, as two I do not know about. One Mason who is also a granger from that town, said to me that things are changing, for he voted for four Democrats. You will see that they are all Masons, and the election was really a Masonic victory.

Another thing looking in the same direction is the "grange festival." Masonic festivals, Masonic balls, etc., have been in vogue here. This winter I hear of nothing of the kind, except the grange festival, which is so much like the Masonic festivals that I will give some extracts from the newspaper account:

"The long talked of entertainment by the St. Charles Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry, took place Friday afternoon of last week. Although arrangements had been made for a large attendance, and hundreds were expected to be present, for some reason the number fell off by nearly one-half. After being called to order by the "Master and remarks by the State Agent, etc., supper was then announced and about fifty persons repaired to the dining hall where a sumptuous feast was spread." . . . , "The dancing room was next in order. . . . The pleasures of the evening were kept up long into the early hours of the morning, and the enjoyment was supreme. The festival was a complete success."

Possibly Masonry will not find as safe a shelter as it expects. Some grangers own up that the Cynosure tra gave them is a true representation of their ritual, and appear about ready to renounce.

On coming to this place a few weeks since I was greatly surprised to learn that a prominent merchant here had lately joined the Masons.

But my surprise was greatly abated on reading a letter dated at this place March 31, 1874, and signed by the initial of the "Grand King" of the State of Minnesota, and published in a Winona paper, saying that this same merchant was elected by the grange as "grange merchant."

Since writing the foregoing, my eye has fallen on the following puff from the "State Agent for the grangers," for the Phoenix Iron Works:

"I take this occasion to say that the above named parties are proprieters of the Phoenix Iron Works in this city and seem to be doing a flourishing business in the manufacture of portable engines for threshing and other farm purposes; also the "Minnesota Seeder," which is becoming deservedly popular, both at home and abroad; also the Hughes Riding Plow, which is coming into general use in those States east and south of us, and bids fair to become a very popular and valuable implement. Messrs Hurlburt & Stevens have seen the error of the old method of doing business on long notes with wide margins for the middle men. And I feel it incumbent on me to urge on my brother Patrons to extend to them as large a share of patronage as is consistent with your wants."

This is the firm that nearly two years ago withdrew their patronage from E. A. Cook & Co. on account of their connection with the Cynosure, and gave their "heavy orders" to others, and warned the "gentlemen of the Cynosure" that their opposition to the institution of Freemasonry would have the two-fold effect of increasing the number and zeal of the brotherhood, and of diminishing their income tax. But this was done by a member of the firm when he was State Senator, and had the interests of the State and the "public morals" as well as the interest of the order or brotherhood to look after. . . . .

This "State Agent for the grangers" tells me that they design to sell to outsiders at a small per cent. above what they charge "Patrons," and perhaps some will prefer to buy through the "middle men" of the grange rather than pay their money and give up their manhood to the grange and be continually harrassed with "lodge dues," as some of the grangers already are, who would like to be free if it were not for "being forever disgraced by those that were their brothers and sisters."

It would really be a sad thing for the Masons to have the "numbers and zeal" increased very much, for they are zealous, and as a lawyer who had long been a Mason, once said to me, "Masonry is only designed for a few, and if many get into it, it will spoil it."

Masonry in the Navy.

YORK, Pa., April 26, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

During the Rebellion, the vessels of the S. A. B. squadron sometimes sent their cutters with armed crews to lay all night at certain places, as picket boats, to look out for rebel vessels or blockade runners.

One night I was one of a picket crew, sent from the Wissahickon in a cutter, to lay all night at the mouth of a river. (I have always thought it was the Savannah River, but am not sure, as it was dark.) The crew consisted of a master's mate, and seven men besides my elf. The master's mate had a navy revolver; all the rest of the crew had muskets, horse-pistols, cutlasses, and daggers. To a peacable man, we no doubt looked like fierce fellows; and Sir John Falstaff would have felt proud of such warriors. We rowed two miles from the ship, and dropped our little anchor. We then fixed ourselves for the night. One of the men asked the officer if we should load our arms. He said yes. We all drew our pistols and found all of them out of order. Some had broken locks, others bent ramrods. None could be loaded. I had no pistol, caps or cartridges. Next we tried to load our muskets, but found we had no musket caps. Our cutlasses were so dull that all of us could not have cut one rebel. Our daggers were in good order, as it was not an easy task to put them out of order. The officer did not seem surprised at our defenceless condition, but said he could use his revolver if necessary. We had an hour glass and kept up hour watches through the night, all sleeping in the bottom of the cutter, except the sentinel on daty. We were within one-fourth of a mile of the shore which the rebels held. Had armed rebels attacked us, we would have had to surrender without a fight. Our officer knowing our condition would have been a fool to have drawn his revolver on armed rebels. But his orders were to stay all night, and he obeyed. At early daylight we left in a hurry without ever stopping to take a last look.

The gunners' mate perhaps could explain all the mysteries of this picket boat affair, if it would not be "unmasonic" to do so. Why the master's mate did not tell the captain about matters that night, all who are investigating sheepskinism can guess. And what excuse our Masonic captain could give for sending us two miles so heavily armed with all sorts of old scrap iron, to watch his Masonic rebel friends so very closely, for a whole night, I can scarcely conjecture. I am glad, however, that I am not now a United States sailor, on guard with only a dagger, and loaded with a lot of old rubbish that no Jew would buy. Yours for the truth,

E. J. CHALFANT.

Secret Societies and Mutual Insurance Companies.

Editor of the Cynosure:

Orleans county, N. Y., has quite a number who believe in doing what they do openly; these constitute some of our best citizens. While there are others, who are not members of any secret organization, that believe that secret societies are of the same benefit as a mutual insurance company.

Some mutual insurance companies have proved of great detriment to the public at large, not being a mutual benefit but a mutual draining of money from the pockets of those interested, and filling the pocket-books of a board of directors. Said board of directors, after they had got rich out of the enterprise, published to the world that the company had broken down.

Secret organizations can not be compared to companies that are of a mutual benefit. The doings of the former are hidden, and of the latter are known. But they can be compared to those companies that are a mutual detriment. Because what they do is done in secret. Their stealings are hidden from those interested. CLARK D. KNAPP.

[The following letter accompanied photographs of brethren Bishop, Wickey, Weidler and Anthony, who have been lately mentioned as holding in connection a series of meetings in Southeastern Pennsylvania. We are heartily thankful to the brother who sends them, and hope to meet some day in the flesh the noble faces of these brethren. A small collection of such photographs for the Cynosure office was destroyed in the great fire. This will begin another. We should be glad of additions.]

YORK SPRINGS, April 20, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

DEAR BRO.—Several notices have appeared in the Cynosure of our glorious meeting of the 18th ult.; and thinking it might be interesting to you to see pictures of our dear brethren who participated in it, and are so earnestly engaged in pushing on the good cause, I have concluded to send you one of Brother Bishop's and one with the four on one card. If they meet your approval, well and good; if not, I trust no harm is done.

Secrecy is pretty strong here; there were only a few of us who boldly took the front ranks in opposition; but we held on through many threats until we secured the lecture, and the end is not yet. More light is wanted. Bro. Bishop secured several subscriptions to the Cynosure, and I have since gathered those enclosed. I am determined to do all I can. Though I am but young in years, and in meager circumstances, yet I feel that the Lord is on my side. Thank God for the Cynosure and religious truth. Let us continue to battle against these popular evils until we gain the victory. The "Lord is mighty to save and strong to deliver,' and we have the assurance that if we go to him in the spirit of humble and earnest prayer, we will be sure of victory. Let our motto always be, never despair, but always trust in the Lord.

Leaving all in the hands of the Lord Jesus, I am in love for truth.

Your brother in Christ,

H. F. SLAUGHENHAUPT.

Our Mail.

Conrad Stegner, East. Castle Rock, Minn., writes:

"With great joy and satisfaction, I received and read your enlarged paper, and my heart goes out for this great work. Oh that I could do for it all I wished. With and through the grace of God, I was enabled to bring my mite in (since 1850) for abolishing slavery. For temperance, that is total abstinence (this is the twenty-fourth year of my household), not a drop of alcoholic drink came into my house, even for medicine. I don't believe in tonics, either bitter or sweet. My wife brought up seven children as hearty and red-cheeked as they could be, in whose veins runs not a drop of alcoholic poison. Then we go with Geo. Trask in the tobacco reform, working the last twenty years, and not in vain, either, even among my own countrymen we have helped to gain victory; and last, but not least, we have set in, since the grange movement begun five years ago, to fight the devil in his own secret holes."

Bro. Stegner promises to write to us again about the grange operations in his locality. We will be glad to hear from him. One step in a true reform naturally leads to another.

A. Baker, Tiskilwa, Ill., writes:

"I am glad to see the powers of darkness falling. I am doing all that I can for the cause."

Wm. Miller, Uniopolis, O., writes: "You may set me down as a subscriber for life, or at least until oath-bound secrecy shall die."

Dr. S. L. Cook, Albion, Ind., writes: "As I travel all the time, I work for the cause."

Rev. W. O. Dinius, Butler, Ind., writes:

"I think the Cynosure is the best paper in the United States. I cannot keep house and succeed in the ministry without it."

Anson Larabee, Brown Point, Ind., writes:

"I am well pleased with the enlargement and appearance of the Cynosure. It will be easier to obtain subscribers now than before. . . . . Please find enclosed a post-office order for eight dollars. I am trying to do what I can to increase the circulation of the Cynosure. I will close by wishing you great success and one hundred thousand subscribers."

W. J. Knappen, Mehoopany, Pa., writes:

"This is a hard place to get subscribers in, for anything as good as the Cynosure. But I have found one who is willing to try it."

These hard places are the ones that need the paper, and we pray that God's blessing may go with every copy that reaches one of them, causing the good seed to take root and bring forth fruit a hundred fold.

Frank G. Sohman, Paxton, Ill., writes:

"The Christian Cynosure being an anti-secret society organ, will soon find its way to many a hearth, and accomplish a wondrous work."

J. A. Talmadge, Port Oram, N. J., writes:

"I have endeavored to do my best to obtain more subscribers, but have only succeeded in obtaining one, and for only three months, although I think he will continue it longer."

We often undervalue the results of our labors, because we cannot estimate their future influence. It is ours to do our work heartily as unto God, leaving him to bless it his own time and way. Where this question has been discussed, results are apparently greater; as at Little Prairie a friend obtained five subscribers, each for a year, in two hours, and left an agent to see persons that he could not call on, as he was obliged to leave.

C. Cogswell, Deer Lick, O., sends in twelve renewals. We hope our agents will not forget subscribers when their time is about expiring, but gather up and send in the renewals.

Amos Willits, Tipton, Ia., sends the Cynosure for three months to four persons, and writes:

"I will soon send you some more subscribers . . . . the Cynosure must be circulated and become a great power in the land."

"E. V. Downey, Ava, O., writes:

"I think that every Christian man or woman should be a reader of your paper. I highly prize its principles, and would hate to do without it."

Daniel Thomas, Fairmount, Ind., writes:

"If J. P. Stoddard is passing this way at any time, we would like to have him call at our town; or C. A. Blanchard."

He expresses a deep interest in the work, and has been disappointed about a lecturer, but is determined to persevere in his good warfare.

N. B. Wetmore, Herricksville, Pa., writes:

"I live on the old battlefield of D P. Rathburn, where every inch of ground is warmly contested; but truth is mighty, and must and will prevail."

C. Bender, Geneseo, Ill., writes:

"The people like the paper very much in its present form."

John Cassidy, Charleston, Ia., writes:

"I now enter my seventy-fourth year, and have been connected with the abolition movement from the first. That struggle is over, victory won, and I now rest in peace; no poor slave comes to my door at midnight asking help. I find other work needing to be done now. Through the fall and winter I have been drawing on the Cynosure office, and Bro. Wallace, of Senecaville, O., for tracts and papers, English and German. These have been pretty widely scattered and read, and have done good. Have for the most part been well received. . . . . I have certain knowledge of one case. A man of means and influence, who had sent in his application and fee, and was accepted by the lodge, but before the time of admission, some of the tracts came into his hand. He sent the lodge word that he would make them a present of the fee, but would not be admitted. So our labor has not been in vain."

J. E. Irish, Delevan, Wis., writes:

"My health is poor and my age seventy-three, but I have sent you over thirty subscribers since you commenced your paper. I took the American Baptist first to last. I have not found any paper that filled its place, as the Cynosure."

Through God's blessing, upon the efforts of such friends, the paper has been sustained thus far. and this is in a good degree, our dependence for the future.

Job. W. Gatchell, Ulrichsville, O., writes:

"I have been a reader of your paper for five years, and I assure you that I have never seen its equal for independence and truth."

He has found and put us in communication with a young man who will sell our books and act as Cynosure agent. Thanks for this. We want good agents everywhere.

The Armed Legions of the Lodge.

The following are letters and extracts from letters written at the request of Rev. Moses Thacher of the North Wrentham church.

To the Church in the North Parish in Wrentham, Boston, June 1. 1830.

Brethren:—By request of your pastor, the Rev. Moses Thacher, I relate a statement I made to him in February last, as near as I now remember, viz., that a few evenings previous I heard a gentleman say in a public room, in presence of about fifty persons, that he was once invited by a brother Mason. himself being one, to go with him into the Knight Templar's armory, kept in an upper chamber of the old State House in Boston; that he accepted the invitation and went, and on entering the room was struck with surprise at the number of arms he saw hanging in bunches and standing around the room, all clean and bright, and consisting of spontoons, swords and dirks, commonly called side arms, and sufficient as he supposed, to arm a thousand men; that he also saw standing around the room a number of boxes large enough to contain muskets, but saw not the inside of them, yet thought it not improbable that there were muskets in them. Some one present enquired of him what he supposed to be the object of such an armory? He replied that he did not know, but presumed that the arms were intended for defence in case of opposition (or assault) against the order.

Soon after I made the foregoing statement to Mr. Thacher, I stated it twice over to four or five gentlemen, said to belong to your church, of whom was Mr. Anson Mann and Mr. Caleb Sayles, and I informed them I had made the same statement to Mr. Thacher. The same evening I heard Mr. Sayles say that he supposed there were about one thousand Knight Templars in Massachusetts and Rode Island belonging to the Grand Encampment, whose arms were deposited in the old State House. That equipments were. or ought to be, provided for all of them, in order to their being in full dress; but it was not usual for them all to turn out at once, therefore equipments were not probably provided for all. He said he was not certain that all their arms were deposited in the old State House, as he had heard that there was a small armory in some part of Rhode Island, and another in the interior of this State. He said he was a Knight Templar, and that the above-mentioned arms were used by the order.

I am, brethren, your respectful and obedient servant.

George Odiorne.

Boston, June 1, 1830.

Rev. Mr. Thacher:

Dear Sir:—In reply to your inquiries, I will state that at two weekly public meetings of citizens at No. 4 Merchants Hall, in the month of February last, several strangers appeared, and after the meeting was organized, commenced a conversation on the subject of a Masonic armory, when such information was elicited as convinced me fully of its existence, though the arms were not all deposited in the State House, but that most of them were retained by the Knight Templars in their own possession.

Mr. Sayles, a Templar, then present, admitted that the number of Templars in Massachusetts and Rhode Island was about one thousand, and said distinctly that they were or ought to be armed, and being asked what their arms consisted of, he replied, a sword and dagger each. Mr. Sayles was then asked on his word and honor respecting the custom of drinking wine from human skulls, and if they did so. I understood him to say no, not in the lodge, but when the question was put in a more specific form, he gave such an evasive and indefinite answer as left a strengthened impression on my mind that I had been rightly informed relative to that abominable custom in a high degree of Freemasonry. One of the gentlemen qu ted a very violent article in the Groton Herald relative to Morgan and all seceding Masons, and said if this was Christianity, he did not wish to have any concern with it. Mr. Mann replied that Freemasonry had nothing to do with Christianity; that it was a good moral institution, but Christianity was a higher order—this person was very anxious to destroy the impression respecting the existence of an armory, although he stated there were about forty arms there which he had examined, that they were used for ceremoneous purposes, and consisted of spontoons, swords and daggers. It was then remarked that a respectable mechanic then in the room, had, within five months, informed one of the gentlemen he had been occupied nearly a whole night in cleaning a part of them. He thinks about three dozen officers' arms taken from two chests in the Masonic room; there were two other chests of the same construction which were not opened, but from the shape and appearance, no doubt existed in his mind of their being used for the same purpose. The strangers, including Sayles and Mann, left the room at about 10 o'clock. This statement is as correct as I can give from memory, not having made any minutes at the time, but I well recollect the correctness of the several items from the circumstance of the last meeting having been held on the evening previous to the tragical death of Mr. Kennedy on the night of the 26th Feb. last.

Wishing you health and prosperity, I am your friend and most obedient servant, Benjamin W. Lamb.

Mr. Caleb Sayles disclosed himself to be a Knight Templar. He was asked how many Templars there probably were in Massachusetts. He said he could not tell, but should think there might be a thousand, perhaps not so many, perhaps more. Are they all armed? He could not say. Is it the duty of every Knight Templar to be armed? He said yes. Where is their armory? He said there was one in the old State House in Boston, one in Rhode Island, and he had understood that there was one in the interior or western part of Massachusetts. Formerly he thought the arms were all deposited in the old State House, but he did not think they then were. A Mr. Anson Mann, from Wrentham, was also present and took an active part in the business of answering questions propounded; and more than once advised Mr. Sayles not to answer further questions. Both of the within-named gentlemen made high pretensions to candor, and an earnest desire to know and communicate truth in this important business.

I was called upon by a relation, a Masonic Knight Templar, whose business was to know if I could clean and put in order a quantity of swords, etc.; he said I must have them done by such a time, as there was to be a great or special meeting on that evening. The work was much and the time short, therefore I was obliged to work late at night to accomplish it, which I did. I was directed to call on Mr. Oliver, keeper of the lodge rooms, at a certain time, who delivered me two chests or trunks containing three dozen swords and, I believe, two banner staffs. These, Mr. Oliver said, were all there were to clean then. By this I thought there were more which were in order, as my employer, anxious to know how my work progressed, called on me the next morning and observed it was a pity I was not a Mason, for they had lost their armorer. "If you were a Mason you might have the care of all our arms," etc. This led me to think they used a great many. My employer observed he kept his sword at home, not liking to have it knocked about. As to how many careful ones there are in the fraternity I know not.

LESSON XX.—MAY 17, 1874.—THE LORD'S MINISTERS.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—NUM. iii. 5-13.

Commit 5-10 ; Primary Verses, 9, 10.

5 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him.

7 And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the service of the tabernacle.

8 And they shall keep all the instruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle.

9 And though shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel.

10 And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the firstborn that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel: therefore the Levites shall be mine.

13 Because all the firstborn are mine; for on the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I hallowed unto me all the firstborn in Israel, both man and beast: mine they shall be: I am the Lord.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

This book opens with a beautiful picture. The Tabernacle has been erected, God has taken his place, and now he counts up his people and places them around himself, under his protection and love. If you draw a figure two inches by four, you will have the shape of the court of the tabernacle. Then mark the places occupied by Moses and Aaron (ch. iii. 38), by Kohath (ch. iii. 29), by Gershon (ch. iii. 23), and by Merari (ch. iii. 35), and you will have the inner guard. Then outside of these, arrange the camp of Judah, (ch. ii. 2-9), of Reuben (c. ii. 10-16), of Ephraim (ch. ii 18-24), and of Dan (ch. ii. 25-31). Be sure to put each tribe in their proper order. This gives the outer guard, the warriors of Israel.

What is the first topic? Who is commander and chief? What must each soldier declare? (ch. ii. 18.) How did he know his place? (ch. ii. 2.) What ought a Christian soldier to know? (1 John ii. 2; Gal. iii. 26; Rom. viii. 14, 16, 31) Then he will find his place. Do you think any one can fight a battle for Christ and not be a Christian? What enemies do Christians have? What do you have? Have you any battles? Do not fight against God.

What is the second topic? Why was the tribe of Levi omitted in this number? (ch. i. 47; ii. 33.) For whom were they substitutes? (verses 40-43.) How was the tribe divided? (verse 17.) Tell the place each was to occupy? Who was in front of the Tabernacle? What was the service Kohath? (verse 31, and ch. iv. 1-20.) What was Gershon's? (vrs., 25, 26, and ch. iv. 21-28.) What was Merari's (vrs., 36, 37, and ch. iv. 2. 9-33.) Did each have his own work? Which was the most honorable? (ask your teacher.) Who picked up pins for God? Was that small work? What is our principle topic? What is your work?

What is the third topic? Who was the high priest? (Aaron,) the others were his family. Who is our high priest? (Heb. ix. 11.) Where is his place? Heb. ix. 24.) Who are his family? (Matt. xii. 49, 50; Heb. ii. 11; Eph. iii. 14. 15.) As such what is our privilege? (Heb. x. 19-25.) Who were the Levites to minister unto? (verse 6.) All our services should be to Christ.

Lessons. Christians are soldiers, to fight the enemy. They are workers, to do the will of God and carry on his work. They are worshipers, to come into his presence with joy.—The National Sunday School Teacher.

What the Superintendent Can Do.

A Sunday-school is almost always very nearly what the superintendent will have it to be. The Independent says:

If he wants punctuality and seeks to secure it, he is likely to have it. If he feels that a teacher's meeting is essential to the life of his school, he will probably be not long without one. If the teachers are not yet up to the standard he counts correct, in earnestness, fidelity, or method of work, he can bring them up to it, one by one. If he feels that the pastor or the church generally ought to take more interest in the Sunday-school, he should never rest until they are duly interested. If more scholars should be gathered in, his determination settles the question of their coming. Whatever is the lack in his Sunday-school, the superintendent should feel it his duty and his privilege, by the Divine blessing, to have supplied speedily.

Of course all this implies that he is intensely in earnest—as every superintendent must be to succeed.

Have You done Anything for Christ.

A lady was teaching a class of ten bright boys in the Sabbath-school. They were attentive and thoughtful, but none were Christians. The lesson was, "Showing our love for Christ." At its close the teacher asked her scholars, one by one, if they had done one single thing for Christ during the week. As she questioned each, some answered, sadly, "No," and others shook their heads in silence.

"Not one deed for Christ!" said the teacher, and she looked sadly at the solemn, earnest faces.

A thoughtful boy of thirteen, at her side, sat a while in silence. Perhaps he was thinking, "I wonder whether any one really loves Christ, if any one tries to please him?" Suddenly he turned his expressive eyes upon the teacher, and said respectfully but earnestly, "Miss M——, have you done anything for Christ?" The question was unexpected. Emotion crimsoned her cheek, and brought tears to her eyes. At length she controlled herself, and said in broken accents—

"I hope so, John, but I know I have not done what I ought, or might have done for him."

The question followed the teacher home. In her closet, upon her bed, she saw that enquiring gaze, and heard that earnest question, "Have you done anything for Jesus?" It seemed as if Christ himself had asked her, "What have you done for me?"

Each day a voice repeated the question, and each Sabbath, as she came before her class, an echo came, "What have you done this week for Christ?"

Home and Health Hints.

LEMONS—in most cases of fever an attack might have been prevented and the patient well in a few days without a particle of medicine, by rest, partial fasting, and free use of lemons and lemonade.

—Sage tea, sweetened with honey, and a small piece of alum in it, is the best gargle for sore throat.

—Chloroform will remove grease spots or stains from the finest silks, and not injure them.

OAT-MEAL.—A most excellent and nutritious pudding may be made by adding to one quart of boiling water, one teaspoonful salt, and one-half pint oatmeal. Should boil fifteen minutes if the meal is fine, or twenty if it be coarse. Serve with sweetened cream.

PUDDING WITHOUT MILK OR EGGS.—Soak dried bread in as little water as possible, and squeeze out all the water. Add sufficient sugar to sweeten, and, for a small pudding, half a teacupful of chopped suet or butter, and dried fruit which has been soaked over night, or canned or fresh fruit. Mix well together, adding a little alspice. The pudding is put into a greased pail, a cloth placed over and the cover put on. The pail is set in a kettle containing sufficient water to come half way up the bail; boil for two hours or more for a large pudding. To be eaten with sauce.

In cleaning paint, glass, silver or gold, it is invaluable, as well as for keeping the hands soft and white after cleaning all these other things.

CREAM CUSTARD.—Two quarts of new milk, four tablespoonsful of flour, yolks of seven eggs, one and one-half cups sugar; beat the eggs, sugar and flour together, and stir in the milk; let it thicken, but do not boil; beat the whites to a froth, and pour the hot custard over; flavor with vanilla, rose water or dust pulverized cinnamon.

TO IMPROVE FURNITURE.—The humidity of the atmosphere and the action of the gas cause a bluish white coating to collect on all furniture, and show conspicuously on bright, polished surfaces, such as mirrors, pianos, cabinet ware and polished metal. To remove it, take a soft sponge, wet with clean cold water, and wash over the article. Then take a soft chamois skin and wipe it clean. Dry the skin as well as you can by wringing it in the hands and wipe the water off the furniture, being careful to wipe only one way. Never use a dry chamois on varnish work. If the varnish is defaced and shows white marks, take linseed oil and turpentine in equal parts; shake them well in a phial and apply a very small quantity on a soft rag until the color is restored; then with a clean soft rag wipe the mixture off. In deeply carved work, the dust cannot be removed with a sponge. Use a stiff-haired paint brush instead of a sponge.

To varnish old furniture, it should be rubbed with pulverized pumice-stone and water to take off the old surface, and then varnished with varnish reduced by adding turpentine, to the consistency of cream. Apply with a stiff-haired brush. If it does not look well, repeat the rubbing with pumice-stone, and when dry, varnish it again.—Journal of Chemistry.

Farm and Garden.

Common Sense in Plowing.

Teams drawing loads on the road get a breathing-spell on the descending ground, while in plowing the draught is the same from morning till night. There is a certain number of pounds that a team can draw day after day and not worry them, but if more be added, even as little as fifteen or twenty pounds, they walk unsteadily, fret, and soon tire. No amount of feeding will keep them in condition. I have seen many plows in use on which it would have been an easy matter to decrease the draught twenty-five pounds, and if men were drawing them instead of horses it would have been done. It must be plain to the farmer that every pound he can take off from the draught of his plow is so much gained for his horses.

It may be done in this way:—For any soil except sand or gravel use a steel plow. Their cost is but little more, and the draught enough less to pay the difference in plowing twenty acres. In plowing sod, the coulter does a great deal of the work, and should be kept sharp by forging at the blacksmith's and grinding every day if necessary. Of course it will wear out sooner, but new coulters are cheaper than new teams. Set the coulter in line with the plow, the edge square in front, with an angle of forty-five degrees from the point to which it is attached to the beam.

When the share gets worn short it is poor economy to use it any longer, but replace it with a new one. Let the traces be as short as will allow the horses to walk without hitting their heels against the whiffletrees, and have just pressure enough of the wheel on the ground to make the plow run steady. If the handles crowd continually one way, the draught is not right, and if the plow is a good one it can be easily remedied at the clevis. To prevent the horses stepping over the traces in turning, fasten a weight of about three-fourths of a pound on the outside end of each singletree—that is, on the right end when you turn to the left, or vice versa. Every observing farmer knows that horses are susceptible to kindness and equally so to unkindness. I have seen horses that were working steadily made reeking with sweat in a short time by a sharp word or a jerk on the bit. Let your horses do their work as you do yours, as easily as possible, and be as willing to overlook their mistakes as you would the mistakes of human beings.—Detroit Free Press.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, May 7, 1874.

"And he may censure who hath written well."—POPE.

Aware that the Cynosure shares the frailties of humanity, we commonly accept and bind the smitings of the righteous upon our hearts in silence. But we insert, in this number, a letter from a respectable Scotch Presbyterian editor of Philadelphia, to bring out the fact that the destruction of the lodges of this country, and even the salvation of our Scotch Presbyterian churches from the serpent inroads, requires some sterner weapons than swords incased in velvet. The largest and costliest temple of the American Dagon stands so as to cast its loathed shadow over the churches of Philadelphia; and our correspondent, "W. S. R.," shows what progress the best and soundest of those churches are making against its dark and dreadful worships.

We say to the beloved brethren who criticise us, in the words of a Greek proverb, "It is the easiest thing to find fault, but how to get bad things better is the part of a wise counsellor," and another and wiser proverb still, "He that rebuketh a man, afterward shall find more favor than he that flattereth with his lips." At first, the doctrine that Masonic ceremonies were devil-worship brought us a multitude of reproofs. Now the statement is become so common that it is received as settled ordinary truth, that worship not paid to Christ is paid to Satan.

REFORM POLITICS.

We have published in the Cynosure whatever has been sent us, or nearly so, on this subject.

Our minds are settling down after much reflection and some prayer, upon the conviction that our wisdom and duty at Syracuse will be, to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States and vote steadily for them until election, or until the lodge conspiracy is broken, its oaths forbidden, and its charters revoked. The reasons which have convinced us are:

1. Our next National election comes in 1876, and we need the intervening two years to get out electoral tickets, train ourselves in the details of politics, and bring our forces into the field.

2. The argument for the late nominations is one of policy, but ours is and must be for a while a party of principle.

3. If we wait another year, two great parties based on self-interest will have the field and our own friends will be committed to one or the other, and the eargate of the nation will be closed to us.

4. If we can get out an electoral ticket in but half or two-thirds of the States, supported by men who will not flinch, but who will be found there every year, and especially every four years, the self-interest parties will soon be so nearly equally divided that one or both will keep bidding for our votes, as they did for abolition votes, and thus spread our protest against the lodge.

5. Some say, Let us make our stand in local, town, county and state elections till we are strong enough to be respectable, then nominate for President. But we cannot vote with Freemasonry in general, and against it in local elections, without stultifying ourselves and losing our moral power.

6. When the Presidential election waxes hot, our men will be terribly pressed to go with one or the other of the selfish parties, and consistency alone can save us.

7. O'Connell wrung Irish emancipation from Parliament by a small squad of voters, when Tories and Whigs were nearly aqually divided. Calhoun controlled Congress and put off emancipation for years, by a small body of members who voted steadily for slavery, irrespective of Whig or Democrat. Fas est ab hoste doceri. The lodge which is but one-eightieth of the whole population, controls the religion and politics of the United States, so far as its interests are concerned, by its secret, steady support of Masons. We must succeed by open, fair means as they do by secret and foul means. We must concentrate and stand for the right as they do for the wrong; for light, as they for darkness.

8. We lose nothing, but gain much by an early nomination. If we take our ground now, while there are no parties in fact, others will respect us. If we wait till other parties form, they will hate us for drawing votes from them.

9. The Republican and Democratic parties, if not dead, are moribund now, and our small craft will do best while the political sea is calm.

Let us therefore go up to Syracuse, adopt a platform which every Christian patriot will love, and nominate men to represent it.

DESCENDANTS OF BAALAM, SON OF BEOR.

Numbers, xxii.

These are ministers of Christ who wish for the "friendship of the world" which is "enmity with God."

Rev. David Swing, who is now on trial for heresy and error before the Chicago Presbytery, has, we fear, started on the road with the messengers of Balak, King of Moab. The Advance says of him, "A special and noble aim of Prof. Swing is to expose antinomian tendencies in religion, and to assert" (what every heretic begins with) "the necessity of pure character;" and "Presbyterian though he is, he actually puts Calvinism among other isms, and has no faith in the inspiration of the Westminster Confession."

And pray who has?—And when did "the necessity of a pure character" become a specialty, of which Rev. Mr. Swing has taken out a patent? We had supposed, since H. W. Beecher, that the game of gaining the world's favor by omitting from religious teaching all truths which the "carnal mind" hates, and ridiculing the gospel under the name of "Calvinism" to hearers who never read one page of Calvin's writings, was about played out.

Rev. David Swing is a writer of some brilliancy and vigor, but, lacking the starry, dazzling eloquenee of Beecher, his popularity is largely derived from the boldness of his attacks on established religious ideas and on the men supposed to represent them.

We regard the slurs and flings at the "Westminster Confession," so common with men of this class, as simply contemptible. The "Westminster Divines," called by Cromwell's Parliament, and prohibited by Charles I., met with halters about their necks, and, with some imperfections, issued a statement of religious truth, the clearest and best outside the Bible. This is that "Catechism" which Beecher suggested to his theological students in New Haven, as a fit substitute for hanging! Yet, this "Westminster Confession" is not more essentially Calvinistic than the English Thirty-nine articles," or even "Wesley's Articles of Religion." This "Westminster Confession" it is, which declares that the Bible, not itself, is the sole rule of faith; thus it says:—"'The Supreme Judge by whom all controversies of religion are to be determined . . . can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture." The man who can speak sneeringly of that "Confession" is either shallow or depraved. Its truths are, to-day, the staple of the piety, not only of the English State church and Wesleyan Methodism, but of the Protestant world.

The sin of Baalam was that he wanted the gold of Balak, and would have caused Israel to get it, if God would have let him. He therefore lauded Israel but debauched the Israelites. His decendants evermore come as near heresy as they dare. They laud religion and debauch it. They "help the ungodly and love them that hate the Lord." Prof. Patton, the prosecutor of Swing, may be unamiable and pugilistic, but the justice and necessity of hanging does not depend on the loveliness of the executioner.

A RESPECTED FRIEND of Syracuse. N. Y., corrects the statement of last week that the corner-stone of the Capitol at Albany was laid by Go. Hoffman and not by the Masons. The governor first laid the stone in his official capacity and then the Grand Master laid it with the usual Masonic ceremony. The Cynosure spoke from recollection of statements made by the N. Y. press at the time.

TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE.

When the father of lies sought the ruin of the race by corrupting our first parents, he feigned a friendship too ardent and intermeddling to be real. He assumed to be more concerned for their welfare than their Maker. Next he assumed to be more truthful than God, that he might take away all restraint from their minds which God had addressed to their fears. "How delicious this fruit! What pleasure you might derive from it; and not pleasure only, but wisdom; yes, life and immortality! Die for eating this? No; it's the tree of life. Ye shall not surely die. God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." This was too good to be true. It was vaunting a love beyond the infinite, and adapted to awaken desire in a weak or limited mind too strong for all divine restraints. By this the tempted might have known that the friendship was feigned, the promised good a lure. But excited curiosity grew into cupidity, and this into an easy credulity that determined the dread experiment of eating, and plunged the race in woe.

Ever since then deceivers have abounded, all copying the deceit and subtlety of the first tempter. False promises are made to appear far more valuable and enticing than those of sober truth. And what is most astonishing is that men, though often deceived and swindled, seem to be more slow to learn that a promise that is too good to be true, is a snare and a swindle, than they are to learn any other truth. Indeed they seem to love to be humbugged. They seize an enticing lie that promises an impossible good, and prefer it to sober truth that offers rewards only in just proportion to effort and merit, yet practicable and safe both for this life and that which is to come.

Illustrations of this are to be met with continually in all the affairs of men. Truth declares that man must eat his bread in the sweat of his brow; that health and competence, riches and honor are to be secured only by patient continuance in a course of temperance, economy, integrity and toil. But how ready are the multitude to venture any scheme which promises health without restraining their appetites, wealth without labor, and honor without worth or integrity. The vain hope of buying a fortune with a few dollars makes brisk sale for lottery tickets. But when one offers you a thousand dollars for ten, or promises you a fortune by the throw of a dice, or the shuffle of a card, it is too good to be true. A medicine that is warranted to cure all diseases is pretty sure to cure none. This is too good to be true. When one offers you new lamps for old, on an even exchange, it is pretty certain the old lamps are gold and the new are brass. It can not be that the new are just as good as the old were when new. That is too good to be true. There must be some hidden virtue or defect in one or the other. When a dealer in "queer," i. e., counterfeit bills, assures you that it will pass at the bank and defy detection; that you can use it as safely as you can genuine bills, and then offers to furnish you with any amount at ten cents for a dollar, you may be sure he lies. It is too good to be true. Yet, by just such preposterous lies, men are induced to go with all confidence into the business of passing counterfeit money.

Thus the religion that demands no self-denial, that promises the full enjoyment of the pleasures of the world and the peace of God; that ignores law and justice, and is all mercy, cares nothing for doctrine in its exclusive zeal for practice, and as little for practice in the exuberance of its all-embracing and undiscriminating charity, is too good to be true. And yet how fondly men accept the spurious charity that has no reproof for their loved sins; and how bitterly they hate the true which firmly pursues the only method that can extricate them from perdition, by saving them from the error of the wicked and from all fellowship with the lies of Satan and the works of the flesh.

This principle has another illustration in the pretenses and promises of the secret orders of the day. They are too good to be true. And to us it seems really strange that all thinking men do not, by this criterion, detect and discard them just as they do a medicine that claims to be a universal panacea. They promise too much, and for this reason should unhesitatingly be classed among the shams and swindles that curse the earth, and must be swept away before the blessings of the reign of truth can be secured. What does Masonry profess and promise? To unite in brotherly fellowship "men of the most opposite tenets, the most distant countries and the most contradictory opinions; so that in every nation a Mason may find a friend, and in every climate a home." Too good to be true. But it stops not here. It professes to enable men to govern their passions, to overcome depravity, which only the spirit and truth and grace of God can do; by the use of the mallet to divest the mind of its sins and make it a meet temple for the in-dwelling of God; and, in fine, to raise the Mason by the practice of Masonic virtue to the Grand Lodge above. All that the eternal God by his incarnation, his propitiation, his gospel, his church and his Spirit proposes to do, Masonry, by its mysteries and its fetishes, proposes to do alone. Too good to be true. It can be none other than a tremendous cheat and swindle.

So with its numerous progeny. All have the same mark of falsehood in their foreheads. A correspondent of our county paper takes this method of slyly diffusing the grange leaven. After an high eulogy of two of our wealthy farmers, he adds, "both are active, earnest, intelligent grangers, bound to carry forward to a success the principles upon which the order is founded, viz., to educate the agricultural class up to the standard to which their position deserves, and bring producer and consumer in close relations of interest without the intervention of needless agents and middle men."

So it seems the grange is going to assume the functions of the family, the school, the church, the government, the agricultural paper and the agricultural college, and all open farmers' clubs and associations together, with all commercial agencies and operations that affect the relations of producers and consumers. They not only propose to do all this work of human society, but to do it better than it has ever yet been done by all these natural and established agencies and arrangements. It strikes us this is palpably assuming and promising too much. It is too good to be true.

How is this work of education and changing of business relations to be affected by isolating a portion of farmers from the rest, separating them by jealousy-provoking walls of secrecy, leading them about blindfolded and stumbling over blocks and chairs, and arraying them in finery, and rehearsing to them a long heathenish ritual that may have some flowers of rhetoric but nothing of science or Christianity in it? And what is it going to profit the farmers to displace tried and competent commission men and merchants and put inexperienced farmers into the same positions? Will not these be agents and middle men? Just as likely to seek their own fortunes and to be "NEEDLESS" as those whom they displace? We would think so from the nature of the case. And the next week we saw a statement in the same paper which confirms this impression. It was this:

"The grange store started last fall at Winona, Wis., has failed. Liabilities $13,000, with no assets; and a similar one at Owatonna closed up after a loss of nearly $20,000."

We are lead to ask how much better are the agents and middle men which the grange provides than the old ones which they seek to expel? The fox, in the fable, declined the offer of the swallow to chase away the flies that sucked his blood, because, said he, if these gorged ones are chased away they will be succeeded by a more hungry swarm.

On this ground, if no other, the farmers, if they are wise, will decline the very generous and benevolent services of the grange. Already the National Grange alone is taxing the farmers to the tune of $200,000 a year. The State granges cost them vastly more, and the county and subordinate granges more yet. This order is sucking out the earnings of the farmers by millions. One would think the legitimate governments cost us enough without having to support a dozen invisible empires, which, to the rank and file, are mere leeches and swindles. They promise, to be sure, most ample recompense for all they cost; but they promise too much; they promise impossibilities. Their promises are too good to be true. And thereby the real object of the projectors is proved to be the taxing of the many for the profit of the few.

Notes.

—From Saturday, the 25th ult., on through the next week, Odd-fellows all over the country were celebrating their fifty-fifth anniversary. A very prominent feature of all the addresses on that occasion we have seen is an attempted vindication of the order from the attacks of "bigoted and fanatical enemies." Were the orators pummeling a straw man? going through a lodge drill exercise? or have they really found that the people are questioning the right of secret orders to exist and are forced into self-defense.

—The committee which has general charge of the corner-stone laying in this city referred the programme of arrangements to a sub-committee composed of John McArthur, post-master and great man in the Grand Army of the Republic; DeWitt C. Cregier, Masonic Past Grand Master of Illinois; T. T. Gurney (Deacon), Grand Orator of do.; and J. Ward Ellis, Past Grand Master of Illinois Odd-fellows. This is a committee for efficient work. Their report is awaited. Mr. Gurney reports many letters from lodges outside the State, and expects from twenty to fifty thousand Masons in the parade for the honor of America and Chicago.

—The venerable Moses Thacher, a veteran Anti-mason of the Morgan times, has been spending a few days in Chicago enjoying the hospitality of Mr. Ezra A Cook, our publisher. In 1831 Mr. Thacher conducted the Boston Telegraph, a religious and Anti-masonic journal, and was at the same time pastor of the North Wrentham Congregational church near that city. Several articles from his pen have lately appeared in the department "Forty Years Ago," taken from the columns of the Telegraph. Though of very advanced age, Mr. Thacher is still quite vigorous, and is greatly interested in the progress of the present reform. He attended the last meeting of the Executive Committee.

—Somebody gives a fruitful hint to the city editors and reporters in a note to the Chicago Tribune:

"SIR:—We have had no first-class cases of breach of trust for some weeks. The time must be coming for another batch. In anticipation I wish to make a suggestion I have noticed that many defaulters have been incidentally reported as belonging to this or that church. What I wish to suggest is that it be also reported of them, for the benefit of a discerning and philosophic public, whether they belong to either of the great secret societies—the Masonic and Odd-fellow? Yours, DAVIS."

By all means let these facts be published. Political mountebanks and swindlers of all sorts will be elated over a statistical table showing how well the Masons or Odd-fellows or Knights of Pythias can take care of their members and practice the "virtues" of concealment and protection from public justice toward an unfortunate defaulter or good-hearted house-breaker.

The Censures of the Evangelical Repository.

"A chiel's amang ye takin' notes,
And, faith, he'll prent it:"—BURNS.

Editor Cynosure:—I observe that the Evangelical Repository of Philadelphia, for May, while professing much friendship for the Cynosure, and excellent wishes for its increased prosperity, lectures it—its "editorial department," its "correspondents," and also its "prominent lecturers",—for the "bitterness and severity manifested in its pages," and the "harshness of expressions" and such like peccadillos of your lecturers. Even "the Association" is included in the pious censures of the editor, who concludes his kind advice thus:

"If the Association and these lecturers are wise, they will make a note of what we here in all kindness say, and they will profit by it." (I have condensed his wise council for brevity's sake and boiled it down to about one-third.)

The chief stress, Messrs Eds., of the Editor of the Repository's kind censures bear, it will be perceived, on the "prominent lecturers" of the Association; although every "department" of the Cynosure, as the organ of the Association, comes in for an ample share of censure,—although the Repository editor is "in full sympathy with the aims and ends of that Association." It is well to be told so, else it might be a little difficult for simple readers to believe it.

Now, let me say, Messrs Eds., that I trust that you, will profit by this avalanche of kind counsel, so far, and only so far, as your judgment and conscience dictate to you to be just. I "like plain speaking," too, as well as the Repository editor, and therefore I will volunteer, with your leave, some defense and vindication of your "prominent lecturers", so far as we here of Philidelphia have been favored with listening to them. The writer of this article heard two of the lectures recently delivered by Mr. Charles Blanchard here, and if the other two were "of the same sort" (and he has been assured they came up to or even exceeded the mark by those who heard them,) he has no hesitation in affirming that they were not justly open to the censure of the Repository for want of moderation; while their ability, spirit, and moral courage, and high tone and principle by which they were characterized, were felt and acknowledged by the auditors generally, to my certain knowledge.

There is, Messrs. Eds., too much ground to fear, that these censures and counsels of the Repository proceed from a lack of moral courage and boldness as a reformer in the writer himself. Those who have access to know the equivocal position of the churches here in Philadelphia in relation to secret societies and their adherents, with which the same editor is related—I mean the United Presbyterian churches—and whose "principles" his periodical professes to represent, will certainly incline to think that a little more of the boldness, and even roughness, of the reformer, applied to the purification of the churches of his own connection from Freemasons, Odd-fellows et hoc genus omne, might be pardoned in the Repository editor, if he should thus succeed in purging the churches of his connection from such members.

While I have my pen in hand, Messrs. Eds., it may not be amiss to inform your readers, that since the able and effective course of lectures delivered here last winter by Mr. Charles Blanchard, we have been making an attempt to form an anti-secret association in Philadelphia; but I regret to say, hitherto with no successful result. There does not appear to be material or zeal enough here in the professedly anti-secrecy churches all told—amounting to some twenty, mainly United and Reformed Presbyterians—to form an organization or association here, to prosecute the good cause in this great city! We have been trying it, and failed. It took us three months' drumming up of names to a printed call to a "Conference" of Christians on the subject; the meeting was at length, after interminable delay, held of an evening, and seventeen persons were present! The meeting, after some talking, separated without effecting an organization. That I may give full credit and honor to whom due, I will state that the chairman of the Committee appointed to call this meeting was the reverend editor of the Evangelical Repository, minister of the United Presbyterian church, and the Secretary was Reverend Thomas P. Stevenson of the Reformed Presbyterian church. Yet, notwithstanding that the united membership here in Philadelphia of these two churches consist of some fourteen or fifteen congregations, with perhaps 3,000 or 3,500 members, we had a meeting, after three month's trial of preparation, which numbered in all seventeen persons, in order to form a local association in Philadelphia in aid of the anti-secret cause—and failed to effect the object! And we have gone to sleep ever since!

This is a humiliating tale to tell, Messrs. Eds., of 3,000 Christians, and some fifteen or more churches which profess (but do not) to be anti-secret churches. It is the truth though! And I think your readers will conclude that those editors had better perhaps handle the broom themselves a little more lustily, and even a little roughly, as becomes true and zealous reformers, in order to reform their own churches and people—and then they will see more clearly to pull out the mote of the eyes of the Cynosure—its editors, correspondents, and prominent lecturers. The Home Circle.

On the Last Day.

[Said to have been written during a storm at sea, by Richard Kempenfeldt, Esq., Rear-Admiral of the Blue.]

Hark! 'tis the trump of God
Sounds thro' the realms abroad,
'Time is no more;'
Horrors invest the skies,
Graves burst, and myriads rise;
Nature, in agonies,
Yields up her store.

Chang'd in a moment's space,
Lo! the affrighted race
Shriek and despair;
Now they attempt to fly,
Curse immortality,
And eye their misery
Dreadfully near.

Quick reels the bursting earth,
Rock'd by a storm of wrath,
Hurl'd from her sphere;
Heart-rending thunders roll,
Demons tormented howl,
Great God! support my soul,
Yielding to fear.

O, my Redeemer, come,
And thro' the frightful gloom
Brighten thy way;
How would our souls arise,
Soar thro' the flaming skies,
Join the solemnities
Of the great day.

See, see, the incarnate God,
Swiftly emits abroad
Glories benign;
Lo! lo! he comes, he's here!
Angels and saints appear,
Fled is my ev'ry fear,
Jesus is mine!

High on a flaming throne
Rides the eternal Son,
Sovereign august!
Worlds from his presence fly,
Shrink at his majesty,
Stars dashed along the sky
Awfully burst.

Thousands of thousands wait
Round the judicial seat,
Glorified there;
Prostrate the Elders fall,
Wing'd is my raptur'd soul,
Nigh to the Judge of All,
Lo! I draw near.

O, my approving God,
Wash'd in thy precious blood,
Bold I advance;
Fearless we wing along,
Join the triumphant throng,
Shout in ecstatic song
Through the expanse.

[From our Florida Correspondent].

St. Augustine, America's Oldest City.

ST. AUGUSTINE, ORIENTAL HOTEL, March 27, 1874.

Here I am, overlooking the bay. Our room, just what I like, an eastern room, has three windows, and is in the third story. So it is above and away from the noise, and the air is so soft and clear, and bracing. There is nothing, in my estimation, like a brisk breeze from the salt water. If you are too tired for sleep, come here, and without coaxing you will find plenty of time passed in that way.

This is an old, quaint town, at one time walled. Here are the city gates entire, and the sea-walls will stand centuries yet. The old fort is at once a marvel for strength and security, if necessary. I went into the dungeons and over its barbette. Many stories are told of its cells. There are probably some that will not be discovered. One dungeon was found only a few years since, from the roof falling in. There were twenty of us in our party. The guide, an old Scotch sergeant, took away all my apprehensions at the recklessly stereotyped manner of instructing us. He told us with a great deal of awe, of the two cages found in one cell; also of the bones found identified as human. He has been in charge of the old fort seven years, and says he is quite tired of it. He lighted his torch, and when we were well in one of the cells, suddenly disappeared. We were to follow. Of course stooping was the first thing; the walls being thick and low, we had to carry our heads well down for fear of jamming them. There are eighty feet on one side not accounted for, and in one of the cells where prisoners had been confined, they had tried to make an opening in two places. Hopeless task! There seemed a certain amount of stone and then a space filled in with sand; so as they broke through the inner wall, down came a blockade of sand.

At night I went out and visited the Episcopal burying ground. The place is quite unkept. The lighthouses, both old and new, are in sight, and the little fishing smacks are busy night as well as day. Just now the moon is full, so the place has quite a fairy-like appearance.

Friday evening I went into the old cathedral. Three gross-looking priests, with woman's gowns on, were praying at every station. There were sixteen stations. They would, in a few words, give the number, tell what it represented, adding a few words of exhortation. Then a few moments of silent prayer, then dropping on their knees, and at railroad speed, would go half way through the Lord's prayer, which the congregation would finish in the same unintelligible manner.

This morning we had a most delightful sail on the bay. We went to the Atlantic surf, but did not venture out, as our boat depended on a brisk wind in order to get back for dinner. We went ashore and gathered shells, etc., something that all, I suppose, of the 30,000 people who have visited Florida on this route, have done before me.

St. Augustine is such a quaint city. There are very few houses, except old ones, built of the Coiquino rock, which is quarried like the granite, and becomes quite hard by exposure. The streets are, some of them, five and one-half feet wide; others wider; especially the main route to the station. The inhabitants are well sprinkled from the New England States, and what struck me as quite remarkable, although the Presbyterian church is made up of them, and all come for their health, I heard only one cough during the whole service. Many say, "I have been in almost every place South, also in France, but St. Augustine is the place for me." You get into old houses here, but nothing nasty offends you. The oyster shell roads and walks, if fresh, give an odor slightly disagreeable.

Florida needs energetic men. Of course the land will not yield as sure and abundant harvests as Illinois will. The young cypress trees are cut and sent to New York for railroad ties. They do not decay so fast as a harder wood. The Northerners are leaving large quantities of currency here, and the people design starting manufactories of various kinds. So far as I can learn, the present manufactories make palmetto hats. That ugly shrub which becomes a tree in some parts so peculiar to Georgia, and which utterly prevents any other growth, can be utilized. It makes wrapping paper, strong, light and white. It blots, if steel pens and ink are used. The magnolia, date, olive, orange, cypress, pine, and the beautiful live oak or water oak, are found here. So you see there are great inducements for thrifty Yankees and Westerners to come here if they have suspicious coughs, as hot weather lasts generally eight or nine months, and those who desire permanent improvement, should come with the intention of staying, and go into business.

Short Lecture on Church Manners.

Be on time. When an hour is fixed and repeatedly advertised as the time for the commencement of religious worship, no one has a right to disturb the congregation, or interrupt a preacher by being tardy. Men should be as prompt in filling their places in church, as they are meeting their notes in bank. No peril of protest should be invited in either case or place. Punctuality is a grace that should be coveted and cultured. There is an invention by which a buggy-wheel marks its revolutions, and the number of miles it runs. Will not some genius invent an apparatus that can be so arranged as that when the tardy ones enter their pew, a bell will ring, or an index turn, or a little bird hop out of the clock, and "Coo-coo, coo-coo; behind time, behind time?"

Never look around to see who is coming in when the door opens. It is quite as ill-mannered to look around to see who the tardy ones are, as it is to be tardy. It also disturbs your devotions, if you have any; diverts your attention from the sermon, or whatever exercise is under way, and is discourteous to the leader of the services.

Never talk or whisper in church, especially after the exercises are opened. To do this, indicates one of three thing—lightness of spirit, thoughtlessness as to your own good name, and the character of the place and occasion, or intentional disrespect to the subject of religion and religious people. Either and all are alike inexcusable and reprehensible.

Never pull out your watch to see what time it is when the text is announced, as much as to say, "I'll time that sermon, if I don't feed on it," and then exhibit a chronic nervousness and itching restlessness by snapping open your hunting-case a half dozen times during its delivery, to the infinite annoyance and supreme disgust of all who are so unfortunate as to be your neighbor in the church. And then, when the benediction is scarcely pronounced, do not show your lack of skill as a time-keeper, by remarking to brother Jones, with watch in hand, "That sermon was just forty-one minutes nineteen seconds and a half long. A lee-tle too long; ought to have left off the last minute nineteen seconds and a half." "But what was the text, brother?" inquires Deacon Jones, whose soul had been feeding on the sermon as manna from heaven. "Wall, really, you see, I wasn't watching that; I was keeping time, you know," blandly replies Bro. Hunting-case. Just so.

Never leave church until the services are all closed. Never manifest your disapprobation of utterances of the pulpit by frowns or groans, or grunts, much less by rushing from the house in a tempest rage, as if the whole sermon was gotten up for, and directed especially to you. Ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the preacher never knew of such a unit as you in the universe. Remain in your seat until you are orderly dismissed, and the congregation will remain in blissful ignorance of your character. Every man who enters a place of worship, loses his individuality and becomes a part of the individual whole. Voluntarily placing himself in that relation, he has no right to disturb the whole body of worshipers by indecorously withdrawing, until all are dismissed. Conform to the usages of the church in which you worship. If the order is to kneel in prayer, kneel; if to stand, stand; if to bow the head on the seat in front, bow your head before God. To ignore the usages of a church, is as unmannerly and indecorous as to ignore the usages of a private house, the hospitality of which you are enjoying. The writer once attended the services of a Jewish synagogue, where the men all had their hats on. But he uncovered his head, according to the custom of Christian people. Presently he was invited by an officer of the synagogue to put on his hat, which he did, although the said hat felt heavier then and there than ever before or since. From thence he went to a Catholic cathedral. With a fresh remembrance of his experience in the snynagogue, he failed to uncover his head in the cathedral. Soon an Irish janitor stepped up to his side and significantly remarked, "All gentlemen take off their hats in this place." So did this writer. The lesson thus taught has never been forgotten. We repeat, always conform to the usages of the church where you voluntarily make one of the congregation.

"We will now sing the doxology and pronounce the benediction," says the preacher. Forthwith there is a general upheaval and outstretching of arms, much to the distress of nervous women, and suggestive of dire consequences to bonnets of the latest style. When the last word of the good old long metre doxology is reached, and the familiar sound of "Old Hundred" has died away, it is found that every man has his gloves and overcoat on, with hat in hand, and every woman has her shawl adjusted, ready to run when the "amen" of the benediction is said. Has not this photograph its original somewhere? Wherever the original is found, it might be well for the minister to close up the service by saying, "We will now sing the doxology, put on overcoats and adjust shawls, and be dismissed with benedic tion."

M. Y. O. B. S.

There are a great many secret societies which have strange names, and some whose names are unknown to outsiders, but whose members use certain letters as symbols or initials to express their character.

About these societies we know but very little. The men who join some of them are sworn not to tell their secrets, and we have never felt it duty to take such oaths, for our Master said, "Swear not at all." Besides, if we found out anything good, we should want to tell of it, and if it was bad, we should perhaps think it a duty to confess it, and so we prefer to make no promises and tell no lies.

It is very true that many good men belong to such societies, and people say if the societies, were bad, such good men would not join them; but it is just as true that many bad men also belong to them, and if the societies were very good these bad men might not like them so well. But really neither of these arguments prove much, because none of the men knew anything about the societies before they joined them, and all of them are sworn not to tell what they have found out since. So if the men are ever so good, or ever so bad, they are bound not to expose the good or evil they see, or in any way reveal the secrets of the orders to which they belong.

I never like to open my mouth and shut my eyes at the same time. When my mouth is open I keep my eyes open too;—when my eyes are shut I think it is time to shut my mouth also. Rats and mice sometimes get into places they do not know much about, and sometimes never get out again alive. I prefer not to go into a place till I know what I go in for, and how and when I can get out again. And I do not make promises to people till I know what they are. So I do not join such secret societies, and I do not advise other people to join them.

There is one society, however, to which I should be glad to have all my friends belong. All can join it, old and young, male and female, white and black. It costs nothing for initiation, regalia, or show. There are no oaths taken, no pass word, or grips, and no secrets, constitutions, nor by-laws to be learned. This society has among its members most of the good men and great, of all ages. You can join it at any time, no matter where you are. It makes people more happy, their families more peacible, and their homes more quiet, when all belong to this society. It is more ancient than any other. Its members are, many of them, well known and greatly respected.

They are very peaceable, quiet and thrifty. I heard of one man who made a thousand dollars in one year by belonging to this society;—some have made still more, some less. By belonging to this society men keep out of many troubles and difficulties, and avoid a great deal of vice and sin. No good man ever made any objection to belonging to this society, and the best of men have always been members of the M. Y. O. B. S.

Would you like to join it? You can, "Where?" Anywhere—here. "When?" Now. Shall I tell you the full name of the M. Y. O. B. S.? Softly then—let me whisper it in your ear: it is the "Mind Your Own Business Society". Better join it at once.—The Christian.

The Giant Planet.

Jupiter has a diameter exceeding the earth's rather more than ten times, and a volume exceeding hers 1,230 times. It is not far from the truth to say that Jupiter's dimensions exceed the earth's in very nearly the same degree that those of the sun exceed Jupiter's. But this mass, though gigantic compared with the earth's does not altogether c rrespond to his bulk, for it exceeds the mass of the earth only 300 times. So that, if the disc our astronomers see and measure actually represents the true globe of the planet, his substance must be, on the average, much less dense than that of the earth. In fact, while the earth's density is nearly six times as great as that of water, the density of Jupiter (thus judged) would exceed that of water by barely one third.

This vast globe rotates in less than ten hours, on an axis nearly upright or square to the level in which the planet travels. This rapidity of rotation—so great that the points on the planet's equator travel twenty-seven times as fast as points on the terrestrial equator—results in a considerable flattening of the planet's globe; insomuch that the polar diameter is less than the equatorial about a twelfth part or by fully 7,000 miles. And it may be remarked, in passing, that this circumstance, the fact, namely, that the poles of the planet are drawn in, as it were, 3,500 miles as compared with the equatorial regions, or 1,750 miles as compared with the mid-latitubes in either hemisphere, affords a striking illustration of the enormous amount of energy really presented by the rotation of Jupiter. It may also be added that the velocity with which points on Jupiter's equatorial zone are carried around, exceeds the corresponding velocity in the case of all the planets in the solar system, and is nearly six times greater than the equatorial velocity of the sun itself. It amounts, in fact, to about seven and a half miles per second!—Ex.

Keep clear of any system of religion which confounds the world and true believers, and makes no broad distinction between those who are true children of God in a congregation, and those who are not. Be not carried away by an appearance of great self-denial and humility. It is far easier to fast and wear sack-cloth, and be of a sad countenance, than to receive thoroughly the doctrine of justification by faith without the deeds of the law.

Children's Corner.

"Happy is He."

A lady reports this little incident:

Mrs. White had been spending the afternoon with me. She was not very cheerful company. Much of the time was spent with the story of her troubles, which, after all, seemed to be of her own making. She complained of her husband, of her children, of her pastor and of herself.

"Oh," said Willie, after she was in the street, "aren't you so glad she's gone?"

"Why, Willie," I said.

"She is so doleful, she makes everything so dark. Is she a Christian, Auntie?"

"She professes to be," I answered; but it was time to go to prayer meeting, and I said no more to Willie then about it. At prayer meeting we heard two or three men talk in a sad, dreary way (as you have all heard persons talk in your own prayer meeting; people who make religion seem a gloomy thing.) As we walked home, Willie said, "Auntie, are Mr. French and Mr. Brown Christians?"

"I think so."

"And do they trust in the Lord? Does Mrs. White trust him?"

"But why do you ask?"

"Because, I r ad in my Daily Food this morning, 'The man that trusteth in the Lord, happy is he.' They don't seem happy a bit, and I thought they couldn't be trusting in God."

One Drop of Evil.

"I don't see why you won't let me play with Will Hunt," pouted Walter Kirk. "I know he does not always mind his mother, and smokes cigars, and once in a while swears just a little. But I have been brought up better than that; he won't hurt me. I should think you would trust me. I might do him some good."

"Walter," said his mother, "take this glass of pure, clear water, and put just one drop of ink in it."

"O, mother! it has changed the color of the whole, has it not? It is a shame to do that." Just put a drop of clear water in it, and restore its purity," said Mrs. Kirk.

"Why, mother! you are laughing at me. One drop, nor a dozen, nor fifty, won't do that."

"No, my son; and therefore I cannot allow one drop of Will Hunt's evil nature to mingle with your careful training, many drops of which will make no impression on him."

Six Short Hints for the Young.

1. Never neglect daily private prayer; and when you pray, remember that God is present, and that he hears your prayers (I John v. 15).

2. Never neglect daily private Bible-reading; and when you read, remember that God is speaking to you, and that you are to believe and act upon what he says. All backsliding begins with the neglect of these two rules (John v. 39).

3. Never let a day pass without doing something for Jesus. Every morning reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask yourself, "Wh t am I doing for him?" (Matt. v. 13–16.)

4. If you are ever in doubt as to a thing being right or wrong, go to your room and consider whether you can do it in the name of Jesus, and ask God's blessing upon it (Col. iii. 17). If you cannot do this, it is wrong (Rom. xiv. 23).

5. Never take your Christianity from Christians, or argue, because such and such people do so and so, that, therefore, you may (2 Cor. x. 12). You are to ask yourself, "How would the Lord have me act?" Follow him. (John x. 27)

6. Never trust your feelings, or the opinions of men, if they contradict God's Word. If authorities are pleaded, still "Let God be true, but every man a liar." Rom. iii. 4)

The Direct Road to Jails and Prisons.

First—disobedience to parents; second—using tobacco; third—using rum. In nine cases out of ten parents help children start on one or all of these roads. How often does the child hear his father read the blessed Bible with his mouth full of tobacco! How often does a child see his mother go to communion dressed as John Wesley's women never dressed! The man that uses rum and tobacco may expect his sons to do the same. All mothers that sweep the sidewalk with silk skirts may expect daughters to do the same. "Children, obey your parents," is a large command.—Wardwell.

No Little Graves in China.

A missionary writing from China, says: "The babe of one of our church members died. In the morning I went to see the little corpse. The young mother was weeping over it, and the father was standing by silent and sad.

"I spoke about the burial. He looked at me in surprise, and said that, according to Chinese custom, no care would be taken with the burial of little babes. It was now my turn to look surprised. 'Why, what do they do with them?' He replied, 'They wrap them in a piece of old matting, and throw them in the river, or put them away where they will never be found.'

"And sure enough, and strange enough, it then occurred to me I had never seen any little graves in China. Of grown persons and half-grown children, I have seen many; but an infant's grave never yet had met my eyes. If I were sent to-day to find the last resting-place of some little prattler of three or four years old, I do not know where, in all Tie Chin, I should hope to find it.

"I told the father the gospel taught us something better than that; and he should go and have a small coffin made and we should lay the babe carefully away in it, and bury its remains in a Christian way."—Child's Treasury.

WHO IS LITTLE SUNSHINE?—The child who does not pout, or frown, or say cross words, but goes about the house laughing, smiling, singing, saying kind words, and doing kind deeds—that child is little sunshine.

Religious Intelligence.

Rev. M N. Miles has returned to his former field of labor in Calla, Pawnee county, Nebraska, where, a few years since, he gathered a church. This excellent man and minister, whom the churches of Illinois remember with affection and respect for his usefulness and goodness, has followed his children away where the sun sets, but his letter shows that it is sun-rise at his heart. May his years be many, and his transit triumphant.

—Sarah Hunt, of the Society of Friends, recently preached to the members of the New Jersey Legislature.

—The Seventh-day Baptists in this country report ninety churches, 110 ministers, 8,500 communicants. Most of the churches are close communion.

—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church South assembled in Louisville May 1st. About 200 delegates, including the six bishops, are in attendance.

—Christian workers will find an item for meditation in the fact that there are 5,000,000 children and youth in this country not connected with Sunday-schools.

—A prayer-meeting of converted Chinese in San-Francisco is well sustained and is sometimes attended by as many as eighty persons.

—It is said that seven Baptist churches have been organized in Chicago and vicinity during the past year, and that an equal number will probably be organized during the next twelve months.

—The seventeenth anniversary of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association was held in the First Congregational Church last Sunday. Dr. Kittredge of the Third Presbyterian Church preached.

—The Baptists on the island of Jamaica are doing a good work. At their last annual meeting they reported 105 churches, 1,277 baptisms—total membership 22,860. Jamaica Baptists are of the liberal type.

—Bishop Simpson, of the M. E. church, has returned from a trip to Mexico in greatly improved health, and with cheering reports of the progress of Christian labor in that country.

—A great work was done in the Northwest during the year ending March 1st, in organizing 327 new Sunday-schools, besides visiting and aiding 777 other schools, making an average of twenty-one schools and 811 scholars for each Sabbath of the year. This was done by the American Sunday-school Union.

—A National Presbyterian Sunday School Institute is to be held in St. Louis on the Tuesday evening prior to the meeting of the General Assembly. It will be under the management of J. Bennett Tyler and Drs. John Hall, Crosby, Duryea, Niccolls and others are expected to speak.

—A large number of additions were made to the different Congregational churches of this city on Sunday: in the First Church there were thirty-one; Union Park, thirty eight; Leavitt Street, thirty-eight; Plymouth, twenty; New England, seven, Tabernacle, thirteen.

—The Boston Young Men's Christian Association reports from 1,000 to 1,200 young men at its rooms and 5,000 or 6,000 persons within the influence of its appliances. It is proposed to erect on the corner of Boylston and Lowell streets, a fine building to cost not less than $250,000.

—Sir Bartle Frere found in northern Madagascar, at a native town. on a Sunday morning, a congregation of 2,000 people devoutly worshiping. This town was 300 miles from the nearest European missionary station, and the gospel had been carried there in 1846 by two native slaves who were sold at the capitol, but who had been under missionary influence.

—The number of clergymen connected with the established church, actually resident in England and Wales in 1841, was 14,618; 1851, 17,621,—increase in ten years, 3,003; 1861, number of clergy, 19,105—increase in ten years, 1,574; 1871, number of clergy, 20,604,—increase in ten years, 1,400. In 1841 there were 1,101 laymen for each clergyman; in 1821, 1,024; 1861, 1,057; 1871, 1,047.

—The following is said to be an approximately correct classification of the adherents of the various churches among English-speaking people: Protestant Episcopalians, 12,500,000; Presbyterians, 11,500,000; Baptist, 10,500,000; Congregationalists, 7,500,000; Methodists, 15,000,000; Roman Catholics, 10,000,000—57,000,000 of Protestants against 10,000,000 of Roman Catholics.

—The new church organization at Marengo, Ill., of which mention has been made in these columns, is composed mainly of Christians who would not fellowship the lodge in the Methodist Episcopal church of that place. Rev. N. D. Fanning, the pastor, corrects the statement that the new church will remain in the old connection. It will be an independent body. J M. Deitz, a member, writes to the Methodist Free Press. "Our discipline shall be the Bible; our rule Congregational; and none that belong to secret societies are admitted."

News of the Week.

The City.

—The Masonic Committees, on the corner-stone met in secret cession in the Sherman House on Monday evening.

—The Woman's Temperance Organization continue the work of circulating pledges and educating public sentiment by mass-meetings. At their meeting on Monday it was decided to hold daily afternoon prayer meetings in the Methodist Church Block.

—Between flowers and politics the Grand Army of the Republic manages to exist. Its annual offering over the soldier's graves is being arranged by the organization in Chicago. A wise appreciation of their fallen comrades would be to give up secret chicanery and live like honest Americans, thus honoring those principles for which our soldiers died.

The Capitol.

—A feature of the bill now before Congress to appropriate $3,000,000 to the National Centennial is a recommendation that the duties on tea and coffee be restored until the amount is repaid to the U. S. Treasury.

—The Ways and Means committee reported on Monday to the House on the Sanborn investigation and recommended a bill to repeal the act providing for special tax collectors and to revoke contracts made underit.

—Dawes and Butler have each brought before the House bills on finance. The former provides for the issue of U. S. bonds in exchange for legal tender notes, and both authorize free banking.

The Country.

—Gerrit Smith has written an encouraging letter to the temperance women, recognizing their work as one which God will bless and sustain.

—"The ground is mostly covered with snow and it is still falling. Cattle are dying for want of food and things look 'blue' in this region," writes a gentleman from Medina county, Ohio, April 29th.

—There is no abatement in the Southern floods, but reports are of more disaster and rising waters in Arkansas and Louisiana. The relief committee in New Orleans are distributing 40,000 rations daily aud say that 50,000 daily rations will be needed for three months.

—A fire broke out April 22d on the steamship Mediator of the Lorillard line, lying in her dock at Philadelphia. She is 1,200 tons burden, and loaded with general merchandise from New York to Philadelphia. The ship and cargo were totally destroyed. Loss. $300,000.

—The Arkansas quarrel has reached blood. Detachments of the two factions met at New Gascony, Jefferson county. Some 200 colored volunteers for Brooks were gathered at that place, and Baxter sent Gen. White to disperse them. In the fight the Brooks' men had twenty-seven men killed and wounded, Baxter's seven wounded. Baxter on Sunday kidnapped and secreted two judges of the Supreme Court to prevent an adverse decision of that body.

—Boston's commemoration of Charles Sumner's death took place in Music Hall Wednesday of last week. The vast hall was packed. The Rev. Phillips Brooks opened with prayer, after which followed a hymn written expressly for the occasion by O. W. Holmes. Wendell Philips introduced the orator of the day, Carl Schurz, who made a glowing and eloquent address on the life and character of his deceased friend.

—The Chicago and North-western and Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads have secured opinions from the best legal talent of the country, Wm. W. Evarts and B. R. Curtis of New York, on the New Wisconsin railroad law. Both gentlemen argue that the law is unconstitutional, as it takes the property of individuals without rendering compensation, and invalidates the obligations of contracts. Gov. Taylor has proclaimed that he will enforce the law.

—A horrible murder was committed on Wednesday of last week in Homestead, Pa., near Pittsburgh. Neighbors discovered the dwelling of Mr. Hamnett in flames, and found in the nearly destroyed building the charred remains of Hamnett and his wife, two children and an apprentice boy, with their skulls crushed in. A German laborer has been arrested and confessed the awful deed. He got drunk, murdered the family for money and fired the house by knocking over a lamp as he fled. He got only $15.

—The temperance work is moving on, though with less excitement. In Ohio the Chicago Tribune correspondent reports from those parts of the State visited that there is no falling away of interest. The ladies and gentlemen of Millersburg are very enthusiastic in the war, and are accomplishing much. Crusading parties still visit the saloons at Mantua, some of whom have met with insult and violence at the hands of roughs. It is understood that the saloon men have determined to close their saloons after the expiration of the special tax stamp. The liquor dealers of Bellvue have some of them quit the business and all agree to do so when their licenses expire. A cold-water league has commenced operations at Madison. At Akron, which has been noted for its unscrupulous whisky trade, the women have gained a signal victory, and the Mayor and Council have assisted them so far as to issue an ordinance declaring tippling illegal. Already a number of arrests have taken place of saloon-keepers who have not lived up to the law. All through southern Ohio has the great awakening taken place, and there is every prospect that the temperance work will be carried out more systematically and enthusiastically than heretofore. At Dayton the temperance workers are meeting with success. All the saloons in Albion and Ann Arbor, Mich., are said to be closed.

Foreign.

—It is reported that the King of the Fiji Islands favors their cession to Great Britain.

—A Paris letter says that the Internationals are preparing for another attempt in that city.

—Constantinople, May 1.—Intelligence reaches here that a famine prevails in Asia Minor, and it is stated that in the town of Angora alone 100 deaths occur daily from starvation.

—The Republican forces have been successful in every direction lately in Spain. On Saturday they compelled the Carlists to raise the seige of Bilbao, and delivered the city which was nearly at famine point.

—Another of the murderers of the Rev. Mr. Stevens, in Mexico, has been condemned to death. It is reported that two Guadalajara journalists, who attacked the Catholics on account of the murder of Mr. Stevens, have been fouly dealt with. One has been poisoned and the other disappeared.

Maryville College.—A statement in regard to this institution should have accompanied the letter from the President, P. M. Bartlett, D. D., last week. The college was founded in 1819 by Rev. Isaac Anderson, who presided for thirty-eight years. It is located in a beautifully diversified section of country on the Knoxville and Charlestown railroad, sixteen miles south of Knoxville, Tenn. The college buildings are three in number, of recent construction and accommodate a large number of students, male and female, both sexes sharing equally in the privileges of the institution. The inspiring motive of the founder of this college was expressed in these words to his colleagues and successors: "Let the directors and managers of this sacred institution propose the glory of God and the advancement of that kingdom purchased by the blood of his only begotten Son as their sole objects."

Eureka College.—An interesting paper from the President of this institution appears on the second page. Eureka College is situated in Eureka, Ill., described as a beautiful, healthy and moral town, at the intersection of the Toledo, Peoria, & Warsaw, and the Chicago, Pekin & Southwestern railroads. It is within from twenty to twenty-five miles of Peoria, Pekin and Bloomington, and thus in the center of a near population of one hundred thousand souls. There are two college buildings, of brick, substantial, containing sixteen ample rooms, including a chapel, sufficient for the accommodation of five hundred students. There are extensive accompaniments of apparatus, libraries, cabinets, musical instruments, etc. The property is valued at sixty thousand dollars, and the endowment falls but little short of fifty thousand. Though under the more especial care of the Disciples or Christians, the College has an attendance drawn largely from all classes and does not propose to press religious tenets upon any, trusting that a respect for religion and a regard for morality and truth, will lead all who may be educated within its walls to lives of enlightened usefulness and happiness. The average attendence is about one hundred and thirty, of whom, perhaps, one-third are young ladies.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

"The lecturer, last evening, had not been speaking longer than fifteen minutes, before he was interrupted by sneezes, hisses, affected coughing, stamping of the feet, groans and other disorderly proceedings. The precaution had been taken to have two policemen stationed in the hall, but beyond ejecting one student upon the order of a gentleman connected with this office, nothing was done to preserve order. Grown bold by this impunity, the efforts to drown the speaker's voice were redoubled. Songs, cheers, swinging of hats, rising and crowding together in tumultuous confusion, so increased the uproar that numbers of ladies, affrighted, arose and precipitately left the hall, while those who remained were nervous and anxious, believing every moment that a movement would be made which would culminate in a general melee. Indeed, at times, judging from the wild surging of the crowd, the cries, shouts and general tumult in the back part of the hall, it seemed almost certain that a battle was in progress among the roughs. The frequent cries from some members of the boisterous crowd of 'Set down!' 'Set down!' 'Set down!' sufficiently attested the truth which, among others, the speaker was trying to impress, that the most active members of secret college societies—the 'politicians'—were invariably the coarsest and most ignorant students in the University. When President White's name was mentioned there was much applauding; at the mention of the name of Dr. Wilder, much hissing Which of these men was honored? We fear President White will exclaim in bitterness of spirit, 'What evil thing have I done that such men praise me?' Red pepper was thrown about the room; frantic rushes were made for the stairway, then equally frantic rushes back again to their position in the back part of the hall. Finally the speaker, who had not for a moment lost his temper or self-possession, was compelled to hastily draw his remarks to a close, amidst a noise and confusion so great that his words were caught only by those sitting very near the stage."

This outrage was charged upon the fraternity students and was not denied by them; on the contrary one of them replied saying that, if the students assisted in breaking up the lecture, "they performed a Christian deed, and one they may well feel proud of."

It needs no argument to show that the practices described in this chapter, or affiliation with them, must produce in persons in the formative period of life, who are "not yet hardened into the bone of manhood," stupid consciences, rough manners and immoral habits; and that vigorous efforts were not undertaken years ago by those cognizant of the facts and empowered to abolish the evil, is a matter of surprise and regret. But attempts have been made by both faculties and students, an account of which hereafter follows.

CHAPTER III.

EFFORTS TO CHECK AND DESTROY THE INFLUENCE OF COLLEGE FRATERNITIES BY OFFICERS AND STUDENTS PREVIOUS TO THE CORNELL TRAGEDY, OCTOBER, 1873.

Well aware of the glaring evils connected with the secret society system, earnest efforts were early made by conscientious professors and friends of learning to oppose and destroy them. The illustrious names of Hancock, Adams and Everett are recorded as successfully opposing the Phi Beta Kappa. President Hitchcock relates, in his "Reminiscences of Amherst College," of the trials of his faculty with the societies and an effort made to obtain opinions from other institutions. The following extract from an article in the College Courant, 1868, presents the replies in a condensed form. The writer, a college president, states that at one time President Hitchcock wavered in his denominational convictions and inclined towards Unitarianism, and ever after he was careful not to press his individual judgment "against the ground occupied by those ministers whom he found in the puritan fold when the hand of God drove him into it from the pastures of Unitarianism." Premising thus the writer continues:

Hence, though his book, Reminiscences of Amherst College, records his deliberate and accurate judgment that college secret societies "have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy and heart-burning among the students and towards the faculty," he went no further against these boxes of Pandora than to "address inquiries to most of the Northern Colleges and get answers from them." His independence of thought was perfect; his independence of action imperfect. After gathering the opinions of Presidents of "most of the Northern Colleges," it never occurs to this good, great man that he is under fealty to God to remove these college "roots of Upas," the secret societies, which nearly every opinion he collected declared to be evils, literary nuisances; the most he ventures to think of is to put these opinions in his book, and leave others to carry them into practice. His word is: "I feel as if the testimony of so many eminent and judicious men ought to be put upon record," and so here they are.

Says one President:—"Could these associations be wholly removed from the institutions of learning in our country, I should think it a result in which the friends of learning, especially the officers of colleges, would have great occasion to rejoice"

Says another President:—"As soon as the Faculty ascertained that such societies were in existence they ordered the students to break off their connection with them, stating explictly that they would not be permitted.". "And I think the co-operation of all our colleges would be desirable in opposing all secret societies not fully authorized by the trustees and faculties.

A third President writes:—'We are unanimously and decidedly of the opinion that it would be desirable to have all these secret societies rooted out of our colleges, and have made up our minds to request the Board at their next meeting to pass laws forbidding their existence."

A fourth President:—"I have made one, nay, more than one, effectual attempt to rid this college of their influence!" Mark this! Is this college then an incurably vicious institution? Such would seem to be the inference, or else that this officer and his faculty are incompetent!

Hear a fifth President:—"I suppose it would be desirable that secret societies should be rooted out of our colleges, and from every place. If all these paltry and rival associations could be at once and forever broken up, there can be no doubt it would be a great blessing!" The italics are mine.

A sixth President:—"We have not undertaken to root out these societies; though we have sometimes made the expediency of attempting it a subject of inquiry."

The seventh President writes:—"I am of the opinion that the tendency of such societies is bad of necessity; that is, so long as they have the power, by means of secrecy, to do mischief. They have led to greater unkindness and ill-feeling than almost anything else in college."

The eighth President writes like a Freemason, and probably is one. The sum of his testimony is that good young men belong to the secret society in his college, and it is to be presumed that they would not do wrong; therefore "the only secret society known to exist here is supposed to be harmless." The italics are mine.

The ninth college President answers Dr. Hitchcock:—"Their influence not respected at first, but found to be bad." "Nothing but evil results, or is likely to result from them upon members themselves, as students or as Christians; and no good to those who are not members." "We fear the evil will grow, if unchecked, and we are determined to arrest it by law."—Reminiscences of Amherst College, pp. 323–4t

In the early part of 1869 the following article appeared in The Congregationalist, of Boston, from Howard Crosby, D. D., Chancellor of the University of New York, and Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Philadelphia in 1873:

MY OBJECTIONS TO SECRET SOCIETIES IN COLLEGES.

The heart of man loves secrecy, because it is an element of power. The honest heart, which would not seek secrecy as a cloak of sin, may yet rejoice in the necessary secrecy of a superior knowledge or experience. There is a pleasure, too, in having others aware that there is this reserved power within us, but of the high moral character of this pleasure we may have our doubts. Of its prevalence, however, we can have no doubt. The child in the nursery cries out in triumph to its fellow, "I know something that you don't;" and is as proud of its bit of concealed information as a man might be of a golden fortune. The nursery recognizes power in the little boaster, even when the other envious toddlers force their responsive shout of "I don't care." He is known as the possessor of a secret, and the heartlets around are longing to share it with him. Conscious of his power, he can now safely ask for a piece of candy from this one, or a bite from the apple of another, without fear of a refusal.

Solid, studious men get this power in a legitimate way. By long toiling through the intricacies of expressed truth in any of the departments of science, they grow from neophytes to veterans in knowledge. They are charged batteries of information and wisdom, and are naturally and necessarily hailed as such by the community. Hidden treasures lie within their minds, and the world pays respect to the power that is implied. For power is man's grandest crown, and knowledge (as the adage says) is power.

Where men cannot gain this position of influence in the legitimate way, either from want of capacity, or indolence, or the necessities of youth, there is a very natural endeavor to gain it by trick and assumption. Lying diplomas bought or stolen, flattering endorsements of obligated friends, the whimseys of political chicane will do for them what only hard labor could do for honest men. So are born "quacks," not panoplied from the head of Jove, but like the filthy harpies, from the seed of the hundred-headed Typhon In this wicked world of ours. Minervas are the strange birth of miraculous labors, while the monsters of hypocrisy are the products of the ordinary generation of vice.

We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of this earth, a part of the great system by which the mud-begotten try to pass themselves off as the Jove-born. Leave out those secret associations, whose concealment is for safety, as in political crises, and a secret society is a deception, more or less innocent according to the character of its contents.

My first objection to the secret societies of our colleges is founded on the above considerations. They are pretenses, and thus at war with truth, candor and manliness. "Omne ignotum pro magnifico" is the principle from which they draw their life. However harmless in their actual operations or undertakings, however well composed in their membership, however pure in their meetings they may be, the fact of secrecy is insiduously weakening the foundations of frank truthfulness in the youthful mind. The Sophomore wears his badge, an emblem of a sham, and feels a glow of pride in supporting a hypocrisy. This language is not too strong to those who are accustomed to trace the great evils of our world to their germs, and who would strangle the tiger when he is a manageable cub. These little (?) divergencies from truth in children and youth become the gigantic frauds of great world life by the simple action of time upon divergent lines of progress There can be no more important instruction inculcated on our young men than the necessity of truthful openness a the very warp of all virtue. Everything that conflicts with this is a poison and will leave its mark upon the character. A sham is not only in itself a mean thing, but it blocks the way to truth. A lazy soul (and I believe all souls in the flesh are lazy) finding a quasi success in the sham, gives up the pursuit of the true. The lad who receives honor among his comrades because he wears a mystic skull and bones upon his breast, will proportionally loose so much of his zeal for scholarship and all else that constitutes true worth. He has his fortune (he thinks) and he does not care for new ventures or investments.

My second objection to secret societies in our colleges is in the opportunity given by the secrecy to immoralities I do not speak ignorantly but from a personal experience. Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice. The promise of secrecy prevented all disclosure to parents, and the seclusion was thus perfect. We met in a back room of a hotel, liquor was brought from the bar-room for the company, and, as in all such styles of association, the conversation gravitated to the obscene and sensual. At times the scene became painfully demonstrative. I do not charge all or any of our college secret societies with such excesses at this day. Thirty years may have wrought a change. The very society to which I belonged, I have reason to believe, at this time is perfectly free from these stains. But still they all offer a remarkable opportunity for sins, in which publicity would not allow their members to indulge for a moment.

A man is certainly no better morally for a restraint from any sin, but the community is better off by his restraint, and he himself is on a more hopeful road. Youth should be especially a season of restraint for the most obvious reasons, and any secrecy established at this crisis of life is in direct war with restraint.

A third objection I have alluded to above. The confidence between parent and child is broken, and hence destroyed, by these secret societies. How a father's heart sinks as his son, returning from college at his first vacation, refuses, for the first time, to be full and candid in his communications! He has joined a secret society, and his father is no more a confidant. The sacredness of love receives its first blow: its beauty is rudely defaced. A free and entire communion between the young and their parents is both the safeguard of the young and the comfort of the parents. This the secret societies of our colleges overthrow. I have referred to the father because the mother is generally prepared to see her growing son apply to the father in all his growing experiences, and, with the self-sacrifice that has its only home in a mother's heart, she yields that proper and natural inquisition which she has maintained so long. When, however, this new form of the family bond is broken, there is no heart that bleeds so freely as the mother's. The secrecy of the college society renders it peculiarly adapted to be a rival to the family. Now a young man too easily learns the false and sad lesson that it is manly to slight domestic ties, and substitute a species of club-life in its place, and where that club-life takes on the fascinations of secrecy, the danger is greatly augmented.

These are my three main objections to secret societies. They refer to the general principles of morality, and may be applied to all secret societies among the young. But there are other local objections that belong to the college, and these I will briefly enumerate.

I have some experience as a college officer, and for years occupied the post of Secretary of the Faculty in one of our institutions. which post was that (among other things) of chief of police. The delinquents were consigned to my care. It was mine to advise and chide, to visit parents, and to communicate the verdicts of the Faculty, and in this way the statistics of college derelictions came constantly under my eye The observations I now offer are made, therefore, from a double opportunity which I have enjoyed.

Under this praamble I put my fourth objection, that college secret societies interfere with a faithful course of study. The college curriculum demands the whole energy of a student. All that he can reserve from necessary recreation should be given to his studies. This is his great work, on which his whole life depends. Failure here will run as failure in some form all through his decades. There is a tide of practical opposition to this plain truth manifest in some of our oldest colleges. Recreation is made the business (it appears) of college life. Boat clubs and base ball clubs, instead of forming amusements for tempora subseciva, demands a course of training that successfully competes with the college curriculum. I object to secret societies that they do this same thing. They absorb the attention. The nucleus of college life is there rather than in the lecture-room or study. I always found the best students were those who either kept out of the secret societies, or who entered very slightly into their operations. Some of the societies strove to gain the best students, it is true, and so to gain a high standing with the Faculty and the college, but these best students were generally figure-heads. The Napoleons of the secret societies were very low on the college record. These societies upset the foundations of honor by making it honorable for a member to neglect his college duties in order to perform the behests of his Alpha Mu or Tau Delta, and so they shield the offender against academic law, and give to him a sort of glory, where he should be drenched with disgrace.

[Coutinued next week:]

The statistics of Dun, Barlow & Co's Mercantile Agency, show that during 1873 there were 5,183 failures of business firms in the country, whose liabilities were $228,499,000, of which there were in New York city 644 failures, with liabilities of $92,635.000. This shows an increase of 1,114 failures, and of $107,443,000 liabilities over the preceding year, of which one-fourth of the failures with two-thirds of the liabilities, were among merchants in New York

The Dissenters in Great Britain consider it a great hardship that they are compelled to contribute to the support of the State Church, although they believe in the cardinal principles of Christianity. But their grounds for dissatisfaction are light compared with those the Indian subjects of the British Empire have in regard to the tribute they are obliged to pay towards the support of a foreign religion which Englishmen in India fail to sustain. The Hindoos and Mahometans are taxed very heavily by the Indian government for the maintenance of the Christian religion. Nearly one-half of the whole Indian income tax—an exaction which has caused great dissatisfaction among the native population—is spent upon a religion which the people do not believe, but which they regard as quite as erroneous as idolatry is deemed by Englishmen.—Sun.

"Especially for the White House."—A correspondent of the Home Journal. in a recent Washington letter, mentions many improvements which have been made in and about the White House during the summer and autumn—repainting and reguilding, elaborately carved mantles, elegant mirrors, new and elegantly upholstered furniture, etc. The writer then adds:—

"Two thousand dollars' worth of glassware has been finished at the Corning Glass Works especially for the White House, consisting of goblets, champagne-glasses, hock-glasses, santerne-glasses, claret, sherry and cordial-glasses, finger-bowls, punch-glasses, ice cream-plates, preserve-dishes, bottles, decanters, etc. The engraving is very fine, and the coloring and finish of the best."

This has an ominous look. Is there, then, to be the elegant dissipation which the above outfit would seem to foreshadow? Are the American people to be henceforth joint proprietors of these finely engraved champagne glasses, hock, claret, sherry, cordial, and punch glasses, decanters, etc., as of the White House itself and its other equipage? These questions concern not merely the present occupants of the White House, but the people, especially the friends of temperance, of the whole country.—National Temperance Advocate.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a hook of some three hundred pages just issned by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed hy many to he, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

AGENTS.

A friend sends us this week the names of two agents to canvass for the Cynosure in Ohio. We want good agents everywhere from Maine to California, and also in the British Provinces. (See advertisement.)

RENEWALS.

We hope that those subscribers whose subscriptions expire in May will not consider the notices we send out duns. Very few, if any subscribers who have received such notices in the past have regarded them in that light.

It is reasonable to suppose that at least fifty of the 200 or more subscribers whose time expires in May will be so much occupied with other interests as not to notice the fact that their time is out unless their attention is especially called to that fact. Besides, the blank notices are very conveniently arranged for sending in renewals. We hope that so far as possible each will be accompanied with several new subscriptions.

We have felt very thankful for the renewals for April which have lately been coming in, accompanied usually with from one to four or five new subscriptions. Occasionally they contain expressions like this: "I have been trying to get some new subscribers, but have not succeeded." "Perhaps I can do better next year," or "I hope to send some soon."

THREE MONTHS SUBSCRIBERS.

A friend from Granville, O., who sends us quite a list of three months' subscribers, writes that he thinks they will all renew, saying that he will solicit their renewals in due season, and if any fail to continue the paper he will make up the loss with new subscribers. Will others who can conveniently do so, imitate this example?

Will you not get subscribers for three months if you can not get them for six months or a year? We feel more and more anxious as the National Anniversary approaches to have multitudes of new subscribers so that the proceedings of that meeting may be read all over our land.

We again repeat that for $5.00 we will send the Cynosure to a club of twelve persons for three months, and for $10.00 to a club of twenty-five persons for that time.

THAT GREAT DAY'S WORK.—We will be glad to announce the accomplishment of that special work which was spoken of last week, as soon as possible. Perhaps you do not recollect what it was, so we quote from last week's paper: "Only 1,972 more subscribers are needed to bring our list up to 6,000. This is one fair day's work if all interested will engage in it. Will you?"

We have just received from one subscriber forty-one names accompanied by $44.00 towards the accomplishment of this work. Who reports next?

TRACTS.

13,760 pages of tracts were sent out by the fund for the free distribution of tracts, last month, besides 123,850 of the Honeywell tracts, and there is money enough left in the treasury to send out 22,800 pages more. We also have on hand a large quantity of the Honeywell tracts. We hope calls for them from persons who will wisely distribute them will continue to come in in great numbers, and consequently we will be glad to receive donations to the fund for the free distribution of tracts.

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commission." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2.00 a year and requires a great addition to our present mail list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not, as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

ONE WAY TO GET A LARGE LIST OF SUBSCRIBERS.

Make out a list of persons whom you know to be interested in the Anti-masonic reform. Add to this list the names of all the persons who ought to take the paper in your opinion. Carry or send to them a tract which you think would especially interest or arouse them. If possible converse with them. Then solicit their subscriptions for the Cynosure.

Topics of the Time.

HAZING FRESHMEN.—On April 25th the faculty of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, suspended six students for "hazing." One hundred and ten of their classmates sent in defiant notices, asking to be treated in the same manner. Twenty-nine repented and withdrew their names; the rest were suspended for the remainder of the college year. All four of the college classes are out with cards to the public, begging for sympathy, and a fair estimation of their side of the question. As this is the first instance of the kind at Ann Arbor, the endeavor to make out a "case" against the faculty has the appearance of success. That body makes no defense, rightly judging that public sentiment will sustain them. "Hazing" is a sort of college rowdyism practiced on timorous Freshmen. It is both a nuisance and an outrage, and several institutions have been compelled to pass laws against it. It has been sometimes fatal, often injurious, and always begets ill-will, though carried on, as the Ann Arbor students represent, with "good feeling," and as an "athletic sport." No institution ever gained reputation from allowing the custom.

CENTENNIAL SABBATHS.—The Police Board of Philadelphia have before them a set of resolutions in which it is stated that as a large number of foreign visitors must be entertained and the pleasure of many hard working citizens must be secured, with which ends the present laws for the proper observance of the Sabbath are in conflict; therefore the Legislature is respectfully requested by the Select and Common Councils of Philadelphia to set these laws aside. The struggle over this question, which had been anticipated, has thus early been begun, and its importance must not be under-estimated. Its effect upon the foreign visitors and other nations will be to strengthen the impression with nearly every stranger who sets foot on our shores, that America is a land of liberty—the only interpretation to the word to a mind used to the pomp and authority of priests and kings being, license; that liberty here is without regulations. It will strengthen the idea, too quickly gained by a resident foreigner, that we are afraid or ashamed to enforce our laws. It would be openly disgracing the memory of the Fathers, who refused not their blood to establish the only liberty under which a true Sabbath is possible. It would be a public repudiation of the idea that our government has anything to do with religion except to kick at its most cherished institution. On the same principle liquor laws may be set aside for the six months during which the Centennial will be held; and at its close Philadelphia will be worse than plague-smitten, a city of unbridled lust rather than of "brotherly love."

MODERN "SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS."—The April number of the Congregational Quarterly gives the following summary of students in the theological seminaries of the denomination at the present time: Andover, 78; Bangor, 40; Chicago, 42; Hartford, 17; New Haven, 99; Oakland, 5; Oberlin, 46;—total, 327. Of these only thirty-eight graduate this year. With the opinion of the Advance that this is a very small number for thirty-five professors and sixteen lecturers, every one will agree. The same paper hints that it is a lack of "professional enthusiasm" on the pastors which is at fault. A very slight examination will probably show that here rests the trouble. "Professional enthusiasm" expends itself on large salries, polished, eloquent and learned discourses, and a very tender handling of popular sins, against which men of sense outside the churches expect some voice to be raised from the pulpit. An enthusiasm for souls, like that of Christ Jesus and his Apostles, is what theological seminaries must have to save them from sinking into contempt.

CHIMERICAL GRATITUDE.—The 26th of April will be for some time remembered as the day in which the following unique thanksgiving proclamation took effect:—

OFFICE OF THE M. W. GR. SIRE,
R. W. G. L. OF U. S.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to vouchsafe his benign favor to our labors in behalf of suffering humanity, and to add largely to our prosperity as a brotherhood during the past year:

AND WHEREAS, It eminently becomes us to show forth our deep-felt gratitude for these signal blessings, and to offer up our fervent prayers for their continuance.

Now I, C. A. Logan, M. W. Grand Sire of the R. W. Grand Lodge of the United States, do hereby enjoin upon all Grand and Subordinate bodies under this jurisdiction to take order for the appropriate observance of the fifty-fifth Anniversary of Odd-fellowship in the United States, on the 26th of April, 1874: to which end I fraternally exhort them to set apart that day for thanksgiving and prayer to God, and for a public acknowledgment of his manifold blessings.

Done at the City of Baltimore, State of Maryland, on the first day of February, A. D. 1874, and of our Order, the fifty-fifth. C. A LOGAN, JAMES L. RIDGELY, G. S. Grand Sire.

This sorry imitation of a reverential, religious custom is permitted here as a matter of history chiefly. What reasons prompted it, aside from the attempt to make stock from better people's capitol, the inside ring of "Odd-fellows" must explain. Very likely they were greatly thankful for large accumulations of funds obtained on false pretenses of charity. They might have been thankful for an ex-Vice-president returned to the bosom of the fraternity after the trials of Washington life and railroad speculations. They could have been thankful that the fiat of eternity had not smitten upon their impious darkness and broken the yoke of sin from their dupes. No doubt they obeyed the mandate of the "Grand Sire" in their Odd-fellow way, i. e., glorification, speeches, suppers and balls. Churches were found willing to give a Sabbath service to the honor of imposition in Washington, Chicago, Nashville, Memphis, Buffalo, Iowa City, Providence, R. I., Jersey City, Jersey City Heights and Newark, N. J., and several in New York. For general purposes this was enough, but the celebration was seldom complete without supper and ball which occupied the following week. So the fraternity imagined itself thankful for a day,—but will such rejoicing endure?

OUR COLLEGES ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

WESTFIELD COLLEGE.

Since, in respect to secret societies, the position of the church of the United Brethren in Christ is well-known, the world will fairly presume that her colleges are unfriendly to those orders.

Accordingly, as associated with the Faculty of Westfield College, it gives us pleasure to state that she is true to the principles of the church that gave her being. Yet we must not be understood as occupying this position through denominational prejudice, nor yet by servile assent to ecclesiastical peculiarity. By no means. We rejoice in a God-given freedom, in the exercise of which we discriminatingly and heartily take our stand, glad to find a denomination committed to this high and holy, though unpopular, reform.

With the membership of these orders we have no personal quarrel, except as they individually take the war-path. Against their organization and their peculiar principles, however, we are, and desire to be known to be hostile and aggressive. Deeming them (especially those best known), injurious to all the best interests of mankind, and destitute of all moral right to an existence, we cannot but pray and labor for their overthrow.

In the government of the college, we take no further notice of them than to prohibit persons, while students, from attending lodge meetings. This prohibition, while it is morally wholesome, is considered necessary to the best intellectual progress of students.

College secret societies do not, and, by the help of God, cannot exist among us.

Personal Recollections of Sumner.

BY SAMUEL D. GREENE.

After discontinuing my lectures, and at the close of the Moore and Seavey trial, I went into the counting room of Mr. Ebenezer Hayward, of Boston, as clerk, and took charge of his books and cash account. Mr. Hayward's business at that time was quite complicated and important, having nineteen vessels employed in fishing and in trade with the French Islands, and in the winter coasting and to the West Indies, and beside he carried on the cooper and shook making business, and was also deputy packer of markerel. Mr. Hayward was a strong friend of mine. I continued in his employ two years, writing all his letters, getting them translated into French (which was done by Hon. Bradford Sumner's daughter), and opening a large French trade with merchants of Bordeau and Milan and other French ports. Mr. Hayward's business in the shook trade during this time greatly increased, and it became necessary to obtain a larger supply of staves than would be had at the North; and in the fall of 1835 he concluded to open a trade with the South, putting up a vessel every week for Wilmington, North Carolina, and I was engaged to go to Wilmington and take charge of the business, sell the goods, buy the staves, and whatever should offer to furnish a full cargo for the vessel back. A vessel was assigned to me from Fall River, the cargo was sold, the vessel loaded to return, and waiting for the black cook, who was in jail (as the custom was at that time to keep all free negroes, that came to the South in vessels or otherwise, in jail at the expense of their employer till their departure). During this delay a Captain Porter missed one of his negro men. Officers were employed and our vessel searched, but no negro found. But as the officers were leaving the vessel, Captain Carter said he had no knowledge of the negro, but there was one place they had not searched, where a negro might possibly hide himself. The place was searched and the negro found. Captain Carter and his crew were all taken and thrust into jail, the Captain fined $500 and indicted for trial. Being consignee, I sought an interview with Captain Porter, and got his consent to release the captain and mate on bail; the captain for $1,500, the mate for $1,100, upon condition that they should return and stand their trial for life; and the rest of the crew were kept in jail as witnesses. I hired a new crew and the vessel sailed for Fall River. The Freemasons learning I was an Anti-mason, went North and sent anti-slavery documents to me; and as it was the year VanBuren was elected President, the Southern post masters opened all the mails and suppressed all anti-slavery documents. I was soon charged of being an anti-slavery man. The Masons also sent on Locke's report of Moore and Seavy's trial for slander, and seventy men were chosen to lynch me in four days. A Mr. Law, a member of the church which I attended, heard of the plot and informed me. I sold him during that night my whole stock of goods, and in the morning, as I had a vessel already loaded, I went aboard and in five days landed in Boston, in September, 1834.

Soon after Charles Sumner called on me and heard my story, the loss of my business and income. He expressed great sorrow and sympathy for me, and said there was no persecution like that of Freemasonry, except the Jews and Gentiles who persecuted the purest man on earth. He said, "Masons pretend that Masonry is the handmaid of religion, and carry the Bible as a sort of evidence of this fact. I have taken Bernard's Light on Masonry, which is true if human testimony can be relied on, and compared it carefully with the Bible, and the religion the Bible teaches and they are entirely opposite. I have been taught the Bible is true and I believe it. Masonry must be false."

I narrated to him the privilege I had at Wilmington of teaching a Sabbath-school of negroes in my back store on condition that I would go to the poor house and preach to the poor one hour after meeting. I did so. I then told him also that the deacon of the Presbyterian church was an executor or an estate and had a number of negroes to sell at auction, which he invited me to attend. I did so, and wept, not only for the poor creatures, but for poor depraved human nature. The negroes were seated along the sidewalk, fifteen in number, for inspection. They were brought into the court house, placed upon a block for better inspection, then sold. What shocked me the most was when a mulatto girl, nearly white, fourteen years old, was brought in the last for sale. She was modest and unassuming. She hung down her head and appeared very sorrowful, as though she knew her fate. She was bid off by a young bully who boasted he bought her for his mistress. She had been brought up by a pious mother and was sold for a prostitute! Mr. Sumner's face flushed with red. He said, "Slavery is cursing our nation. It would be a blessing to free the slaves, if it cost an ocean of blood." He then turned to me again and said, "Mr. Greene, your course of conduct has been right and from good motives. Don't be discouraged. The rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous," and then bid me a hearty farewell.

BY H. KINSLEY.

The recent representation, by Freemasons, of John Wesley as having been one of their number, though false, need surprise no one. Similar representations of good and influential men have often been made before this, by some Freemasons. As I am in possession of some of these representations, I furnish a few. I take them from "The National Freemason; R. Murdy, D. D., L. L. D., Grand Prelate of Grand Encampment U. S., Editor. John W. Simons, Past Gran Master of N. Y., Associate Editor."

Under the heading, "Anecdotes and Sayings of Masons," it says: "Luther when studying, always had his dog lying at his feet," (Vol. VIII., p. 166.)

"The learned and scholarly Melancthon, the devout martyr, Huss, Cardinel Wolsey, and the philosophers, Locke and Newton," are represented as having been Freemasons, "by Bro. Weed, of Wis." (Vol. X., p. 54.) All these, except Newton, died before speculative Freemasonry existed. They certainly were not stone masons in any sense of the term. Newton lived about ten years after the organization of speculative Freemasonry; but I am not aware that there is any evidence that he ever joined the fraternity of Fremasons. Nor have I ever seen him represented as having been a Freemason, except in the article above quoted.

In the "General Assembly of the Grand Orient of France," in a speech, "Bro. Garrison" said: "When Voltaire, the greatest of Masons, blessed the children of Franklin, the most simple-minded of men, he pronounced the words, 'God and liberty,' which were to be the inspiring device of young America, now so powerful, and destined to produce such men as Lincoln, the saint of Masonry." (Vol. IX., p. 43.) The editor remarks: "Our brother is not correctly informed about Mr. Lincoln. He was not a Freemason."

The speaker could have had, of course, no evidence that Mr. Lincoln was a Freemason. But in France it would be so very difficult, if not quite impossible, to prove the falsity of the representation, that it pretty certainly never would be done. Mr. Lincoln's name and influence would, therefore, promote Freemasonry in France just as well as it would if he had been a Freemason.

In all these false representations there is no violation of any principle of Masonic morals. The prosperity of this institution requires that this laxity in representation should be allowed. Strict sincerity and truthfulness would reveal its false pretensions, and be destructive of its existence. It is, therefore, not surprising that the Masonic moral code does not, except in the intercourse of Mason with Mason, enjoin sincerity or forbid lying.

Address to Christians In the Lodge.

BY GEORGE ELEY.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I desire to present a few thoughts to your serious and prayerful attention. And, in the first place, I would remind you that "Ye are not your own. Ye are bought with a price." Jesus died that he might "redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." He is "made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption." "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation, unto all them that obey him."

You not only believe the above quotations, but you have professed allegiance to Jesus Christ; you desire the prosperity of Christianity; you pray and labor for the conversion of lost sinners; this, all good people do." Permit me then, in the next place to ask you a few plain, pertinent questions: 1st. In your Christian experience have you discovered, within your own soul, a hungering and thirsting after righteousness for which the Lord has not made ample provision in the Gospel? 2d, If so, did you find that want supplied in the Freemason's lodge? I once heard a minister of Christ say that he "frequently enjoyed the lodge-room fully as well as the prayer-meeting." 3d. Is Masonry, with its appendages, conducive to piety, meekness and a higher degree of spirituality in Christian life? Now, if the above questions are truly answered affirmatively, allow me to suggest a slight modification in Masonry, so as to admit into its brotherhood all Christians, for I find but few Christians who are not striving for more grace. Poor, fallen, sinful humanity needs all the helps and means of grace accessable to them. None can say that he does not need more of the Spirit of Christ in his heart. If, therefore, you are fully persuaded that Freemasonry is conducive to a higher degree of spiritual life, would it not be well in you, dear brother, to use your influence to so modify the system of Freemasonry as to admit within its embrace all Christ's people, the poor, the maimed, the halt and the blind. I fancy this might be done by simply making the system what its name implies—*Free*masonry. This feature of it, would remove the objections which some squeamish people frequently bring against it. It would throw open the doors of lodgerooms, remove the sentinels from its doors, and then, probably, there would be no need for those tremenduous oaths of perpetual secrecy. However that might be, there is one thing clear to my mind, there should be no bars put up between the Lord's people. "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus." All entitled to the same means of grace.

Beloved brethren, permit me, in conclusion, to recommend Paul's motto for your imitation: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." (Rom. xiv. 21). Many good Christians look upon Freemasonry with much suspicion; it is not of good report. Finally, brethren, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." "And the God of peace shall be with you."

Blindness.

One of the results of over-cunning is moral blindness. The most crafty men often appear to be the most stupid. This was one of the phenomena which was pointed out by the Saviour in the character of the Pharisees. Though pretending to be the keenest men of their day, yet in almost every thing that constituted real moral and spiritual life, they were both deaf and blind. They could not see or understand things that were evident to the simplest comprehension.

And such is the condition precisely, of the modern Mason. Moral truths which are perfectly plain to others he cannot see at all.

Let us take the case of Senator Carpenter, for example. He is said to be a great Mason. He thinks that the franking privilege, with all its frightful corruptions, should be restored, and why? Because, though a bad means, it could be made to serve the good end of circulating information. This is Masonry; Jesuitism, Pharisaism all over. The Senator says that a great government like ours should not suppress information. This man who swears that he will "never sever but ever conceal" the highly valuable information which he learns in the lodge, thinks that the government should not suppress information. The lodge may do it; but not the government.

OBSERVER.

The Granges.

We have been requested by a brother who "stands identified with the United Brethren Church and also with the grange fraternity," to give him this favor, our advice, instruction, and views through the Telescope respecting that institution," the grange. . . . .

Our views upon the various aspects of the granges were given in a note in the Telescope, February 11th, as follows:

The gullible nature of man is really an astonishing phenomenon. The Indiana grangers have passed resolutions that all corporations which are carriers should be paid for services performed a fair and reasonable compensation, based upon the roads and equipments,—no watered stock, Credit Mobilier, or other modern swindles to be taken into account. In a following resolution they "are in favor of Congress empowering a commission of good and true men to inquire into and report upon a proper plan to regulate all carrying charges." The Credit-Mobilier swindle was supposed to be composed of "good and true men;" but the temptation offered them was too strong to resist. So this commission to report a proper (?) plan will offer another temptation for one of the grandest swindles this country has ever seen coming from Congress. Why is the National Grange located at Washington? And why has it accumulated a surplus of over $50,000, which it proposes to put into a magnificent building? How many "hard-fisted tillers of the soil" are in Washington? The editor of the organ of the Indiana Grange was recently interviewed by a Gazette reporter. He said that grange meetings are secret, but not oath-bound. There is just enough secrecy to give them a charm and strength. This editor has been appointed a purchasing agent for the granges, to buy for them agricultural implements, &c., from wholesale men, and gets three per cent. for his services. He is no "middle-man," forsooth! He does not make any money by getting three per cent. on all he buys for the hundreds of thousands of farmers of the Hoosier State!"

We say that membership in the granges is not consistent with membership in the United Brethren church, for various reasons that may be mentioned. We have some idea of what pressure is brought upon members of the church by these outside popular movements. It must be difficult for many of our brethren to resist the temptation to enter them, especially when even ministers of the church are lightly esteeming and openly opposing some of our regulations. They say that it is not worth while for our members to be so particular about keeping out of these minor secret societies for they will not last very long, they will soon pass away. For this very reason we think that our people should keep out of them. If the short lived nature of a thing is a reason why it may be encouraged by Christians, then a circus of the most foul nature may be patronized by them because it sets up in a town for a day and is soon gone, and so of many other things that are admitted to be improper places for Christians. The most worthless things soonest decay. Gold and precious stones endure for all time. Now can a man afford to unsettle himself in a church connection to run after any wild, unstable movement? We take the admission of nearly every one, that the grangers must soon cease to exist and be nothing but empty shells if anything at all.

After the breeze has blown over, every one having joined this fraternity will regret it, because he will see how he wasted precious time, spent money, mixed with light and wicked associates, and became cold in religion. A United Brethren, if he is not actually dismissed from the church for his lodge connection, will regret that he has lost respect for the church, that he has pained and hurt the conscience of his brethren, and that he has helped to strengthen a movement in the church that looks to the overthrow of our whole law on secrecy.

We want our brethren to believe that we sympathize with them in their temptations to enter societies disapproved by the church. But we sympathize only so long as they resist the temptation. After they have yielded and gone into these societies, they have cut themselves from us, and are really not members of our church. It must be remembered that however much certain preachers apologize for the "minor orders" the church knows no distinction. It has not yet made it more excusable for members to enter granges and Good Templar lodges than Masonic lodges. The church has a principle at stake, and it is as necessary to respect this principle in small matters as in large ones.

It takes some grace to stand aloof from these deceitful institutions. United Brethren ought not to be deceived by them, because they have good instruction. More than this: they are under obligations to respect the church.

For our own part, we could not belong to the granges and the United Brethren church at the same time. If there is a way of doing this we have not yet been able to see it. Our inquiring brother, of course, ought to know more about the granges than we do, for he "has been there;" we have not. We will ask him one question. Can he reccommend other United Brethren to join the grange? If he is satisfied that it is a good institution, so that he can afford to violate a rule of the church to join it, he ought not to ask the advice of one who knows less than he does about the institution, but should go right along and trample upon the church and the conscience of his brethren. The most we can say is that he wounds the feelings of many of his brethren. If he loves the church still, there is no other way for him than to leave the lodge, and say to his associates: My church forbids my connection with any secret society.

The Law of Love the Law of Labor.

One of the most pressing questions of the day is what is commonly known as the "Labor Question." It embraces the whole relation of capital to labor, of employer to the employed. It is a matter that thus far has seemed to give rise mainly to mutual irritation. Labor has thought, and to some extent with good reason, that it has been oppressed. The workingman has thought himself down-trodden. There has arisen therefore a strong tendency—greater, to be seen, in Europe than in this country, but not to be underrated here—to Communism. This is an evil every way to be deplored.

There is no doubt that capital has to often been grasping, hard, unfeeling, unscrupulously making merchandise of the bones and blood of men. Employers have too often, in the very great majority of cases indeed, had no thought for the well-being of those they employed. The governing idea has been to secure the most work for the least pay.

Labor, on the other hand, has not taken into the account the value of brain-work in conducting any business, the experience and skill and thought necessary to make a business successful. It has seemed as if the operative, toiling in the factory, did all the work, and the employer, sitting in the office, got nearly all the pay.

So the controversy has gone on, only gathering in bitterness, until at times it appeared as if society was building over a volcano, whose rumblings are now and then heard, and whose hidden fires may at any moment burst out with destructive violence.

No sure remedy on any considerable scale has been found. Workingmen, too often stirred up by designing demagogues, inveigh against their employers, and demand a general distribution of property. We are told even that it is the duty of the government—municipal, state, national—to provide work for all under its authority at remunerative rates. Capital, in the meanwhile, concerns itself too little with the general well-being of its ally, labor. Instead, therefore, of a drawing together between these classes whose interests are, after all, one, there is rather a tendency to wider separation.

The true remedy for this state of things, bad in its present condition and in its possible consequences, is to be found, we are persuaded, where men have been too little inclined to look for it. Political economy is good in its place; the study of it will doubtless throw some light upon this perplexing question. But it can only go a very little way after all, for it has no power over the motives of men. Trades-unions on the one hand, and combinations of capital on the other, only tend to make matters worse.

The law of love —"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"—is the only remedy we know of that will bring this labor question to a successful solution. Each party in the matter ought to put himself in the place of the other. It should not be a mere struggle for individual rights. There should rather be a willingness to yield rights the one to the other.

"Masters," said Paul, "give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven." But there is an injunction for the employed as well. "Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God." The potent law of love, in other words, will control and regulate this matter, if it is allowed to operate. There is no other force that will.

For the application of this principle our hope must lie with the individual conscience. No edict of government, no order of any "Union," can effect the reform of so much need, and bring about the happy day when employer and employed shall count each other brethren. But each individual for himself can see to it at so far as he is concerned this law shall be applied.

Christian employers ought to bring their Christianity to bear upon the relation in which they stand to those whom they employ. There is put into the hands of every such a one the opportunity of doing much towards the final and peaceful and righteous settlement of this grave question of our day.

And on their part, Christian workingmen ought to act towards their employers in the same spirit. The law of love ought to be the law of labor. Until it is, we can hope for no permanent quiet.—Am. Messenger

Compulsory Education.

When the early settlers of this country pitched their tents and found that the land was goodly, one of the first subjects that presented itself for consideration was that of education. Their early colleges and the solid work they did is evidence of the value put upon learning. The State papers of that early period, whether we regard the ideas they embodied or the language in which they were clothed, commanded then, as they do yet, the admiration of the people. The foundations were broad and deep. To the minds of those people a lad untaught was a pitiable object, and one seldom met. The New England States have well preserved that creditable characteristic.

With the light of the Reformation began Scotland's parish school system, which has continued to this day to spread its advantages over that entire nation. Liberty encounters no risks where education is universal. Their tyranny dwarfs and dies. The seed which Luther dropped in Germany germed into the Prussian system of education, against which formidable forces have lately been showing their helplessness. Knowledge is power, for it casts back and crushes the efforts of darkness that would give scholarship to the few, with which to rule the masses. Knowledge is power in the nation as well as in the individual.

Ignorance in a republic is the worst seed of decay. What, then, is to be done to keep this pall from overshadowing this nation? Education must not only be offered to the people, but that percentage who reject its advantages must be compelled to place their children under its influence. Ignorance is not only a danger in a free state, because of the facility with which demagogues can use it, but a burden. As a people we cannot afford to have any proportion of the community unable to read and write.

In Russia and the south of Ireland papers and magazines are not as thick as snowflakes; those people are not distinguished for inventions; whole districts of them know not the meaning of the word. Is a republic among such people possible? We think not. Liberty and republicanism come from intelligence; they stand and fall together. For this reason we think compulsory education a national necessity. By the time we have a population of seventy-five millions —and that is not very distant, when we look at the increasing stream of immigration—it is not unreasonable to apprehend that twenty per cent. may be unable to read or write. No patriot regards such a possibility without misgivings for the future of his country.

Without constant vigilance we drift towards anarchy. The church and the school are equally essential to our growth and existence. Our forefathers comprehended this truth. With doubling population the duty is doubly incumbent on their descendants. Already some of our constituencies are selecting men of most questionable morals. Onehalf of their constituents can neither read or write. It is not a day too early to sound the alarm. We must enlarge and multiply our common schools, and use considerate force to get the rising generation to travel on this glorious highway of knowledge and good citizenship. Political quacks die in educated society. When all the people are able to read, to gather the common sense with which our daily and weekly papers are freighted, men like Tweed, Butler and Genet will have no success in bamboozling them. We must gather by law the young into schools. It is a refining and ennobling place.—New York Witness.

PLEDGES MADE AT MONMOUTH should be paid without delay. Those interested will please notice and save being notified more particularly.

TO THE FRIENDS OF LIGHT THROUGHOUT THE STATE OF IOWA:—

DEAR BRETHREN.—I have waited till the last moment for your response to my former request about forming a State organization, or being represented in the Convention at Syracuse. A few have responded promptly; but I am sorry to say the time seems not yet to have come for any further action in this direction. I understand that Bro. D. Platner designs to attend the annual meeting at Syracuse, and as I am assured that he is "a man who will do to tie to always," I hereby appoint him as my delegate. I hope others who cannot be otherwise represented, will endorse this appointment, and address him to this effect at Mount Vernon, Linn Co., Iowa. And, at any rate, keep at work where you are, and keep looking to a state organization. Respectfully, A. D. Low.

Reform News.

—Bro. Caldwell, State Agent for Ohio, writes hopefully of the prospect for the State Convention at Flat Rock, Seneca county, May 19th, next Tuesday. Although the time for preparation is brief, yet the reformers of Ohio are not laggards. They will have, we hope, a meeting worthy the cause and the men who sustain it in that State. Rev. J. G. Carson, President of the National Association, Bishop Weaver, Rev. J. T. Kiggins, and others are expected. Conveyance will he ready at Bellview, the nearest railroad station, for the Convention.

—Elder Baird writes in a cheerful strain of the reform in Genesee county, Mich. The lodge has not silenced him yet.

—On every hand we he r of delegates to the National Convention One town in Illinois hopes to have five or more of its citizens there. The Wesleyan says, "Arrangements are in progress for the entertainment of a large delegation." None need stay at home on that account.

—The interview with Bishop Weaver reported hy Bro Stoddard was propitious. The presence of the Bishop would add power and wisdom to the Convention, as has that of Bishop Edwards, his colleague, during past years.

From the General Agent.

SPARTNSBURG, Pa., May 1, 1874.

After holding a number of meetings in Ohio, with more or less success, I came to this place on Saturday evening, where I was cordially received by Bro. Ketchum and other friends. Our earnest co-worker with whom I had corresponed had been suddenly called to Cleveland and I did not meet him until this P. M., when he returned. The pulpit in the Baptist church was occupied by Bro. Hurlburt, of Springfield, Pa., who is a man of superior ability and I believe of deep piety. His discourses, both morning and evening were plain, practical, and evidently came from a full, warm and loving heart. He showed me much kindness, and cordially invited me to visit him at his home and speak to his people, which I propose to do, God willing.

I preached in the Presbyterian church at 2:30 P. M., and have an appointment to lecture this evening. It is now at 6 P. M., raining, and the prospect is rather forbiding. I may remain in this county most of the week, should the way open faborably. On entering the cars at Russel station, Ohio, on Friday evening, I was happily surprised and much gratified to meet the ganial face and grasp the friendly hand of Bishop Weaver, who was on his way to fill appointments in Canada. It was cheering to meet such a man at any time and all the more when unexpected. The hours from seven to twelve passed rapidly, and when we parted I felt that I was greatly the Bishop's debtor, not only for good company, but for wise counsels. He expects to be at Syracuse, and some of us will be greatly disappointed if we do not hear from him in words to be remembered. I will try and report further of the work and friends in these parts, before leaving for New York.

J. P. STODDARD.

From Elder Baird.

MUNDY, Genesee Co., Michigan, April 27, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Having returned home from our conference, which was assembled at Middlefield, Ohio, April 8th to 12th, I adjusted matters and started for Linden, Mich., to deliver a course of lectures against secret societies Bro. J. P. Stoddard had been before me, and left a good, lively and wholesome spirit of agitation on this great and very important subject; and it will be a comfort to Bro. Stoddard to know that his labors under God have been signally owned in Linden in bringing one of the most influential citizens out from the lodge. Bro. Isaac M Ferguson, a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and also a merchant in Linden, has openly renounced his allegiance to the lodge, and daily, both in public and private, he is denouncing the ceremonies of the lodge room as the most degrading blasphemy. The friends of truth all have such confidence in Bro. Ferguson that it has brought the Linden lodge to dismay and there is no help for the "Widow's Son." The fraternity are fearfully and wonderfully mad; and the more they are spreading Masonic lies, the more they are opening people's eyes.

I delivered a course of lectures in the basement of the M. E. Chapel, to a full house the first evening, April 22, and a good audience on each of the two afternoons following, and had the best of order through all the meetings.

The people in Linden are preparing to organize and send a delegate to Syracuse. Bro. Ferguson feels just as I did after leaving the lodge, that God would hold him guilty if he did not speak out. I am satisfied he will be the man to appoint for State agent and lecturer.

After leaving Linden I was taken to Mundy Centre, by Bro. C. D. Hoyt, an old local preacher in the Michigan Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, and had a good home with him and his kind wife. I also spent one night in the good home of Bro. Nehemiah Countryman; and next morning I preached in the Hill School House, and in the evening at the Baptist Chapel at Mundy Centre. On Monday night, April 27, there was a full and attentive audience. They have but one member in the Baptist church who is a Freemason and he did his best in an underhanded way to keep the lecturer out of the church. Also Mr. Smith, the Baptist preacher, acted the part of a "Jack," although he professed to me to have no sympathy with secret societies, and did not belong to any, yet he acted in sympathy with them and in fear of them; so much so that he expressed himself to me that he did not feel safe to reprove it, as he said it cost Morgan his life; and yet he said that he wished to be on the right side of the question. But still his own members heard him say that if they did allow these agitations to continue the blood will flow down the street yet. Now you may judge of the Gospel courage of this man who preaches to the Baptist church at Mundy Centre, afraid to reprove iniquity, a herald of the Cross, a professed minister of Christ, afraid to rebuke Satan. "The fear of man bringeth a snare." Heaven deliver us from such a snare, and enable us to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free!"

ELDER J. R BAIRD.

Minutes of the Hamilton Co., Ind. Anti-secret Association.

The third semi-annual meeting of the Hamilton County Anti-secret Association met in the Wesleyan church, in Westfield, Ind., April 14th, 1874, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The business of the Association was preceded by reading the Scriptures and a season of prayer.

After reading the minutes of the preceding meeting, the following committees were appointed: On programme, J. W. Hiatt, Eber Peter and Wm. Talbert: On nominations of officers for the ensuing year, Peter Rich, George Teter, J. L. Fall and Absalom Ballard.

On resolutions, J. L. Fall, W. M. Givens and H. C. West.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee on programme reported the following order of business:

Report of committee on nominations; Report of committee on resolutions; Election of a delegate to the National Association; Discussion on political action; Report of Treasurer; Miscellaneous business;

The committee on nominations reported: For President, H. C. West; Treasurer, Peter Rich; Secretary, O. C. Lindley; Vice President, E. Teter, of Adams township, Wm. Talbert, of Clay Absalom Ballard, of Washington, Mr. Williams of White River, Arnett Stanford, of Wayne. Joseph Harmon, of Noblesville.

Report adopted. . . . . .

The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

Resolved, 1st, That we are as much as ever convinced of the deistical and anti-Christian character of Freemasonry and other secret societies which are its legitimate offspring.

2d. That we believe the wide-spread prevalence of dishonesty and corruption in society and politics to be the natural product of such organizations as bind their members to favor each other, by secret oaths and pledges; and we unhesitatingly adopt the language of Daniel Webster in saying, "That however unobjectionable may have been the original object of the institution, or however pure may be the motives and purposes of the individual members, and notwithstanding the many great and good men who have from time to time belonged to the order, yet, nevertheless, it is an institution, which, in my judgement is essentially wrong in the principles of its formation; that from its very nature it is liable to great abuses; that among its obligations, which are found to be imposed on its members, there are such as are entirely incompatiable with the duty of good citizens; and that all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm; are especially unfavorable to harmony and natural confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government. Under this conviction, it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths, and the formation of all such obligations, should be prohibited by law."

3d. That we hail with gratitude the rapid spread of light and truth on this subject, and the developement of an extensive sentiment against secret orders.

4th. We rejoice in the prosperity of the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the National Association; and we will do all in our power to extend its circulation.

5th. That we believe it to be the duty of all good citizens to withhold their support from any candidate for an office of trust or profit, who is bound by such oaths or pledges.

6th. We cannot recognize the authority of a Freemason to preach the gospel.

7th. We demand as our right as citizens that newspaper columns be kept open for the publication of both sides of the secrecy question. And that we unqualifidly condemn the readiness of many papers to become the trowels of the lodge with which to daub "lodge-mud" (slander) upon those who oppose the principles and practice of secretism.

8th. That it is our opinion, based on the authorities of the grange, that it is a trick of Freemasonry to tie the farmers from opposing it, and to swindle them out of money.

These resolutions were taken up seriatim, discussed and adopted. In the discussion of some of them the "Knights of the Lamb-skin," were roughly handled.

Rev. J. L Fall was elected a delegate to the National Association at Syracuse, N. Y. June 2d, 1874.

The following resolution was discussed and addopted. That it is the opinion of this convention that the time for political action, on the subject of secrecy has fully come, and that we call for a convention of the Anti secret voters of Hamilton county, to meet at the court-house in Noblesville, on the 22d of July, 1874, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the several county offices to be filled at the ensuing election.

EVENING SESSION.

Voted that copies of the proceedings of this Association be furnished the editors of the Noblesville Ledger and Christian Cynosure for publication in their papers. The Association then listened to a lecture from Rev. W. M. Givens on the subject of secrecy.

Adjourned.

Dupage County (Ill.) Association.

FROM THE SECRETARY.

The semi-annual meeting of the Dupage County Association, opposed to Secret Societies, was held in the College Chapel, Wheaton, May 6th. The meeting did not merit the title of a county meeting, and it is to be hoped that before the fall meeting occurs something will be done toward securing the co-operation of all in the county who are interested in the cause.

Mr. H. L. Kellogg, in a short address, gave a number of incidents illustrative of the workings of Masonry. Dr. J. B. Walker pronounced the efforts put forth in Wheaton entirely incommensurate with the demands of the cause. He thought one transaction that had taken place in Wheaton was sufficient to alarm its citizens. The man who for thirteen years had served the public faithfully and satisfactorily as post-master, had been recently removed without the knowledge of more than half a dozen citizens. When the citizens petitioned his reinstatement, the government promised to send a commission to investigate. hTe commission has not come, but it has been reliably ascertained that a few men who believe in working secretly on the square, have written to Washington that they only signed the petition for effect at home, and thus have undoubtedly succeeded in breaking the force of the petition and defeating the only fair means by which the government could ascertain the wishes of the people. Whatever the means employed to accomplish the results may have been, two things are certain, viz: the post-master was secretly removed, and the petition of the people was secretly defeated, after the government had once promised to send a commission.

The fact that a few men can by secret means defeat the wishes of the people is cause of alarm to every citizen. Rev. I. A. Hart and Mr. H. L. Kellogg were elected delegates to the Syracuse Convention.

Was John Wesley a Freemason?

KISHWAUKIE, Ill., April 27, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

Permit me to appear as a denominational partisan for only once. In the Cynosure, April 2d, your correspondent, Wm. Pinkney, under the caption, "Was John Wesley a Freemason," gives an affirmative answer from one of Wesley's sermons which he seems to think a confession that he (Wesley) had taken the oath of Freemasonry. On reading the article my mortification was inexpressible. . . . I felt to say this is worse than a blunder. If the writer be Wm. Pinkney, the respected Secretary of the Illinois Conference of Wesleyan church, I hope he will forgive me "without repentance." If he had waited till he had got his Wesleyan of April 1st he would have seen the matter forever set at rest by the pen of Stratton. Look for a moment at the confession of J. Wesley found in the sermon referred to: "Yea, are there not a multitude of you that are forsworn, I fear a swiftly increasing multitude? Be not surprised, brethren, before God and this congregation I own myself to be of the number solemnly swearing to observe all those customs which I think now nothing of, and those statutes which I then did not so much as read over, either then or years after. If this is not perjury," etc.

Here is first no mention of Freemasonry. To me it seems probable that, at the time referred to by Wesley, when the oath was taken which gave him pain in after years, speculative Freemasonry was so new that its demerits had never came under his consideration. Secondly; is it not almost certain that his regrets rested on his oath of office? I have read in the life of the Wesleys that John Wesley, the great grand-father of the John Wesley under review, held a disputation with the Bishop about taking the oath necessary to ordination. He would not take it but went to the Dissenters. In early life Samuel Wesley, John Wesley's father, was a Dissenter. Strange to say he was disgusted with the execution of Charles I. and went over to the Church of England. So now his sons, Samuel and John and Charles, found themselves members of that state church, and took in early life the prescribed obligations, so deeply regretted and repented of in after years. Was it not these same oaths of obligation that gave David Simpson, in his "Plea for Religion," so much disgust and sorrow, and were renounced till his dying day? Again, was it not in respect to these oaths that Arch-deacon Paley's loose subscription is so much blamed, that is, swearing to that which they did not believe?

Mr. Editor, for consistency's sake I hope that no lover of truth will believe that the man of God, John Wesley, who wore himself out to advance the cause of truth and righteousness, was ever involved in the wretched crimes of Freemasonry. If Freemasons, who say that the two Saint Johns, and even the great Master, were Freemasons, should claim John Wesley for a brother let them prate. It is of small account.

Yours for the love of truth, especially for the pious dead,

GEO. SOVERIGN.

BEMIS HEIGHTS, N. Y., May 1, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE: Pray make an opology for me to our friends, the United Presbyterians, to whom I have unwittingly given offense in your date of April 16th. I there stated that I had called on a U. P. minister, now pastor of a Presbyterian church, and had been refused his house of worship to lecture in, etc. Since that unfortunate statement I have received letters from Iowa and Ohio from U. P. friends boding no good to the gentleman referred to, or to myself if the statements I made was not true. I am glad our U. P. friends are so sensative on that point; but allow me to correct so far as this in this case, the pastor I spoke of, I have since learned, transferred his membership to the regular Presbyterian body when installed in our town a short time ago, and is therefore no longer a United Presbyterian. Thus much by way of of correction. Otherwise my statement was correct. I hope our U. P. friends will now let me rest awhile; but I am afraid that I shall have a worse story than that to tell by and by. If they fell so badly over the fact that one of their number—who has left them—refused me his pulpit, how will they feel if I should convict a large number of their pastors of the same offense? I fear I shall be compelled to do it. I am afraid there is some backsliding in these parts. Faithfully yours,

BARLOW.

From a Wisconsin Farmer.

We are allowed to extract the following from a letter to the General Agent:

I am hard at work every day of my life, and am working hopefully. I know that my position on secrecy is such that many would rejoice at my failure, but I hope to live in spite of my enemies; but I tell you that in a community like this where the churches are all in bondage, and where every form of secrecy is popular, it is a terrible spirit to arouse against you. A man may be angry at you and gradually soften in his feelings or he may possibly die or move away, but this cold gray eye of Masonry when once fixed upon you is never withdrawn; its hate never softens nor does it ever forgive.

I oppose it because I want to be faithful to God's truth, knowing that I must give account at the last great day. I believe that in the churches it poisons the very fountains of salvation, nor do I believe that a Christianity which can live in harmony and fellowship with it, is strong enough to save men. I blame the ministry for unfaithfulness, and I have once given those of my own denomination a pretty thorough handling.

Of course, they will never forgive me, but that does not matter, I believe I told them the truth. I expect the cause to succeed to the extent of casting the evil spirit out of the churches and with that I shall be content."

OUR MAIL.

Benj. R. Willets, Tipton, Ia., writes: "The new and attractive form of the Cynosure will assist in canvassing. . . Please send my commission in tracts, as they are of great assistance."

Jacob Schimerhorn, Rockport, Ind., writes:

"The tracts that I sent for came all right. I have distributed them and they caused quite a flattering among the gentlemen of the apron."

We thank you, and hope others who send subscribers for three months will retain a list of their names and, if possible, secure their renewals.

A. Showalter, Vermillion, Ill., writes: "This is a hard place to operate in. So many that profess to be with the cause are afraid to be seen with the Cynosure for fear it will injure them in their business. But I still keep trying."

Perhaps what Mr. Gallup, of Minnesota writes will encourage you.

W. Troup, Evansville, Ind., asks: "Is there any truth in the report of a new secret order, The Gentlemen of Honor?"

We have never heard of such an order.

John Clayton, Van Meter, Iowa, writes:

"I have never joined any order or sect. Never swore an oath of any kind, either civil or profane, and think it wrong to do so. The Scriptures forbid it. . . I have found that when men become perverted and wilfully lie, they will swear to it. So it is of no use to swear them on the Bible, or any thing else. I am an old man, seventy-three years old. . . Go on and do all the good you can, for without a reform our republic is about gone up."

A new reader of the Cynosure, a young man, writes:

"I was at my uncle's, Dea. Erastus Ellsworth, recently and took with me a copy of the Cynosure. He is eighty-four years old, and got his mind settled in regard to Freemasonry in the following manner. He was a merchant in New York at the time. An intimate friend, Leonard Bleeker, or, as he was called, 'old father Bleeker,' a Freemason before the Morgan excitement, said to him as they met on Wall St,

New York: 'I am a Freemason, and know what it is. This is a terrible excitement about the murder of Morgan. It is very bad business. I have no doubt about the murder of Morgan by Masons. I shall never have anything more to do with it.' His opinion was formed by his association with the lodge, previous to this excitement. He had left them. He added, 'You may depend upon it, Bro. Ellsworth, this [Freemasonry] is bad business.'"

Geo. L. Mason, Granville, O., writes:

"If any [of the Granville club] fail to renew I will get other names instead. You are doing a noble work, the extent of which will never be known in this world. Only to-day I learned of a Christian man in southern Ohio, who was saved from the lodge by one of my Cynosures sent him by a friend. So I thanked God and took courage."

John Hubbard, Freedom, Ill., writes:

"My heart is in the work, for God is in it."

Betsy G. Elliot, Fisherville, N. H., writes:

"I think it [the Cynosure] ought to be read by every family."

She sends her paper to friends to read when she has perused them, and is working for subscribers.

Rev. J. Martin, Lambertville, Mich., writes:

"I think the Cynosure a very excellent paper, and fully endorse its principles. I wish to be a perpetual subscriber."

We hope all former subscribers who had their names removed will feel as our friend P. Smith, Cedar Rapids, Ia., does. He writes:

"I have been doing without the paper for some time, but begin to feel the need of it, and I think this is the experience of most persons who read the paper carefully."

Harris Jenness, Bunkerhill, Ind., writes:

"I am for the anti-secret movement and true Christianity."

Jno. Ball, Ulster, Ia., writes a kind encouraging letter which closes with:

"Weary not for 'in due season" ye shall reap if ye faint not."

J. J. Emmes, Hammond, N. Y., writes:

"I am interested in the cause, and shall do all I can for its advancement."

J. Baldwin, Ransom, Mich., writes:

"The Masons say they never saw a paper so down on secret societies before."

T. F. Curry, N. Almond, N. Y., writes:

"I am much pleased with the paper enlargement, and will do all I can to advance the cause."

Martin S. Wood, Woodville, N. Y., writes that he became acquainted with the evils of Freemasonry over forty years ago when the Morgan affair occurred. He shows the importance of the Cynosure when he writes:

"Secret societies prevail all around here. It is hardly safe to say anything against them."

How long shall honest people who love equality and fairness be afraid to speak their sentiments? How long could we remain a free people if not allowed to advocate principles that we believe to be right?

John G. Round, Summerfield, O., writes:

"I will do all in my power to increase the [Cynosure] circulation here."

Wm. H. Linam, Pine Apple, Alabama, renews his subscription and writes of the Cynosure:

"I am well pleased with it."

We have only two subscribers in the whole state of Alabama. We hope they will do what they can to double the number of subscribers there. They have a great field to cultivate.

Wm. Talbert, Carmel, Ind., writes:

"Could you give through the Cynosure a political platform for counties to adopt? In this (Hamilton) county we expect to put a full county ticket in the field. I will do what I can to get the additional 5,000 subscribers. I believe the cause will succeed, for God is in it."

The platform of our National Association, which has been published several different times in the Cynosure is published again elsewhere. With slight alterations this would be suitable for county political platforms.

H. T. Slaughenhaupt, York Springs, Pa., writes:

"The contest has commenced here and is being crowned with many good results. I am trying to get new fields opened in Maryland, and have bright anticipations of success there."

J. M. Bryant, Bethany, Mo., sends four new subscriptions and two renewals and writes:

"May the very best of success attend your great enterprise."

Joel Seger, Earlville, Iowa, writes:

"I have now sent you seven new subscribers, and wish that I could send you seven hundred. I think I shall get some more. I am poor yet rich in faith, crowding my three score years and ten."

He writes that he had used tobacco for fifty years, but through repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ, he obtained a victory over his love for it. Now he has no appetite whatever for tobacco. He says, "I asked and believed and he answered."

H. H. Lingo, Ozark, O., writes:

"I have succeeded in breaking the ice at last. I have got four men to muster courage enough to have the Cynosure come to the office in their names. There are dozens who are as eager to read the Cynosure as hungry wolves to flay a sheep, if the craft don't know it. I do not think my bread would taste right or digest well without the Cynosure."

Solomon Vergason, Candor, N. Y., writes us that he has been sorely afflicted in the loss of his wife. She died after a distressing sickness, of the dropsy.

C. P. Miller, Dewitt, Ia., writes:

"I like the Cynosure and will do all I can to sustain it."

John W. Searing, Dover, N. Y., writes:

"Your work is of God, and I am with you, battling for the truth."

Chester Williams, Waterport, N. Y., writes:

"I mean to scatter all the light that I can and shall continue to do so, praying that the good Lord will bless the truth and destroy the works of the devil."

Jas. Barningham, Apple River, Ill., writes:

"Send on my paper as usual, and consider me a life subscriber."

Henry Fry, Grant City, Mo., writes:

"I intend to take your paper as long as I am able to read it. . . . I will also send some new subscribers, as I have the promise of some."

James Auten, Galion, O., sends nineteen three-months subscribers, two of whom will act as Cynosure agents."

Merchant Kelly, Bentonville, Ind., writes:

"I am very anxious to hear from Elder Baird."

We received a few words from him written at his home recently.

Joseph Kimler, Jacksonburg, O.:

"I like the tone of the Cynosure. I wish its advocates great success through Jesus Christ in waging a constant and effectual warfare against the strongholds of secretism, and all other rings that are engaged in the unfruitful works of darkness. I expect to get more subscribers for the Cynosure, as we need just such a paper here in this section of country were Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers are almost as numerous as were the locusts in ancient Egypt."

James West, Albany, Mo.:

"The Anti-masons are very numerous in this part of the State of Missouri. The best and most substantial men in Gentry county are Anti-masons, and the cause is rapidly gaining ground."

Sam'l Harper, New Concord O., writes:

"I will try to get you more subscribers. I think it, (the Cynosure) is the most useful paper published."

The following letter shows that one cannot know how much he may be doing to extend the circulation of the Cynosure by sending in even one subscriber. The person who obtained Mr. Ulsh's subscription indirectly obtained many more subscribers.

Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"I will tell you how I became acquainted with you and your paper. Rev. E. Hover gave me two Cynosures and a few tracts. I read them, but could not believe them to be true, as I had some notion prior to this to join the lodge. I read a good deal about the Morgan murder but could not believe it, till old Mr. Elias McClure, (a worthy citizen and neighbor,) came to our house, and in conversation told many things about Masonry, (he is a truthful man.) I was then taking the paper, as your agent, E. Hover, had it sent to me one year. The second year I got S. R. Hoffman to take it, (our old school teacher, a learned man.) The third year I got Rev. W. P. Wells and S R. Hoffman to subscribe for it, and I sent the paper free to Rev. Isaac W. Loman, so there were four of us taking the paper. I liked the sentiments its columns contained, although the paper was small and only come once in two weeks, yet the cause it defended is good, and I thought I would try and get readers for it. I have got the names of sixty two subscribers from December, 1873, to May 1st, 1874. Many of them like the paper very well, and some do not like it so well, but if they all will read the paper carefully for three or six months, and get living witnesses (many can be found), to prove that these things are true, I am satisfied they will all like the paper. It is true there is a strong element against light and truth, but if the people only will read and keep their eyes open, (not blindfolded,) I am satisfied the result will be good. Yours for the cause of Christ."

Samuel French, Chapin, Morgan Co., Ill., sends forty one six-months subscribers, and writes:

"After receiving the blank you sent me wishing me to try and get some new subscribers, I thought I would try my hand a little. I soon found the blank was too small. I wish that every family in the United States had the paper to read. I think we would see better times every way, in the church and State. I would not do without it for the price of a good fat steer a year. It is a dark corner here, although they call it the Athens of the west. I wish we had a good lecturer in Jacksonville, all it wants is to get the ball rolling. We have been stirring it up in Bethel some this winter till we have got it hot in the lyceum. God I am sure will bless this work. All the people want is light on these secret works of darkness to away with them from the land. I could get many more subscribers if I had time. I hope many others will do much more."

John R. Dops, Norton, Kas., writes:

"I live in a very new place, it has only been settled about one year. . . My heart is fully in the cause that the paper supports."

Moses Gallup, Wasioga, Minnesota, writes:

"At first I could not get one subscriber for the paper. But after giving papers and sending books, I began to get subscribers. But for three months only. Yet all say, 'I shall probably continue the paper right along.' I will look after them for you."

Forty Years Ago.

The Boston Telegraph, 1831, in remarking on the evils connected with the caucus system, says of another feature of public meetings:

"Allied to this principle is that of choosing officers of any society from the report of a nominating committee. There is no more propriety in this, than there would be to invest a committee with authority to appoint all the officers of a society upon their own responsibility. It is a matter of delicacy to reject a nomination, and any gentleman reported for office by a committee, is, of course, sure to be chosen. Such a choice, therefore, is not the choice of the society, but that of the committee. It is owing to such management as this that the convention of Congregational ministers is now made to throw the weight of its influence in favor of Freemasonry, by chosing a Royal Arch Mason for its second preacher, and one, too, who had publicly averred that he would sooner confide in the justice of Freemasons than in that of the church. The nomination was made, either wittingly or unwittingly, in the Pastoral Association by a committee raised for that purpose; and we presume that not one in ten who voted for the candidate, aside from the committee, was acquainted with the fact. It is owing to a similar system of management in another society, which we forbear to name, that individuals are now pushed forward as its most prominent members who opposed its organization to the very last; while others, who took the deepest interest, and exerted themselves most indefatigably to bring it into operation, are entirely disregarded. We stated these facts, not invidously, but from a regard to justice; and from the firm belief that when the truth and love of the truth universally prevail, mankind will cease to trample upon the rights of others.

LESSON XXI.—MAY 24, 1874.—ISRAEL'S UNBELIEF.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—NUM. xiv. 1-10.

Commit 1-10 ; Primary Verse, 8.

1 And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried ; and the people wept that night.

2 And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron : and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt ! or would God that we had died in this wilderness !

3 And wherefore hath the Lord brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey ? were it not better for us to return unto Egypt ?

4 And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return unto Egypt.

5 Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel.

6 And Joshua, the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, rent their clothes :

7 And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to search it, is an exceeding good land.

8 If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us. a land which floweth with milk and honey;

9. Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land ; for they are bread for us ; their defense is departed from them, and the Lord is with us : fear them not.

10 But all the congregation bade stone them with stones. And the glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation before all the children of Israel.

How to Keep Big Boys in the Sabbath School.

The girls are not so likely to slip out as the boys. Account for it as you please, this is a conceded fact. Now, what can we do to keep the large boys in the Sabbath-school? There are many other means which may be suggested, but we shall, in this article, only advert to four things:

1. Seek their conversion. Let us have more faith in the conversion of little children, and labor for this result. God will bless such efforts, and then we shall not mourn over the departure of the big boys. They will all stay in the Sabbath-school, if they are true disciples of Jesus.

2. Make all the exercises intensely interesting. Let superintendents, in the opening and closing exercises, and in the entire conduct of the school, keep their eyes upon these youth. Let teachers study to illustrate the lesson, and in every way to interest these restless but very important people who are just entering manhood. Never ridicule them. This they cannot endure. Don't treat them like children. This they regard as an unpardonable offense. A little effort may keep them in school, and thus, perhaps, secure their future welfare and usefulness. But let the efforts be very easy and natural. These big boys require effort, but they don't want to see you put forth a special effort to interest them. The truth is, no one relishes this.

Talk to them about reading. Recommend to them some good book. Draw out their knowledge. Ask them occasionally to come and see you, and be sure, when they do come, to receive them cordially. When you meet them in the street too, or elsewhere, recognize them, and give them a real hearty shake of the hand.

3. Give them something to do. This is a very important injunction, and it is not easy to say just what the work should be. This each teacher or superintendent must determine for himself. Some of the manly boys may do good service in the library. One might be secretary. Each class should have a treasurer, and the most restive boy in the class, perhaps, could fill this office efficiently. There is nothing like work to sober fractious horses, or fast growing young men.

4. Not forgetting the other points, let us add a fourth. Every church school should have an adult department. There is very much in a name. The word adult is small, but it represents a large thing. It means grown up. It is true the boys are not mature in mind, but they are large in body. Their voices are changed. They are strong and active, and it is as well to encourage them in their reaching out to manliness, as to put a stone on their heads and try to keep them back in their boyhood. The Bible class does not always attract these young men. The fact is, all the classes in the Sabbath-school are Bible classes. Even in the primary department, the children who cannot read are taught the Bible, and, in the intermediate department, the Bible is the great text-book. So, to distinguish the older ones, let there be an adult department.

In our church school we have about one hundred persons connected with the adult department. They hold their session in the body of the church. One of the best teachers in the intermediate department lately informed the superintendent that his big boys were getting very restless. They liked him, but they did not like their surroundings. The fact was they felt that they were among little people. So we had them transferred to the adult department. Now they are quite contented, and the class of six or seven has increased to twelve, and will very likely soon roll up to twenty.—S. S. Times.

Making and Managing a Cistern.

I have for many years made the supply of pure water a specialty, and I have not sunk a well during the past thirteen years, though I have supplied a large number of places with water in that period.

The cistern, when properly constructed, I consider the most reliable, and the most desirable, everything considered, of all means of supply. Certain precautions are, however, as necessary to observe, in the arrangements for obtaining the water, and for preserving it in purity, and to maintain in it a proper temperature, as other precautions are in obtainieg water from other sources of supply. Prominent among the former are the following:

Water should not be collected for drinking or culinary purposes from painted wooden or painted metal roofs, nor from such as are frequented by birds of any kind. I prefer, first, the slate roof, next the shingle, Water from a tile roof, would, no doubt, be good, but there are none in use in my field of operation, which comprises nine States.

The foliage of trees should not be allowed to collect and remain in gutters of buildings from which the water is to be collected and used.

In localities in which the roof is liable to collect much dust, from excessively traveled earth, or even McAdam roads, the spoutings should be supplied with what I call a waste shoe, which is an ajustable section of the pouting near the ground, which is to be set during a drouth, so that the first rain-fall succeeding a dusty period will waste, and not flow into the cistern.

I have, however, some among my numerous patrons, who may be considered rather fastidous, who will have the filter.

There are circumstances where the filter is necessary, and in such cases I supply them of my favorite kind—in fact, the only kind I build of late. I will briefly describe my filter: I build up in cement mortar a brick wall of soft, or "salmon bricks," the width of a brick in thickness, which bisects the cistern, and is securly stayed in place. Neither face of the filter wall is plastered with cement, as the principle of the filter consists in causing all the water to flow through the brick wall, which it will do if the surface is that of a cross section of an ordinary cistern, with a rapidity equal the amount drawn in a given time by an ordinary pump. A filter more perfect is not desirable.—Canada Farmer.

How to Make Grafting Wax.

Thomas Matteson, McKean county, Pennsylvania, writes: "Take two parts mutton tallow, three parts beeswax, melt tallow first, and put the beeswax and resin into it. When it is all melted, stir it all up and pour it into cold water and work it over. If there are lumps in it, mash them with your thumb and fingers. The longer you work it the more sticky it grows. When it begins to stick to your hands put some tallow on them. Put it in a tin pan with a cover to it, and it will keep for a number of years. I think it is as good as sticking salve to put on any sores. Some put in more tallow than they put in resin or beeswax, to make it softer to work in cold weather; but if there is too much in it, it will melt and run out in warm weather. I have had about forty years' experience in grafting, and used a number of sorts of grafting wax. Some people put it in hot water, and make more trouble than there is need of I wet my finger with my tongue, and do not find any difficulty in putting the wax on the graft.

Rolling the Ground.

A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph writes: "On dry or wet ground the effect of the roller in found to be salutary. Ploughed and prepared for sowing, dry land is much helped by the roller. The blades of grass spring up sooner and retain a firmer hold in the earth. In a season of drought, rolling has saved the crop, when without it the seed would have never sprung from the ground. In wet and heavy ground it is believed the roller smoothing and hardening the surface, will leave the soil immediately beneath the surface in a better condition to generate the seed. On grass ground that has been heaved by the frost, the roller has an excellent effect in fixing the roots. Rolling the ground is also good when the land has been laid down unevenly the previous year. If the land is too dry, wait till just after a soaking rain, and it will work capitally. It is a good idea to roll ploughed sowed ground before harrowing. as it presses down the furrows that would be turned back, and makes the surface less uneven and the harrow pulverizes it much. We find that on an average not one farmer in four has a roller."

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, May 14, 1874.

Reform Politics again.—Since in last week's number we advocated national nominations at Syracuse, three persons whose judgment we greatly respect have urged reasons why we should not nominate till another year. The Cynosure will on all questions of mere method, go with the majority when that shall be fully and fairly ascertained. It is urged that no good man wishes to stand as a national "target" longer than is strictly needful; that after the nominations are made, the enemy leaves the principle and assails the man; and that when we have put our candidates in the feld, we lose our influence over the hopes and fears of politicians. Still, the preponderance of argument seems to us in favor of the views presented last week. But in this war "Our help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth."

OUR CORPORATE NAME.

The National Committee had a long and most earnest discussion over the name of our incorporation than on any other topic. All were agreed that there must be nothing done to tone down the National organization or temper it to the taste of trimmers. We all thought our wisdom and duty was to put ourselves forever out of the fellowship of adhering Masons, precisely because we intend to put them eternally out of our fellowship, both in church and state. No one wished to soften the features of our association toward the resolved minions of the lodge.

But a majority of the committee finally thought, that we had better omit "opposed to secret societies," from the title of our association, and put it into the first article of the Constitution, because it seemed desirable to avoid the long title, National Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies;" because that long title did not define the character of the Association aright, we being as Christians opposed to other evils besides secret societies; and because we are, and mean to be, "the regular line," while all other bodies harboring those fundamental evils which are sure to subvert society, are and ought to be regarded as limited, local, vicious opposition and dissent.

If the Bible be not a cunningly devised fable, the establishment of a religious order or worship, which leaves out Christ, is a clean and utter subversion of the constitution of society ordained of God. As there is, or can be no way of access to God but through Christ, though ignorance may be pardoned, purposed insult cannot; and omitting Christ from the lodge to take in his enemies is purposed insult,—is anti-Christ. The lodge, therefore, has in it no true basis of moral obligation, and no reason why one thing should be done or omitted more than another, but force or terror. Christianity is its antagonist.

THE CHICAGO TIMES ON OUR INCORPORATION.

"The National Christian Association of 'Cook county' has taken out a certificate of organization at Springfield, and is at once going into operation. Its business is the somewhat extended one of putting down secret societies. Of course, church business meetings can no longer be held, for they are secret. The Presbyterian council engaged in trying Swing can no longer go into secret session without bringing down on it the wrath of Philo Carpenter and that of the N. C. A. of Cook county. Politicians can no longer meet in conclave; families must hold their consultations in public; and even the N. C. A. of Cook county must always meet with open doors in order to be true to its own intentions. Now is about to dawn that happy period when everybody will know everybody else's business, and Philo Carpenter will find all things serene."

The above paragraph, clipped from the Chicago Times, reminds us of the remarks of Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, or one of his critics, who, he said, "manifested the superficiality of an immense ignorance." If the "Presbyterian Council" had summoned Mr. Swing to a secret trial before men sworn to have their throats cut if they revealed what was said and done to him; and sworn, not by the oath of the merciful God, but by oaths of vengeance and mutilation; if they had exacted his consent to be thus butchered and mutilated, not as a trial for crime, but as a term of membership in their clan; if they had sworn him by these cut-throat oaths into a religious "order" which is not Christianity, to obey laws which are not those of our Republic, binding him to abject submission to a "Master," to be taxed without limit except the discretion of this "lodge," and to be punished without known redress; and if, believing himself swindled and imposed upon, he should dare to resent their insult and assert his manhood, to be haunted to his grave by more than Spanish vengeance; if such a Presbytery were trying Mr. Swing, then the Times' parallel would hold, and Mr. Story would have known nothing of the trial unless he was one of the gang: and in that case he would be sworn to say nothing about it in his paper, though he knew Mr. Swing to be unjustly tried, sentenced and executed!

But the impudence of harlots is proverbial; and Freemasonry is a harlot. Neither Mr. Carpenter nor any of his associates in the National Christian Association ever condemned the lodge because, like the family, it conceals its own affairs; but because its affairs are crime like. Because, whoredom, concubinage and banditti, it conceals crime; is itself crime and imposition. There are men alive to-day who knew when Morgan was murdered, and contributed money to help off his murderers, though the worst of them died soon and ignominiously. These are concealers of his murder to day, and accessories after the fact. If Masons kill another Morgan they must conceal that also. And the brethren of low degree, who know but little of Masonry and care nothing but for the selfish ends it serves, are yet part and parcel of the great secret conspiracy against the Christian religion and popular government, as truly so as the Times was party to the slavery rebellion when Burnside issued his order to suppress it; or the Tory cotton loan of England which gave that rebellion character and money, though with only the motives of buzzards, namely, prey.

OUR SECRETS ARE THE COMBINATION LOCK AND KEY TO OUR SAFE.

One of the most taking apologies of secret orders, for their secrecy, is the comparison of the lodge to a bank or an extensive joint stock company, and their secrets to the combination lock which protects the common treasure. "We have common funds," say they; "Our secrets are the key or the combinations of the lock which protect those funds, from them who have no right to them, while they enable the rightful owners to gain access to that which is their own."

This comparison is entirely fallacious. It confounds social with individual secrecy. No one disputes the right of the individual to keep his private thoughts and business which interferes with the business and rights of no one else, to himself. And yet even that secrecy has its limits, beyond which neither God nor society allows the individual to go. When men meditate in their hearts, and practice even secretly that which is lovely and useful to their fellows, it is natural that they should be more than willing to have all the world know it. When they meditate or do that which is injurious and disgraceful, it is just as natural that they should spare no effort to keep it a profound and perpetual secret. Hence society demands of every individual member credible evidence that his intentions are innocent and kind, sufficient evidence to allay all reasonable suspicion of evil intent. Unnecessary secrecy is always regarded as a good ground for suspicion. Hence when a man hides his means and his business so that no means of an honest livlihood are visible, he is often compelled to disclose his secrets or be declared a vagrant, and treated as a dangerous character. If in his attempt to show that his secrecy covers no evil he is found to equivocate, or falsify, or deal in subtle sophistry, suspicion at once ripens into settled conviction that he is one who shuns the light because his deeds are evil. Let us then examine this plea of the combination lock and see if it is not indeed a subtle sophistry and nothing else.

First, the lock with its key and combinations is not intended to conceal any secret from the community touching the operations of the corporation to which it belongs. It rather reveals to all men the fact that in the safe or room so guarded, the money and valuables of the company are kept.

Again, the members or stockholders are usually as ignorant of the whereabouts of the key and the combinations of the lock, as anybody else. Neither do they ever draw their dividends by means of any such secret knowledge; nor by any secret whatever. The very reverse of this is the truth. Neither the key nor combination numbers are given to them, but to the special individual custodian or custodians, to protect the treasury against all the world, stockholders as well as others. This is a personal secret therefore, and not a social one. Instead of having access to the moneys which belong to them by secrets, held by the shareholders in common, they are debarred all such access to the funds as from a method fraught with danger and ruin of the whole concern. Such a method would be one of corruption adapted to turn shareholders into thieves and the richest corporations into bankrupts. The funds of monied associations and the rights of the shareholders are secure in proportion to the openness in which all their business is transacted. In honest and safe business associations all disbursements are based upon some recorded action of the proper authorities, such as is accessible to whom it may concern, and would furnish sufficient evidence to vindicate the transaction in a court of justice. Here is open and reliable dealing; a written order recorded in an open book, making all the parties amenable to puplic sentiment, and amenable to public justice. Does any such amenability pertain to the key and combination lock of secretism? a curious method truly to secure the funds of an association by making half a million duplicates of the key and attaching the combination numbers to it and putting one into the hands of half a million men of every shade and grade of opinion and character. What sort of protection to the funds in the safe would keys and combination numbers thus distributed furnish?

But such is the protection which Masonic and Oddfellow secrets give to their funds. Their "black books" are the proof of this. Knaves get their key and appropriate their funds. Some of them are detected, and posted in their journals, to say nothing of the grandees who are allowed free access and no questions asked; or of the innocent men whose names are inserted in their black book from the spirit of Masonic vengeance. The pretence that their secrets are necessary for the protection of their funds, if it be not designedly false, is manifestly a perfect fallacy, and itself justifies us in feeling that we have assurance that those secrets, instead of securing to their orders and their members their pecuniary rights, do but conceal from the eyes of men things which cannot bear the light. Instead of protecting rights, they cover wrongs.

NEGATIVE HERESY.

The Great Condenser of truth gives the ground and sentence of the final utter ruin of the lost in the sentence, "In as much as ye did it not.' This is as true of teaching as of acting. The omitted truths ruin the Gospel, and omitted discipline the church. When once a brood of religious teachers creep into the church by retailing the ideas which holy men have established by toil, self-denial and suffering, having no depth in themselves the people tire of the weak platitudes which they vent, and then invention is put on the rack to solve the problem how to keep up an excellent appearance of instruction with nothing to teach, and how to keep people supporting a ministry who do them no good. Then comes swarming the tricks and contrivances of ecclesiastical montebanks: fishing rods and red plush vests, jockey caps, fast horses, base denunciation of the fag ends of old "confessions," "et id omne genus." These attract the gapers and starers, and the full audience pleases trustees. Then a prosecution for heresy is a God-send. Christ is sold; souls made merchandise of, and Rev Mr. Byends is "The pulpit sensation of the day." What of the end?

REFORM PLATFORMS.

What Political Action Should be taken at Syracuse?

Dr. Leonard Bacon is highly commended by a leading political paper for a letter addressed to Hon. W. W. Phelps, of New Jersey, in which he stated that both the Democratic and Republican parties are dying, and calls for a consultation of men of both parties on the currency question, broadly intimating that this will be the fundamental issue of the future.

A correspondent sends a political platform to the Christian Statesman saying, "What we insist upon, therefore, is that the millions of Christian people shall cease to vote for candidates simply because they are nominees." He draws up the outline of a platform for Christian voters as follows:

1. The Religious Amendment of the Constitution should be adopted by the people, and its principles clearly incorporated into the body of that fundamental law.
2. The State constitutions must be made to correspond in these respects to the Federal.
3. There should be such moral or religious constitutional tests that no man can be eligible to office who is not possessed of those qualifications which are undeniably required by the divine law.
4. There must be radical reform in the legislation and administration of the government.

As illustrations, or rather instances of these, mention may be made of the following:

(1.) Pagan idolatry shall be forever prohibited. No Joss-house, with its pagan idols, shall ever be tolerated.
(2.) Wholesome Sabbath laws, based upon the law of Christianity, preventing the desecration of the Sabbath day, should be enacted and enforced by the Federal Government and by all the States. Congress and the legislatures should strictly forbid Sabbath violation by the post office department, by railroads, steamboats, or any chartered companies or institutions.
(3.) The exclusion of the Bible, or the divorce of religion from the schools, shall never be permitted.
(4.) An anti-Scriptural form of oath of office, or in the courts, must not be substituted for that of divine appointment.
(5.) The elective franchise should be secured to woman:
(a.) As a matter of right.
(b.) For her own education and good.
(c.) For the sake of the country, which needs her help.
(6.) The manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks for common use shall be forever prohibited by law.
(7.) Arbitration by a Congress of nations should be substituted for war; and any nation resorting to the sword should be outlawed by all civilized nations.
(8.) The Scriptural law by which capital punishment is justly inflicted upon the murderer, should be rigidly enforced. Legislatures have no right to revoke or suspend any divine law. But the divine Lawgiver says: "The murderer shall surely be put to death."
(9.) The laws of Christian marriage shall be strictly enforced by all the States, and by the Federal Government, in all the territories, i. e., to Mormon marriage and unchristian divorce, no license must be given.
(10.) No charter must be given to secret oath-bound societies, such as Jesuits and Freemasons.

In connection with this read the platform on which Anti-masonic candidates were nominated in 1872 which Prof. J. R. W. Sloane said, substantially, that it would be a platform of the future:

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen Government, and that this fact should be recognized in its organic law.
2. That God requires, and man needs, a Sabbath.
3. That the prohibition of the importation and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.
4. That charters of Masonic lodges, granted by our Federal and State Legislatures must be withdrawn and their oaths suppressed; and
5. That all secret lodges, orders, or clans affecting independence of our Government, and practically claiming that their principles and rules are more sacred and binding than the laws of the land, are treasonable, dangerous and destructive of our liberties, Legislatures and Courts.

We hold also to the following condensed collation and synopsis of the various platforms now before the American people, viz:

1. The civil equality of men secured by our amended Constitution.
2. Peace and arbitration of differences with nations.
3. Reciprocal free trade with nations, modified by a discriminating revenue tariff, until our national debt is paid.
4. No repudiation; maintenance of the public credit.
5. Protection and justice to Indians.
6. Protection to loyal citizens, whether at home or abroad, and amnesty to rebels when they cease to be such.
7. Abolition of the franking privilege and reduction of postage, and elections of postmasters by the people.
8. Discouragement of land and other monoplies.
9. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

[Signed.] DAVID EDWARDS, Chairman.
O. F. LUMRY, Secretary.

Shall we not be prepared to adopt a platform ta Syracuse, nominate candidates and then work as efficiently as we can in organizing the States for a strong campaign against secret conspiracies which defraud citizens of just rights?

MONMOUTH COLLEGE, A CORRECTION.—In the Cynosure of July 10th, 1873, and in the second chapter of the College Society series now appearing, it is implied and stated that the "Kappa Phi Delta" fraternity had an organization at Monmouth College. We are glad for the institution and the truth's sake, to publish the following from Pres. Wallace on this point. In the information originally given to Prof. C. A. Blanchard there was probably some misunderstanding:—

MONMOUTH, Ill.

DEAR BROTHER: In the last issue of the Cynosure in the second chapter respecting "College Secret Societies" appears the following sentence: "At Monmouth College, Moumouth, Illinois, the Kappa Phi Delta administers two oaths." In relation to this statement I desire to offer two or three remarks:

1. There is no society here by the name of "Kappa Phi Delta;" and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, never has been.

2. There is no oath-bound fraternity in Monmouth College, and has not been for years; of the correctness of this statement I am well assured.

3d. I believe that attempts have been made to establish two (2) oath-bound fraternities here, and possibly more, but they failed because they were oath-bound. The oaths which you quote may have been used by one of these. Yours fraternally,

DAVID A. WALLACE.

The Articles of Incorporation of the National Christian Association.

Whereas, The undersigned citizens of the United States, Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard, Archibald Wait, I. A. Hart, C. R. Hagerty, E. A. Cook, J. G. Terrill, O. F. Lumry, J. P. Stoddard, H L Kellogg, E. S. Cook, Jesse B. Blank, propose to form themselves into a corporation, not for pecuniary profit, under the act of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois, entitled an act concerning corporations; approved, April 18th, 1872.

Therefore, This is to certify that:

First; The name of said corporation shall be the National Christian Association.

Second; Its business and object shall be to expose, withstand, and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved, to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption.

Third; The number of its directors shall be eleven.

NOTES.

—It is said that Lorenzo Dow, the eccentric preacher, was a Freemason, and was buried by the fraternity in Georgetown, Maryland, in 1834.

—It must be announced with great satisfaction that Mr. Charles W. Green, Secretary of the National Agricultural Congress has consented to be present at Syracuse and address the National Convention on the grange question. Few have had better opportunities for investigating the nature and working of the "farmer's order," and few are more determined and faithful in their opposition to its swindling operations. It will be worth taking some trouble to hear him.

—The articles of incorporation of the National Association published this week, were obtained by the Executive Committee after long waiting and patient labor. After all was got in order and the document sent to the State capital for official endorsement, Secretary of State, Harlow, turned it over to the Attorney-General, in doubt whether he had "power to issue a certificate." Very likely his uncertainty lay in the direction of the lodge, of which it is believed he is a member. His scruples were overcome, however, and the papers are made out.

—Beside Mr. Green, mentioned above, the following well known speakers are expected at the National Anniversary: Elder David Bernard, President J. Blanchard, Bishop Weaver, J. P. Stoddard, John Levington, A. Crooks, L. N. Stratton, J. L. Barlow, B. T. Roberts, J. T. Kiggins, I. A. Hart, C. A. Blanchard, D. P. Rathbun, Z. Weaver, J. K. Atwood, W. M. Givens, and we hope numerous others who have not yet reported. The Ohio State Convention, to meet at Flat Rock, Seneca county, May 19th, will send one or more, and a number of auxiliary associations and churches of New York, Pennsylvania and the New England States will be represented.

—The New York Witness has been doing good service lately, in publishing letters upon the various phases of the secret orders. Of course some of the unwise of the secretists, that is, those who knew not enough to be quiet, have replied; so both sides have a fair hearing. But the arguments are so much against them that the society men are backing out in the following crawfish style:

DALLAS CENTRE, Iowa, April 21. '74

JOHN DOUGALL—Dear Sir:—I shall not want the Weekly Witness after the time expires for which it is paid. If you would let Odd-fellows, Masons and other good societies alone, your paper would have a good circulation here. As it is, we don't want it. With respect, T. W. FERGUSON.

Corner-stone Laying.

BY J. L BARLOW.

DEAR EDITORS:—So the plot is hatched; the fiat has gone out, and the nation is to be disgraced; the feelings of all true republicans outraged, and the hearts of all true Christians wrung with shame, that an order may be honored and exalted above all other in the land, whose very existence is a conspiracy against the rights of all who do not wear its livery—a menace to our republican institutions, and a spreading poison to our common Christianity! How dare a United States Secretary insult a whole nation by lending his sanction, and thus compromising the authority of the government? The corner-stone of the Chicago post office to be laid on St. John's Day by the Grand Master of Masons! Bah!!

Will freemen and Christians never stop to ask themselves, Why do we thus allow ourselves to follow the lead of a set of men whose enormous pretensions, gorgeous insignia of rank, foreign to our republican ideas and surroundings, and military array, thus assume superiority to all others? Are they, indeed, by any Divine or human right our masters, that they thus come to the front on occasions of this kind, elbowing aside National and State, as well as religious officials, who, if any one, should lead at such work? What is this institution which claims the place of honor at such times, and to place its insignia and its illegal and anti-Christian date on the corner-stone of public buildings erected and paid for by the money of all the people?

These are pertinent questions, and should have an answer in the minds of the people while yet the people retain the power to act intelligently and safely upon the matter. By every such affair as that contemplated in Chicago, our public officials, and the people, so far as they fall in with and consent to it, are helping to build up and sustain this illegitimate and aspiring religio-political power, and soon, if they do not stop, will enthrone it as a despotism over them which they can shake off only at the cost of a bloody revolution.

Let Chicago and all the Northwest protest against the contemplated insult. Where are the petitions in circulation last fall? Send them out again all over the land. The whole people are concerned. Let them have a chance to protest. Bring them up to our National meeting and let us do what we may to put a stop to the encroachments and flaunting displays of this make-up of heathenism, perverted Judaism and travestied Christianity. We, at least, who know what is is, cannot with innocence remain silent, when Masonry thus do us its uniform and arms itself for such a purpose before the public. Let no conviction of our weakness or impotence prevent our doing our duty. Public opinion is yet a power in the land, and is itself subject to influences. Let our influence be brought to bear upon it in every legitimate way and at every favorable opportunity. This is what Masonry itself is doing by just such displays. She comes before the eye of public opinion covered with tinsel and glittering array, clad in robes borrowed of benevolence and piety, with which to cheat and delude the unwary. Be it ours to strip off the usurped garments and show the grinning skeleton beneath.

The Home Circle.

He Remembereth.

Dear Lord, of all the words of thine
Which for our comfort ring and shine
Through sacred air, on sacred page,
From sacred lips in every age,
No one has brought such blessed cheer
To me,—no one is half so dear,
No one so surely cometh home
To every soul, as this which from
A pure heart wrung with sorrow came,
"For he remembereth our frame."

Not merely that he can forgive,
And for his love's sake bid us live
When we in trespasses and sins
Are dead—but that our weakness wins
From him such pity as alone
To fathers' yearning hearts is known:
Such pity that he even calls
Us sons, and in our lowest falls
Sees never utter hopeless shame,
"For he remembereth our frame."

Dear Lord, to thee, a thousand years
Are as a day, with contrite tears
One prayer I pray! My little life,—
Its good, its ill, its grief, its strife,—
Oh, let it in thy holy sight,
Like empty watches of a night
Forgotten be! And of my name,
Dear Lord, who knowest all our fame,
Let there remain no memory
Save of the thing I longed to be!

Card-Playing Christians.

Hannah More, describing the assemblies of one of her friends, says, "She keeps out dunces, because she never has cards." Considered simply in the light of a pastime, card-playing seems the pettiest and most contemptible of occupations; while as a means of gain it is one of the most dangerous agents of evil. To be an expert card-player requires no exertion whatever of intelect, only a certain sort of sharpness which is the very reverse of intellectual. The most illiterate boatman on the canal, or the most ragged gamin in the alleys, may shuffle his pasteboard as deftly and profitably as the keenest politician or the finest lady of fashion. The only difference is, that while the former gamble with coarse and grimy implements, the latter do their spiritings with gay and fanciful toys.

Cards are probably an invention of the fourteenth century, as in 1373 three packs were ordered to be made for the amusement of an insane king, Charles the Sixth, of France. Thence they soon made their way to other countries, carrying with them an ever-evil influence; and from the time of Henry the Seventh, of England, "cardes and dyce" were mentioned as being a great blot on the manners of the English people. Some of the German Reformers complained that this love of gambling had caused people to forget all honorable pursuits.

Cards were a delightsome resource to the Romish monks in their rookeries, where, in the diurnal toil of telling their beads over, the goodly fathers, amid the surroundings of toothsome viands and costly wines, would play, and feast, and fight, and riot through the long idle hours. To elude the animadversions of the more zealous brethren, who were so devoted to the service of Mother Church in the torturing of heretics or the concoction of Jesuitical plots as to scowl on tamer pleasures, the jolly friars (such of them as could read) adopted the clever plan of labelling their dice and card boxes as missals and books of pious learning. In an old book entitled, "The Nicker Nicked, or the, cheats of Gaming Discovered," printed 1669, play is thus described: "Gaming is an enchanting witchery, begot betwixt idleness and avarice, which has this ill property, above all other vices, that it renders a man incapable of prosecuting any serious action, and makes him unsatisfied with his own condition; for he is either lifted up to the top of mad joy with success, or plunged to the bottom of despair by misfortune: always in extremes, always in a storm."

After the theater, which is the chief nursery of vice, card-playing is the most perilous of all amusements; it is the lure of the gambling saloon, and the employment of the lawless and dissolute. These facts being patent, is it not surprising how persons endowed with any powers of thought can consume their precious hours in a practice so vulgar and demoralizing? Hannah More, in another instance, remarks of a party which she attended, "Our hostess very wisely put two card tables in the outer drawing room, which weeded the company of some of the great and all the dull, to no small accommodation of all the rest." She stated of the famous actor, Garrick, (who won brilliant laurels by his personation of a drunkard on the stage,) "I never saw a card, or even met (except in one instance) a person of his own profession at his table." Cards do indeed seem to be a refuge for vacuity. Like the loud laugh of Goldsmith's village bumpkin, a love of cards speaks "the vacant mind." Bad as it may be for the worldling, or the ignorant, it is absolutely disgraceful to behold members of churches, and even the children of ministers, engrossed in this seductive species of time-killing. Engaged in this pursuit, the fairest face loses its attractiveness, every sordid desire is awakened, tracing with unlovely lines the strife of passions. What a wretched character is that of a gamester! all love of the beautiful is extinguished in the soul; flowers no longer charm, music no longer elevates, family delights are insipid, the heart becomes callous, the mind is in a fever of restlessness, a craving greed clutches the soul, one frightful infatuation enthralls its victim, drawing him on, until at length he is plunged into the vortex of perdition. So impressed was Thomas Jefferson with the evil both to mind and estate caused to many of his friends by playing and gambling, that it is stated, he never permitted a card to be in his house. Had the inhabitants of his native State but profited by his example, the slow growth of religion in Virginia, and especially the decadence of the Episcopal church, would not have called fourth from the venerable Bishop Meade the lament that the prevalence of card-playing had so pervaded all classes as to sap the vitals of piety and prove a stumbling-block to the progress of religion.

A gentleman traveling on a steamer one night, was much annoyed by the conversation and boisterous conduct of a party of card-players who had appropriated to themselves the only lighted table in the cabin. So he walked over, and drawing up a chair to the table, in a very courteous tone requested leave to rest his Bible on a corner of it while he read. The permission was accorded; but the game was spoiled: glancing askance at him, the incongruity of pursuits struck the gamblers so uncomfortably, that they quietly shuffled their "Prayer-books," and skulked away.

If you wish your children to be ignorant, idle, and dead to religion, permit them to play with cards. If you desire your sons to be spendthrifts and defaulters, and your daughters to be triflers, vain and godless, let them witness your triumphs on winning a few dimes, or your mortification on losing them But, if you shudder at the prospect, just gather up your cards this moment, and also your dice box, and put them all in the fire. If you are a professing Christian, reflect that the spirit of our holy religion forbids every thing tainted by the breath of the Evil One; and if you are not, I beg you not to place yourself in the ranks of the insane king. The counsel of the eminent Locke is wise to follow: says he, "As to cards and dice, I think the safest and best way is never to learn to play upon them, and so be incapacita- for those dangerous temptations and encroaching wasters of time." May the day come when it will be deemed disreputable for a church member to even know the name of a card!—Episcopalian.

Principles of Ventilation.

Ventilation is based upon the movements of air at different temperatures, but we cannot get rid of foul air, or supply fresh air in the same manner as we would free a house of foul water or supply it with that which is pure by exact measures, allowing just so many cubic inches for each occupant.

The conditions are entirely different. In studying the movements of the air, if we would compare them with the movements of water, we must imagine ourselves at the bottom of the ocean with the ground underneath us heated as the fire would heat the bottom of a pot. By watching the motion of the water in a glass globe with a fire under it, we can form some idea of the constant and immense agitation of the external atmosphere.

Inaccurate, unscientific as the idea may be to the mathematical mind of the architect, that we should depend in a great measure upon the mere agitation, or mixing up of the fresh and foul air, for our chances of getting pure air, I think, notwithstanding, this is just what we have to submit to. This is what nature teaches us, and although we may be to a certain extent artificial beings, and live in artificial houses, half of the lifetime spent in trying to work in a more precise and accurate manner than Old Dame Nature does, has about worn out my patience in that direction, and I confess that her hurly-burly way of mixing the oxygen, nitrogen, hydrogen and carbonic acid, and all other gasses together in one grand mass, and scattering them around promiscuously, is better than any arrangement I have ever been able to devise. The more we study the subject the more evident it becomes that agitation is the natural method of ventilation—it is Nature's great purifier.

Now, if we accept agitation as the true principle of ventilation, we find ourselves far more likely to get our share of pure air by it than by the mathematical cubic-inch programme. Nature does not dole out pure air by the cubic inch, but if unrestrained, supplies every living thing abundantly. She scorns every attempt to measure it, and if we adopt her method of warming, it will be about as easy to supply a hundred cubic feet of cold, invigorating air per minute to every individual. as we now find it to be to dole out a pittance of ten cubic feet per minute of warmed, debilitating, nauseating, hot air. I have spent a great deal of time and money in getting up patterns and taking out patents for warming contrivances. But I have done with them. We have been running air heating to such extremes that I have become perfectly disgusted with it. If we inhale air at the same temperature as the blood it quickly kills us. Nature never ruins the air for breathing purposes by overheating it—she leaves such miserable business to the managers and warmers of railroad cars, asylums, hospitals, and, not unfrequently, our homes.—Sanitarian.

Treatment of Servants.—In how many instances do servants, though living under the same roof with us, share none of our feelings, nor we of theirs; their presence is felt as a restraint; we know nothing about them but that they perform certain set duties, and, in short, they may be said to be a kind of living furniture. There is something very repugnant to a Christian in all this. Surely there might be more sympathy between masters and servants without endangering the good part of our social system. At any rate we may be certain that a fastidious reserve toward our fellow-creatures is not the way in which true dignity or strength of mind will ever manifest themselves in us.—Arthur Helps.

Suggestions.—Children should be taught to the use of the left hand as much as the right. Coarse bread is much better for children than fine. Children and young people should be made to hold their heads up and shoulders back while standing, sitting, or walking. From one to one pound and a half of solid food is sufficient for a person in the ordinary vocations of business. Persons in sedentary employments should drop one-third of their food, and they will escape dyspepsia. Young persons should walk at least two hours a day in the open air. Young ladies should be strictly prevented bandaging the chest. Reading aloud is conductive to health.—The Dial.

Christians can never want a praying time if they possess a praying frame. In the morning this is a golden key to open the heart for God's service, and in the evening it is an iron lock to guard the heart against sin.

Business Maxims.

After the feast the giver shakes his head. The sleeping fox catches no poultry. Creditors have excellent memories. Caution is the father of security. He who pays beforehand is served behindhand. If you would know the value of a dollar, try to borrow one. Great bargains have ruined many. Be silent when a fool talks. Give a foolish talker rope enough, and he will hang himself. Never speak boastingly of your business. It is hard for a hungry man to wait when he smells the roast meat. An hour of triumph comes at last to those who watch and wait. Speak well of your friends—of your enemies say nothing. Be careful how you take back a discharged servant. If you make your servants too familiar with your affairs they may sometime cause you to regret it. No man can be successful who neglects his business. Do not waste time in useless regrets over losses. Systematize your business, and keep an eye on little expenses. Small leaks sink great ships. Never fail to take a receipt for money paid, and keep copies of your letters. Do your business promptly, and bore not a business-man with long visits. Law is a trade in which the lawyers eat the oysters and leave the client the shells.

THE MAGNET.—Some literary connoisseur has furnished the following on the subject of the magnet: "In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the book of Shakspeare's plays had its origin, and nearly every one who has read that book (and who has not?) remembers the curious sayings in it, 'I'll put a girdle round the world in forty minutes.' But how many are there who have read another great book of the same reign, entitled 'De Magnet,' or are aware that at the time when Shakspeare was writing his now familiar phrases, the author of the book on the magnet, the queen's physician, one William Gilbert, when his daily toils of waiting on the sick were over, was working with his smith in the laboratory at his furnace, needle, and compass, was writing up for the first time the word 'electricity,' and was actually forging the beginnings of the very instruments that now, in less than forty seconds, put the girdle round the globe!"

Present appearance and vulgar conceit ordinarily impose upon our fancies, disguising things with a deceitful varnish, and representing those that are vainest with the greatest advantage; whilst the noblest objects, being of a more subtle and spiritual nature, like fairest jewels enclosed in a homely box, avoid the notice of gross sense, and pass undiscerned by us. But the light of wisdom, as it unmasks specious imposture and bereaves it of its false colors, so it penetrates into the retirements of true excellency and reveals its genuine lustre.—Dr. Barrow.

—We have no right to speak evil of any man, or to report any harm of him, no matter how true the report may be unless we have a just and benevolent end in view.

Home and Health Hints.

How to Purify the Blood.

It is pretty generally understood that health depends much upon the purity of the blood. And it is supposed that certain drugs and medicines possess a sort of magic power to purify the blood. It is supposed to be the peculiar office of these medicines to purify the blood; but somehow little is thought of the effect of the food which is eaten, as having a tendency to the purity or the impurity of the blood. Food is taken for another purpose, to sustain life; hence it is not intended, or expected, to have any effect upon the blood.

But is not the blood formed from what we eat? And would it not be better to eat such food as will make good blood than to eat such things as must make impure blood, and then depend upon drugs and nostrums vile to purify it? We say, then,

1. Eat such food only as you are sure will form pure blood. If you do not want scrofulous blood, stop eating scrofula. Leave off taking into the system the impurities contained in animal oils, earthy salts, and indigestible condiments; and let your food be of the purest grains, fruits, and vegetables; and let your drink be the purest, softest water you can get. Thus you will cease to add impurity to impurity.

2. Take in large quantities of pure atmospheric air, such as abounds out of doors; not of the kind that has been shut up in the house, heated by stoves, and breathed over and over again. Pure air is the best purifier of the blood. It is brought in close contact with the blood in the lungs, and quickens it and speeds it in its proper course.

3 Keep the skin, by bathing and proper clothing, in the best condition to throw off by natural perspiration the impurities that are already in the system. Nature, unobstructed, has a way of her own to cast out impurities. She will do the work well, if not hindered.

Let these rules be followed, and the blood will be purified, if it is not too late to purify it.—Health Reformer.

WHEN a carpet is taken up to be cleaned, the floor beneath it is generally very much covered with dust. This dust is very fine and dry, and poisonous to the lungs. Before removing it, sprinkle the floor with very dilute carbolic acid, to kill any poisonous germs that may be present, and to thoroughly disinfect the floor and render it sweet.

THE Herald of Health significantly says: "We repeat, for the benefit of new subcribers, what we have said so often before, that the more a young lady's waist is shaped like an hour glass, the sooner will her sands of life run out."

A SMALL PLUM PUDDING.—Pour a cup of milk over one pound of fine bread crumbs, and let them lie half an hour; then beat in four ounces of sugar, half a pound of suet, chopped fine, half a pound of raisins, chopped, and half a teacupful of grated lemon-peel; beat all well up with four eggs, and boil five hours.

Children's Corner.

A Beautiful Prayer.

We hope many little children will learn the following beautiful prayer:

Father, now the day is past,
On thy child this blessing cast:
Near my pillow, hand in hand,
Keep thy guardian angel band;
And throughout the darkling night
Bless me with a cheerful light;
Let me rise at morn again,
Free from every thought and pain;
Pressing through life's thorny way,
Keep me, Father, day by day!

Let go that Bush.

A young man was walking with some gay companions in a dark forest. They were not sure that they knew the exact course they were going, and yet the laugh, the story and the song beguiled their way. They hoped to come out of the woods at the right place, and thus get home safely.

But suddenly the sky grew dark, the birds ceased their singing, and in the distance they heard the howlings of the hungry beasts of prey. Soon one of the young men stumbled over something, and down, down he fell, with a piercing cry of horror. His companions saw him as he fell down the steep and fearful precipice. Their fears soon gave place to joy; for they saw that, instead of going to the bottom, he had caught hold of a bush half-way down. They called out to him; "Hang on, and we will save you!" They soon made a long rope, which seemed very strong, but, alas! it was made of a material which may be called "self-righteousness." and had no strength at all. It looked as if they could never break it, and so, as they let it down to him, he seized it with all his might. They called to him from above: "Hold on, and we will draw you up!" But they did not lift him an inch before it broke all to pieces.

"Oh," he shouted, "the rope is broken; give me something stronger. Be quick, for my hands ache dreadfully!"

Then they made another. It seemed very hard, and they said it must hold. It was made of "morality."

"Now," said they, "take hold of this rope, and we will draw you to the top." But they scarcely moved him before it snapped like the other.

Again he cried: "Give me something stronger, or I shall fall and be killed!"

While they were making a third rope, the poor fellow turned his eyes downward, but could see nothing but darkness. Suddenly he heard a sweet voice saying: "Fall, fall; I will save thee. My arms will catch thee. LET GO THAT BUSH."

His friends on the brink above did not hear this sweet voice, and so they kept busily at work till they had finished a third rope, made of a very common material, which they found near at hand, twisted together, and called "good resolutions."

"Now," said his friends, "we have a rope which you can never break."

No sooner had these words sounded in his ears than he again heard that calm, mysterious voice from below: "Fall into my arms! I am mighty to save." But like many with proud hearts, he again seized the rope, though with almost nerveless hands. He was at the same time greatly frightened at what should have rejoiced his heart; for he thought he saw a sword ("the sword of the spirit") cutting off the roots of the bush.

"Hold on! we will soon get you to the top. It's the last rope we can give you!" And so they pulled with all their might, but, like the other three, it broke as if it were a cotton thread. There he hung, with but little strength left, and yet again he heard that pleading voice: "Fall, fall, and I will save thee!" "But it's dark, and I cannot see you; I am so heavy you cannot hold me." "Trust my word, and see. Let go at once!" And yet again his foolish companions shouted: "Hold on, hold on!" but the bush at last gave way, being cut entirely by that strange sword. And as he felt his strength all gone, he faintly cried: "Lord, save, or I perish!" What was his joy, when suddenly he found himself firmly clasped in the mighty arms of Him "who is able to save unto the uttermost all them that come unto God by him!"

Now, my dear young friend, is not this a picture of the way you have been trying to climb up to heaven? Have you not often felt that you could by your own good works merit a home in the mansions above! This you can never do. Give up every other hope, and trust only in Jesus. "Let go the bush," and fall into Jesus' arms, and you will be as happy as this young man and the little girl who was led by this simple story to see the only way of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ.

A Pleasing Experiment.

An amusing experiment at home is that of the electrical sheet of paper. Take half a sheet of thick foolscap, and after wetting it thoroughly, dry it over the register, or on top of the stove. While it is still warm, lay it on a varnished table or a dry woolen cloth, and rub it briskly with a piece of India rubber. It will soon be electrified and will stick to the wall or a looking glass, or bits of paper will adhere to it in a funny way. Set a new japanned tea-tray on three dry goblets and lay paper in it. On touching the tray you will get a smart little spark. Take the paper out of the tray, and on touching the tray you will get a spark of the opposite kind of electricity. Replace the paper and you will get another spark, and so on.

Children can do much toward making their parents happy, or they can bring down their gray hairs with sorrow to the grave. I trust all children will be a blessing, and not a curse to their parents.

A LITTLE girl of eight or ten summers being asked what dust was, replied that it was mud with all the juice squeezed out.

Be always frank and true; spurn every sort of affection and disguise. Have the courage to confess your ignorance and awkardness. Confide your faults and follies to but few.

Religious Intelligence.

—St. John's Episcopal Church, Jersey City, meets its annual expense of over $6,000 by voluntary offerings.

—Sixty-five persons have recently united with the Presbyterian church of Batavia, Ill. The church has been established about forty years, and has never before had such a revival.

—The police authorities of Constantinople have forbidden the sale of Scriptures in the Turkish language, which the government has allowed for fourteen years.

—Rev. J L Andrus, of Mt. Vision, N. Y., wishes us to notice that he is at liberty to become pastor of any Baptist church which does not fellowship the lodge.

—The Congregational church at Oak Park, near Chicago, adopted, with some misgivings, the weekly contribution plan with envelopes, and after three month's trial finds it successful.

—The various yearly meetings of the Friends, report large accessions and an earnest spirit in the cause of Christianity. In Ohio and Indiana Quaker ladies were most active, and their prayers most fervent for the overthrow of intemperance.

—300 persons were baptized during the past winter by the Baptist pastors of Pittsburgh, Pa, and three new churches have been formed through their instrumentality within the last twelve months, and $70,000 raised for church building, notwithstanding the panic.

—The Methodist Episcopal churches are becoming restive, it is said, under the expense of their bishops and presiding elders. It is reckoned that the annual cost is from $60,000 to $70,000 for the former and half a million dollars for the latter.

—Rev. Geo E. Hathaway, of Coventry, N. Y., is a pastor who preaches against every evil—the lodge included, and finds that his efforts are not forgotten by the fraternity. He has, nevertheless, been blessed in seeing six score persons seeking pardon under his labors, and at this work his enemies are dumb. Such must always be the work of God-fearing faith.

—The statistics presented at the Burmese Baptist Missionary Convention show that there are 18,546 baptized Christians in 356 churches, with eighty-two ordained and 329 unordained preachers. There are eighty-five schools with 4,874 pupils, some of them in a theological college. The annual contributions, chiefly of the Sgau Karens, amounted to the large sum of $25,000. The number baptized during the year was 777.

—The Baptist Weekly relates a curious incident which occurred at the Warren Avenue church a few Sabbaths since. The pastor, Mr. Pentecost, having exchanged pulpits with another of the Boston pastors, a lady in the congregation deliberately walked into the pulpit and placing her hands on the minister's head, offered a brief prayer of consecration, in which many of the congregation seemed to join by reverently bowing their heads. The good woman then returned to her place and the services proceeded as usual.

—Hitherto the Waldensian missionary churches throughout Italy have been dependent upon the Synod at La Tour. Now they are to be reorganized on a Presbyterian basis and will practically form the Presbyterian church of Italy. There are thirty-eight of these churches in Italy and Sicily, supported at an annual cost of $40,000, which is mostly supplied from England. The so-called Free Church of Italy is nearly as large as the Waldensian.

—The number of native ministers in India has largely increased since 1861. In that year there were 319 mission stations and 97 native ministers. In 1871 there were 423 stations and 226 native ministers. During this period the number of foreign missionaries has risen from 478 to 486. There was therefore, only an increase of eight foreign missionaries to an increase of 129 native ministers.

—E P. Hammond, the evangelist, writes to the N. Y. Witness a brief account of his labors and victories during the past month. The letter is dated Jacksonville, Ill., Apr. 29th, and says: "I believe that through the reports of the revival meetings in St. Louis, multitudes have been directly and indirectly, led to see Jesus as their Saviour. I do not know whether you have heard of our visit to Texas or not. It would be safe to say that through the earnest labors of those accompanying me, four or five hundred souls in the different places were converted. We first visited Galveston, where a great work was accomplished; thence to Austin, and I believe that meeting held in the Capitol building at the latter city will be remembered by those Senators and Representatives as long as they live. It was a most solemn meeting, when the Spirit of God was bountifully poured out. En route to Texas was over the Iron Mountain road, through the courtesy of whose President, Hon. Thomas Allen, we were passed all the way to Galveston. We returned through the Indian Territory. Texas is indeed a noble State. It is larger than all New England, New York State, and Ohio. I saw some fine lands there as I ever did anywhere. We passed there one man's farm that extended for many miles in all directions, on which were 100,000 cattle. When we arrived at Galveston, in March, we found the ground covered with flowers and the orange trees laden with ripe fruit. Upon my return to St. Louis, 29 Christian workers came with me to Hannibal, Mo., a town of 15,000 inhabitants, located on the west bank of the Missouri River, 150 miles above St. Louis. A great work has been inaugurated thus, upwards of 700 persons having signed the covenant.

From Hannibal one hundred and four went with me on the cars to Palmyra, Mo., and the glorious work of the Holy Spirit has begun there. It has been my privilege for ten days or more to labor in Jacksonville, Ill., an educational centre of much importance, where Illinois College is located, and some five seminaries. The president, professer, and ministers have taken hold of the work with a great amount of interest; no building will hold the crowds who are in attendance from day to day, and the multitude unable to secure seats inside the church, attend out-door meetings which are held from day to day in the public square. No less than 975 people have signed the covenant, after having been carefully examined by ministers or Christians. This covenant expresses the belief that the signers have passed from death unto life, and promise, with God's help, to live his loving and faithful children all their lives.

Theo. Smith, a converted prize fighter from England, has been with me for several weeks, doing valuable service for the Lord. He reminds me continually of Richard Weaver, a prize fighter in England, who was the means of converting thousands. I used to hear him speak over twelve years ago in Scotland. I am in hopes Mr. Smith will attend Talmage's college in Brooklyn, fit himself for a lay evangelist, and prove to be one of the missing links to reach the "outstanding masses." Yours in Jesus,

E. P. Hammond.

News of the Week.

The Capitol.

—It was rumored last week that E. B. Washburne, now Minister in France, was selected to succeed Richardson in the Treasury.

—The marriage of Senator Stewart's daughter on the 4th inst. to Lieut. Tatten, of the Navy, was the occasion of great display of the wealth of Washington. Miss Nellie Grant's wedding is announced for the 21st.

—Judge Wright, of Iowa, has bought the carriage purchased for Attorney General William's private use with public money, and proposes to drive through the country with four horses attached, and thus show the people how their official servants parade at Washington.

—Charges have been made, in the House, of frauds in letting postal contracts and referred to the Post-Office committee, who seem unwilling to investigate. Mr. Stone, of Missouri, has presented a long list of flagrant abuses, such as bids accepted for a few thousand dollars and finally contracted for twice, thrice and even fifteen times the original bid.

The Country.

—A great riot has occurred at Nelsonville, Ohio, between the union and non-union miners. Three men were killed, and further trouble was apprehended.

—A conference of Catholic Archbishops, sitting in Cincinnati, have decided to form archbishoprics of Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Boston, Peoria and Santa Fe, if the Pope approves.

—The afternoon train on the Pittsburg & Ft. Wayne railroad, which left Chicago on the second of May, was thrown from the track by a misplaced switch, sixty miles from Ft. Wayne, and several cars burned, but no lives lost. The post-office officials state that three pouches from Milwaukee, and one each for New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburg were destroyed; also, nine from Chicago, and one each for Pittsburg, Baltimore, New York and Ft. Wayne, and miscellaneous checks and drafts, amounting to more than two million dollars, are believed to have been destroyed.

—The forests of Michigan are threatened with a conflagration equalling that of 1871. Fires are raging throughout the Saginaw district and in Gratriot and Tuscola counties. Muskegon was surrounded with burning timber on Saturday, and the city was threatened with destruction. The railroads traversing the region are considerably damaged. Forest fires are causing great destruction, also, near Bothwell in Canada. A fire in St. Louis on Sunday destroyed property worth from $60,000 to $70,000. At Oshkosh, Wis., twenty-eight dwellings and a dozen barns were burned on Saturday.

—The war on the saloons is quite as vigorously prosecuted in Michigan as anywhere in the west. A woman's alliance in Detroit is doing its work. A committee of twenty was appointed to wait on the Governor, Mayor and leading citizens. In Adrian great activity prevails Legal prosecutions have been commenced, saloons watched and visited. Allegan has no open liquor selling. The Hudson House, Hudson, has abandoned its "bar." Two hundred Scandinavians signed the pledge in Manistee. The National Hotel at Flint has become a temperance house. In Charlotte, meetings have been held, and all places closed but one, and every lawyer in the city has signed the pledge, and will not clear the guilty in any liquor suit. At Lansing, 1,800 were present at one meeting. Other towns are moving all over the State.

—After considerable hunting for the kidnapped Arkansas judges, they escaped on Wednesday last through the aid of the officer guarding them, who believed they would be murdered. On their arrival at Little Rock the Supreme Court gave a decision in favor of Brooks. The friends and attorneys of both parties in Washington have entered into an agreement to issue a joint call for a meeting of the Legislature, and abide by the decision of that body. In the meantime, an ad interim Governor is to be named by the President, and both contestants are to disband and send home all their troops except a body-guard, and are to refrain from any warlike demonstrations. A fight took place in Little Rock on Saturday but no one was hurt. Another account states that one negro was killed. Capt. Welch's company, who escaped from the steamer Hallie, had arrived in Little Rock. The Federal troops were intrenching themselves in front of the City Hall, and still further strengthing their position.

Foreign.

—The Carlists, under Don Alfonso, have been defeated again in an engagement with the Republican troops. The Carlist loss was heavy. Castelar has congratulated Serrano on his success at Bilbao. The question of re-organization of the government is the absorbing one at present. Serrano wishes to form a better cabinet.

New York, May 8.—The Diaro, of Nelanila, has details of a fire in the Phillippine Islands, on the 28th of January. Two children, who were left to themselves, set the house on fire, and the conflagration extended so rapidly that in the course of four hours half the houses in town, nearly 2,000, were destroyed. Not a fruit tree remained. Thousands of weaving frames were destroyed, and multitudes of cattle perished. Fifteen persons, including six children, were burned to death.

—Rev. Geo. Trask, of Fitchburg, Mass., publishes a large number of able tracts against tobacco, which are having a wide and useful circulation. This work is sustained by voluntary contributions which may be sent to Mr. Trask.

Westfield College.—This institution is generally well known to the readers of this paper through the presence of members of its Faculty at the annual meetings of the National Association. It is under the charge of the Illinois, Central Illinois and Lower Wabash Conferences of the church of the United Brethren in Christ; is pleasantly located in the healthy and retired town of Westfield, Clark county, Illinois, in daily connection with the Indianapolis and St. Louis railway. Expenses are quite moderate, the tuition being $24.00 a year. The number of students during the last College year was 224, made up of both ladies and gentlemen, who share equally in both the classical and scientific courses. The patrons of this institution may put confidence in its Faculty with respect to the moral care exercised toward the students. The ruffianly sports of older and wealthier colleges are unknown, nor are those pledges of secrecy which sever the student from the control of parent and officer, ever permitted.

—Some one has attempted to turn aside the shafts that reveal the weakness and folly of the grange by a sham description of the institution. It is traveling the rounds of the lodge-bedizzened press, but will attract the attention only of the idle and the prejudiced. A similar labor has been undertaken for the Knights of Pythias, and published by a New York firm.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

A fifth objection is found in the natural use of these societies for disturbance of public order. Absurd initiations (either real or pretended), rivalries, and conspiracies find their home and nature in these hidden communions. Out of the darkness dark deeds grow. An enmity against a student or a Professor is systematically fostered into persecution in these favoring caucuses of secrecy. A young man who would never have thought of violence, is led by the false sense of honor which reeks in secret societies, to join hand with others in a crime against the State. Of course this is not the universal and inevitable issue of secret societies, but this has frequently been their history, and they are naturally fitted for such results The minor disturbances of college order, of which they are the causes, are legion.

The sixth objection I have to offer is their evil influence upon the regular literary societies of the college, which are instituted as adjuncts of the curriculum. The secret societies are more fascinating. They assert themselves in the literary societies by the quarrels of rival factions, and literature flies out of the window. I believe that I am right in asserting that in most of our colleges the literary societies (most important helps to the student in composition and oratory) have been utterly ruined, except as alumni centers, by the secret societies.

My last objection is their expensiveness. The great majority of students are poor. They need to live with a strict economy. The secret society asks more of them, oftentimes, than their education asks. Even buildings are put up for the societies, and extravagantly furnished, and for these the students are taxed. To refuse payment would be to suffer disgrace. Debts are incurred, and mental agony sown broadcast by these inflictions of a bastard honor, which are throwing obstacles in the way of the education of the poor, while good men throughout the country are laboring to open college education to all.

I know that many excellent men, long after they leave college, support these societies. Ministers of eminence are their chaplains (save the mark!) and statesmen wear the mystic badges. But for all that, I cannot but believe that the principle on which they rest is pernicious, and nothing is gained by them which might not be gained far better by open dealing. The principle is not only pernicious, but childish, an anti-climax which may have weight with some who would prefer to do wrong than to be reckoned as lacking wit.

Other arguments and opinions based on actual experience of like import were published from other eminent educators; but it will be sufficient for the immediate purpose to present a paper read by Professor J. R. Jacques, of the Illinois Wesleyan University, before the Central College Association, met at Bloomington, Ill., August, 1868, which was published in the journal of proceedings. This paper is a concise statement of the reasons for banishing the fraternity system from the institutions of the country. It is herewith presented:

SECRET SOCIETIES IN COLLEGES.

Secret societies in colleges being a historic fact rather than a theory proposed, cannot well be discussed without prejudice, nor disturbed without commotion. Among nearly all "college men" there is an evident tendency to touch this theme delicately and tenderly, as if a bold, outspoken discussion would precipitate some vague and unknown peril. And this general reluctance to speak in downright earnest—in bold, blunt words—is not without its significance, implying, as it does, an abridgment of liberty of speech, which is itself already ominous of evil.

While it is a difficult task to emancipate our minds from all personal prejudices and partiality it may not be impossible nor unprofitable to ascertain the natural tendencies of college secret societies, viewed intrinsically and apart from particular instances that might seem to prove or disprove their advantages.

Secret or "Greek" societies, as such, in college, are liable to certain objections, a priori, which, in the absence of any experienced effects, or a posteriori arguments, would go far to discourage the formation of such societies. Among the objectionable features which belong essentially to secret societies in college, some may be mentioned as most prominent and most obvious.

1. Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous and magnanimous character.

2. Such societies necessarily give opportunity, and therefore stimulus for stealthy planning and plotting to accomplish whatever ends may be proposed; and thus, by logical necessity;

3. Such societies tend to divert the attention and confidence from honest work, manly measures, eternal right and triumphant truth (which need no disguise), to the tricks of temporizing and compromising policy which need the secret conclave and sleepless cunning—thus tending and tempting to substitute policy for principle, stealth for strength, plotting pusillanimity for patient magnanimity, and, in fine, lurking meanness for lofty manliness.

4. Whatever may be the advantage or necessity of secret meetings or societies among citizens, as such, to guard church, state, society or home against political plotting or other peril, such advantage or necessity cannot be pleaded in defense of college secret societies—where trustees and faculty are the official and legal guardians of the peace and good order of the institution, and where the responsibility of governing in no degree and in no sense belongs to the students.

5. Secret societies in colleges must naturally tend to embolden students in insurrection against good government whenever their inclinations are thwarted by faculty or trustees; and thus

6. Such secret societies must naturally tend to lower the discipline to a laxer standard by warping, blinding and influencing the faculty with a vague dread of rebellion against stringent yet wholesome discipline.

7. Such secret societies cannot provide for any real need of the student which is not already amply provided for. Does he need literary culture and fraternal sympathy? He finds these already in the well regulated literary society. Does he need social culture and refinement? This he finds in the social circle where all is natural and real, offering a far higher social culture than the rollicking laxity of manners which the well-locked and well-curtained society hall must needs provoke. Does he need moral and religious culture? This is abundantly provided in all the departments of the Christian church; and he shall seek long who shall find a substitute for the nurturing care of the church of God.

8. Secret societies in college must necessarily take time from other duties more important. The prescribed exercises of college life, in the preparation and recitation of lessons, in essay-writing and general reading; social duties, religious duties and literary society duties together with the multitude of nameless calls arising from our oppressive and complex civilization, leave little room for the promised and possible advantages of secret societies. Omitting and ignoring such assemblies, the student, emulous of high success, will find the regular duties of college life, literary, social and religious, engross all his time and energies, leaving none for the secret societies. Any attempt to meet all these frivolous calls will prove fatal to painstaking study and concentrated exertion of mind.

9. Secret societies, controlled by inexperienced, impulsive young men, from the necessity of the case, will be likely to consume more money than prudence would dictate. This might be confidently predicted without knowing the history of a single society in existence. The principles of human nature alone furnish sufficient data for this conclusion.

These will be the tendencies of such secret societies which, in an atmosphere of healthy moral sentiment, may be checked and suppressed, but nevertheless the tendencies will remain the same, requiring perpetual moral pressure to prevent the uprising of evil.

And now let it be remembered and remarked that all these a priori probabilities have become accomplished facts:

1. Secret societies have fostered a secretive disposition and tendency among students.

2. They have been the scene and source of untold mischief in our colleges, and some of the most distinguished presidents and professors in our American colleges have recorded their convictions that these societies—while sometimes beneficial—are generally pernicious to good order and good morals.

3. They have instigated, stimulated and maddened the morbid appetite for office, trickery and wire-working, which, in the American mind, is the feverish vice most needing a sedative and the poison most needing an antidote.

4. They have supplied no real need of the nobly ambitious student. The student busy with his secret society during his college course, on subsequently viewing his college life from the standpoint of real, earnest life, generally finds his secret society activities dwindling in his own estimation more and more as time advances; while the student using all legitimate means of improvement, yet outlawed and tabooed by misguided class-mates for his lack of appreciation of secret societies, rises in the world just as well, not only without the offered help of the fraternity, but in spite of their persistent opposition.

5. They have wasted the time of students, and, in some cases, hastened the process of dissipating both mind and character, by triflingly employing young men capable of better things.

6. They have become in many cases a school of prodigality and extravagance. Already we hear of a general complaint among the patrons of our Eastern colleges, that the secret societies are breeding habits of extravagance among students, which are exhausting both the purse and the patience of parents and guardians, and prompt measures are suggested as a remedy.

The advocates of such societies tell us there are some unquestionable advantages in these fraternities.

1. It is said the secret society is a "bond of union." Be it so; but does this prove anything for or against the moral advantage of a society? Any secret conclave, whether good or bad, is a bond of union. It is called a bond of union—union of what? Does not the class organization furnish a bond of union? Does not the literary society furnish a beautiful bond of union? Is not the alumni society a bond of union? Is not the college itself a bond of union? And in the case of many of our college students is not the society of the church a holier, dearer bond of union than all beside?

And this is the appropriate place to give utterance to a long suppressed suspicion that this "bond of union" among the religious and the irreligious, the serious and the trifling, in such intimate and secret association, accords neither with sound philosophy nor Christian ethics. In such assemblages, where so many restraints are removed, the young Christian is more likely to be debased than the unchristian young man elevated.

2. Again, it is said the college secret society is a mutual help and protection. "Help" for what? For anything that cannot be provided by the legitimate institutions and faculties of the college, the church and the society?

We wait to ascertain this promised help, the possession of which is pronounced a blessing, but the loss of which is found to be no cu se. Is it a "protection?" A protection against what? Are our students in our Christian colleges in such peril that they must needs league together for protection? Protection against each other? No! Against the faculty? What? Do our noble students need fortification and protection against the faculty, who are by their very office devoted to the interests of the students? The historic origin and present attitude of these secret societies in America, forces the suspicion upon the mind that their animus, though sometimes most honorable, is often rebellious and restless.

And now we may understand the present status of this controversy by honestly answering a few questions:

1. Is not the secret society, as such, a defense against wholesome discipline?

2. Is not the secret society generally a source of vague terror or uneasiness to the faculty?

3. Are the ruling spirits of secret societies generally, or as a rule, our best students and noblest young men?

4. Do our most devoted Christian young men generally find the performances and pastimes of the secret society con genial with their tastes?

5. While the secret or Greek society, in a pure moral atmosphere, may be not only free from evil, but promotive of good, do not college men generally acknowledge their tendency to be toward mischief, and would not professors and trustees vote such societies out of existence if they could do it without collision or catastrophe?

In view, therefore, of all the facts of the case, we would suggest the propriety of expressing on all fitting occasions our disapproval of the whole system of college secret societies as now generally conducted—at the same time attempting no coercive measures, as the experience of the past has proved that any measures other than moral suasion aggravate rather than mitigate the evil.

At the annual meeting of the Association to which the above was presented, held in Oberlin, Ohio, in the fall of 1870, the subject was again brought forward in a manner promising a vigorous effort for the removal of the secret societies. This body was, moreover, fully competent to discuss the question and put in execution any plan which might be adopted, being composed of college presidents and professors from the central or lake States, who had all more or less knowledge of the societies, either as students or officers. At the meeting of 1870, Dr. J. P. Gulliver, then President of Knox College, Illinois, suggested that there be some plan to unite the faculties in this much needed reform; it having been conceded generally among college officers that no institution could alone begin the struggle with much hope of successfully eradicating the fraternities and at the same time maintaining its standing as an institution. Toleration or no patronage was the alternative. But it was as generally believed that a united effort could hardly fail. The proposition was favorably received and referred to a committee, but the Association never met again in its original capacity. It was the next year merged into the National Teachers' Association; and the college fraternities escaped.

To the Alumni meeting at Yale commencement, held June 25, 1873, must be referred one of the ablest and most radical testimonies against the society system, from Hon. William M. Evarts. Mr. Evarts is published among the members of the "Skull and Bones" Senior society of Yale, was the second graduate chosen by the Alumni to represent them on the Board of Trustees of that institution, and is a leader in the legal profession of America, having served the Government as Attorney General, counsel in the Geneva Arbitration etc. His remarks had, therefore, the weight of unequalled experience. The next day the Hartford Courant published the following report:

"A very agreeable break in the monotony was made by introducing the Hon. William M. Evarts, of the class of 1837. He always makes a capital speech, no matter w at may be the occasion; and he did good work to-day in speaking against the evil effects of secret societies—a subje t which had been previously well handled by Mr. Van Sanford. A few years ago the great societies of Linonia and the Brothers in Unity, which included all classes, and were about equally divided in membership, were the weekly arenas of debate, the school in which men were tra ned to think on their feet. They made men clear and rapid thinkers and ready debators To-day they are dead; killed by the class secret societies, which have a tendency to develope snobbishness and nothing else. They are a curse to the college, interfering not only with good-fellowship among the members of the same class, but with the selection of university crews and ball clubs and thus have much to do with the disgraceful series of defeats which have attended Yale for several years. Mr. Evarts, in alluding to the students sent forth by Yale in the past, who have achieved great success in the fields of real influence, said most of their success was due to the educating influence of the great debating societies. They furnished for the field for open and manly debate what could not be found in the small numbers and limited opportunities of the secret societies. They prepared the young man to withstand frowns and hisses as well as applause, and turned out men who could meet an adversary in debate without flinching. All this is wanting now, and cannot be supplied unless the old societies can be resurrected. There were hundreds of old graduates who agreed with the speaker when he advocated the revival of the old societies and the suppression of the foolish secret clubs which have supplanted them."

PETITION!

[Every Subscriber is requested to cut the following petitions, paste them on separate sheets of paper, obtain every signer possible, and forward the first (on the corner-stone) to the Secretary of the National Convention at Syracuse, N. Y. before June.]

To His Excellency, U. S. Grant, President of the United States of America:

The undersigned citizens of the United States, learning through public announcement, that it is proposed to lay the corner-stone of the new Government Building in Chicago with Masonic ceremonies, on the 24th day of June next (St. John's Day—so called), respectfully represent that under our Constitution and laws, no society, sect, or order is entitled to official preferment or precedence over any other order, sect, or society: and they therefore do earnestly protest that the order to which it is thus proposed to delegate a work of national interest should not be allowed such recognition, either through its festivals, or its rites and ceremonies, which are offensive to the great body of the American people.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, believing (in the words of Daniel Webster) "That all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government," respectfully ask your honorable body to withdraw the charter given by Congress in April, 1864, to the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia.

That it be made unlawful to appoint to official positions under the government of the United States, persons who are under and acknowledge the binding character of oaths administered by secret organizations.

We further petition that in United States Courts, in all cases, criminal or civil, the right of peremptory challenge of jurors who are members of any secret society shall be granted to all parties in litigation who are not members of such societies.

And that membership in any secret society by the presiding officer of a court shall be held to be a sufficient reason for change of venue whenever demanded.

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commission." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2.00 a year and requires a great addition to our present mail list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not, as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

On May 9th our subscription list was counted again, and we hope all our readers, as we consider them friends, and especially all of our agents, wish to know what the prospect is for a list of 6,000 subscribers on the 2d of June, the time of the National Anniversary. The total number of subscribers (in these reckonings we omit our exchange list of about fifty newspapers) was 4,384. From April 17 to April 27 the gain was 142,—an average gain of 14.2 subscribers per day. From April 27 to May 9 (twelve days), the gain in our list was 356,—an average gain of 30 subscribers per day nearly (29 2-3.)

If our list counts 6,000 at the Syracuse Convention, during the twenty days that intervene before its arrival we must receive an average of eighty new subscribers per day. The average rate of increase in new subscriptions has more than doubled within the last twelve days over the preceding ten. Shall not this rate of increase continue?

The testimony of multitudes of our readers is that the Cynosure ought to be found in every family in our land, that it should have at least 100,000 subscribers, and some predict for it a useful and brilliant future. Whether this future awaits it or not depends largely on the earnestness of our readers and the success of our working friends.

We do not ask one who has done all he should for the paper to do anything more, but we ask the thousand others who feel conscious that they can, with a little exertion, send in one, two, or more new subscribers, to make the effort, benefit their friends and neighbors by putting valuable reading matter into their hands, and sustain and assist us in the rescue of our church and country from foes which threaten their destruction.

Our subscribers will remember that our gain of 356 new subscribers during twelve days does not mean that they all paid their subscriptions for a year. Most of them have subscribed for only three or six months, and unless those who sent in their subscriptions solicit their renewals, we fear that many of them will discontinue when their time expires. Discontinuances, of course, must be made good with new subscriptions if our list holds its own. We mention these things now, so that our agents will understand that although we are anxious to have our list run up to 6,000 names during the next twenty days, that we are still more anxious to have their steady, resolute, judicious assistance; and all that they can conscientiously give, considering their other responsibilities, not only for twenty days or three months, but for one, two, three or more years, until Masonry would no sooner propose to lay the corner-stone of a United States custom-house than any organized band of horse thieves; and until adhering Masons will no longer seek and hold places in Christian churches than Jews, Chinamen or infidels.

A few weeks since we asked who would compete with a man who is working for the Cynosure in Indiana, and who has now sent in sixty-two subscriptions during the last five months. A friend in Minnesota, from whom we are beginning to receive frequent letters, lets us know that he will. He says: "I design to send you 100 orders for the Christian Cynosure."

Week before last a clergyman took two copies of the Cynosure with him to a meeting of Presbytery, and there obtained a club of twelve subscribers for three months. Six of them were clergymen. Do not forget these meetings. Many of them are admirable places in which to work for the circulation of the Cynosure.

Topics of the Time.

THE TWO GOVERNORS.—Arkansas at length has relief. After several encounters, and loss of life, neither State courts or Legislature affecting anything, propositions of peace were submitted from Washington. Brooks declined saucily and lost his cause. President Grant recognized Baxter as Governor; Little Rock rejoiced as never before; the dead lock was removed from the railroads, and the belligerents have disbanded. The President's decision was a clear one. Baxter had been declared Governor by the legal authority, and Brooks' usurpation was based on a network of legal processes and fog.

GENERAL HOWARD.—The military investigation into the alleged defalcation of the Freedmen's Bureau has closed with an exhonoration of the principal, Gen. Howard. He has been acquitted by soldiers, and recommended to the confidence and sympathy of the army. The daily press developed a morbid appetite for the characters of "Christian Statesmen" during the Credit Mobilier trials. When that was over they ga ped for prey; and the charges, however baseless, against the Bureau were game. But now to eat their own words is nauseating, and so they are silent. A Washington correspondent thinks that Howard was generous to a fault and sacrificed himself to the colored man, having given him "not only a University, a political economy, a financial system and a religion, but gave his own soldierhood away and imperilled his reputation."

VOTE-MAKING.—The political weather-vane may well tremble for its reputation. The party pilots have proved themselves equal to the Irish steersman who, knew every rock in the passage, "and that's one of 'em, yir honor"—as the vessel struck. Now they vainly look for a wind. The signals give them little hope but a continuance of their indecision. Here in Illinois the State Farmer's Association has by its advisory Committee broken loose from the old parties and called a convention to meet June 10th to nominate State officers for the fall election. New York city has been long under party whip and its representative journals cry loudly for reform. The blind zeal of the inflationists has urged that measure until the the people will not ignore it, and it is unquestionably proved that the party press is bitterly divided on the question. A very significant meeting was held in Worcester, Mass., on the 9th of May, growing out of an article in the Springfield Republican suggesting the organization of Young Men's Reform Clubs. The draft of a platform was presented, which declares independence of the moribund parties, and urges reform in government. The near future has developments that may astonish the last conservative.

THE FARMER'S QUESTION.—It has come about in our changable American society that a large and respected portion our citizens are anxiously inquiring after certain credit given and cash paid by them to an organization made popular by its magnificent claims as a money-saving and a despot-destroying institution. The grange is a fine example of the old saying, "It takes a thief to catch a thief." Last winter, after giving out that it had $50,000 surplus funds, the National Grange was not able to present its financial report for 1873; nor has it since. Now, the Patrons want this matter settled on principle, and their papers are joining the cry, "Brother Kelley, why don't you make your report?" The St. Louis Globe has got hold of the figures and publishes them and will soon give an analysis:

"The receipts for the year were $132,151,28, of which all but some $3,000 came from dispensations, over 8,500 of which were issued. The balance was made up from interest (only $730), quarterly dues, (paid only by Wisconsin), two quarters, and Iowa, and Illinois, one quarter each) and sales of manuals. The expenses were in all $79,333.53, of which $30,303.80 were for printing and regalia, $11,400 for salaries, $13,840.81 for clerk hire, express charges, freight, etc. Of the balance of $52,817.75 in the treasury, $39,512.50 are invested in government sixes, and $13,152.70 are in the Washington Loan and Trust Company. Mr. Kelly, the secretary, received $3,500 salary and $2,321.74 arrears, besides some other small perquisities, which altogether make up nearly as much as he could have earned by a year's hard work on the farm."

OUR COLLEGES ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

The college papers which have been continued from week to week since February 26th are at last concluded with this number. They have been useful and interesting in presenting new views of the reform; and show that there are institutions which are fearless in adhering to principles and are unwilling to beg a livelihood from the lodge. The last letter sent in answer to the circular of the committee is presented herewith. Of the institution no information has been received than that given, and the additional fact that it is a Baptist institution. There is probably no college of that denomination at the North which would be willing to show such a record as the following:

BAYLOR UNIVERSITY, INDEPENDENCE, TEXAS,
Oct. 25, 1873.

GENTS:—I connected myself with the "Masons" at Vicksburg, Miss., in 1847. An intimate acquaintance with the fraternity under all the trials of peace and war, slavery and anti-slavery, good order and discord, in years of plenty and years of famine, in season of health and in years of pestilence and in all the relations of life, has developed nothing in "Freemasonry" adverse to the highest and best exhibitions of "the social, civil and moral character of the citizens of America." If I were to write an article it would embrace the points evidently suggested by the foregoing lines. Very respectfully yours,

WM. CAREY CRANE, President.

The Secret Brotherhood of God.

BY REV. W. POST.

"Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?"—Ps. xciv. 20.

The above question is not one of enquiry, but of confirmation, expressing the shock that purity and truth must experience at even a hint of such a coincident. What! iniquity, that "frameth mischief by a law," have fellowship with God? Utterly impossible! God can never league with iniquity to accomplish his purposes. He makes "the wrath of man to praise him, and restrains the remainder," but falsehood and deceit share no part of his government. Is not the "fruit of the Spirit, in all goodness, righteousness and truth?" And are not those whomhe chooses, admonished to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." The Lord claims no such agencies to carry on his work. The Holy Ghost saith "that which maketh manifest is light," and Jesus said, "Let your light so shine before men, that others may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." The convert to Christ was to come out from among idolators, separate himself from all their heathenish rites and ceremonies, "giving no offense," be no stumbling-block, that it might be evident to all that the church of God inherited nothing unclean. It is for iniquity to frame mischief by a law. But God's agencies—his ministers and his people—are to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," "no religious connection with the heathens or their worships." "Probably alluding," says Dr. Adam Clark, "to the mysteries among the heathens, and the different lustrations and rites through which the nitiated went in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated. . . the initiated being obliged, on pain of death, to keep secret what they had seen, heard and done; hence they were called unspeakable mysteries, things that were not to be divulged." (Com. on Eph. v. 11.)

For what have the children of God to do with these works of darkness? Can God have fellowship with the throne of iniquity? "As righteousness cannot have communion with unrighteousness, and light cannot dwell with darkness, so Christ can have no concord with Belial, nor can he that believeth have any with an infidel. . . How, then, could they keep up the profession of Christianity, or pretend to be under its influence, while they associated with the unrighteous, had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels? . . . If ye join in idolatrous rites, it is impossible that ye should be Christians."

"Is it not plain. . . that God could not inhabit in them, if they had concord with Belial, or a portion with infidels?" (Clark on 2d Cor. vi)

"The kingdom of God is righteousness." It can have no affinity with the unfruitful works of darkness. The works of the flesh are "idolatry, hatred, seditions"—divisions into separate factions—heresies, (factions), murders, drunkenness, revellings (so common in secret societies at the present day), and such like. . . . They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. v.) "We should let the world see that the church of God tolerates no such iniquity."

Have no fellowship with these hidden works of darkness is the unmistakable language of God's Word. Dr. Clark says, "The apostle speaks against these mysteries as he speaks against fornication, uncleanness and covetousness." And, "Now all these reprovable actions which are practiced in celebrating these mysteries, are made manifest as sinful by the Gospel." (Com. on Eph. 7.) In the secret chamber of the heathen, 'mischief was framed by a law.' Let us concluding glance at the lovers of secrecy in Bible language. "Thatthey may shoot in secret at the perfect."—Ps. lxiv. "Whose hatred is covered in secret."—Prov. xxvi. "It is a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret."—Eph. v. "O, my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united; for in their anger they slew a man."—Gen. xlix. "No man can serve two masters."—Can't serve Christ and the master of the heathen, secret mysteries. This throne of iniquity cannot find fellowship in Christ and his elect. Can God's elect affiliate with idolators, Christless blasphemers, revelers, drunkards and such like, composing an oath-bound brotherhood?

Can—O Lord God!—the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?

Stone Soup.

Every one may have heard the fable of a man who, begging for a dinner but being refused, finally managed, through the novelty of professing to make a dish of stone soup, to get a very good meal. He supplied the stone, and the kitchen maid added all the other articles one by one for making a rich soup; so that what the man failed to get as a whole, he succeeded in getting by detail and by exciting curiosity.

This shy, insidious way of doing things, though quite tolerable when exhibited as an exercise of individual ingenuity, for a good purpose, is very dangerous when it is made use of to reconcile men to wrong notions and to a loss of liberty.

During the war of the Rebellion it was noticed that certain rebel women were more spiteful against the government than the men; and after the war they kept up their strife by decorating the graves of rebel soldiers with flowers; thus seeking to consecrate rebellion and to exhibit the spirit of hate, either affected or real, against republican government. There was a pettiness and bitterness in this way of showing the spirit of ignorance against a government that is still considered the greatest beneficence of the earth, that might have been safely left to die out of itself, from its own unworthiness, if a secret society had not come forward, with very suspicious readiness, with a scheme which has seemed to keep it alive. The Grand Army of the Republic, that great secret society which has grown out of Masonry's battening on the vitalities of the government during the war, was not afraid of losing its grandeur by taking up the quarrel over graves thus offered by Southern women, and made the ceremonies of strewing flowers of the grass and flowers of rhetoric, especially the latter, over Union soldiers' graves a regular institution, and absolutely sought to drive Congress to the puerility of adopting it as a national holiday. So that, though the war was ended, still the quarrel went on over dead men's graves, Southern women keeping up discord by decorating (so-called) rebel soldiers' graves with pretty flowers, once a year, on the one hand, and the Grand Army of the Republic, grimly replying on the other, throwing down flower for flower, tulip for tulip, pansy for pansy, with a good many political speeches thrown in besides.

Thus we have our stone soup well under way. First, we have Masonry seeking to make a good dinner out of the war, which it did, much to the injury of the country; but now it wants stone soup. The Grand Army is the stone; this quarrel with Southern women is one of the condiments. And now still another condiment is thrown in; officers and soldiers of the U. S. Army go and strew flowers on the graves of those who died fighting against the government which they pretended to serve!—thus making, by their own standard, rebellion just as good as loyalty, just as honorable, just as praiseworthy. What next condiment will be thrown into this broth remains to be seen; but where armies are thus found honoring the graves of their governments' enemies, the country cannot be far from that condition where those armies will serve him who pays the best, without much regard to forms of government, or principles.

Even the New York Tribune, forgetting its ancient manliness and independence, approves this act of our regular Army, and pretends to find a precedent for it in Mr. Sumner's resolution for taking off the stains of civil war from our standards. There is no possible similarity in the two cases. Mr. Sumner's resolution was merely for removing scalps from the Indian's belt; for suppressing unchristian exultation over a fallen foe of any kind whatever; but this act of the Army goes altogether farther than that; it extends to the honoring of rebellion, and that rebellion a very bad one, got up for a bad purpose, with hardly room enough left for charity itself to assign a good object.

The language of the Tribune is remarkable for its servility to a movement which it ought to censure, instead of adopting as one of the proper baits of republican institutions. Here it is; and it shows that the Tribune's opposition to Grant is no deeper than the simple fact that Grant's election was opposed to that of Mr. Greely. The Tribune says:—

The natural tolerance of the American has now so far asserted itself that this week the officers and men of the United States Army, stationed in the vicinity of these proceedings, have asked permission to take part in them, and have deposited on the graves of their late adversaries the crowns and crosses which typify a divided glory and a common faith in immortality. We do not expect to hear any denunciation of this graceful and becoming act of brave men toward their fallen adversaries.

Think of United States soldiers, going altogether out of the line of their duty, and honoring rebel graves with "the crowns and crosses which typify a divided glory and a common faith in immortality." Observe also the shy manner, worthy of one of the craft, in which is coupled respect for rebels with the manifestations of Christian faith, as if one could be made to honor the other! This is a trick of Jesuitism; it is Masonry all over.

If the United States Army wishes to show its "common faith in immortality," could it not find some better occasion than a spiteful ceremony of honoring rebellion? Why should this army go into graveyards to keep alive the memory of dead rebels, ten years after they are buried? It is a service for political priests, or scheming Masons, if for anybody; but last of all for the Army of the United States. This confounding of distinction promises a kind of broth that sensible people would not like to take, when it is fully concocted.

What does the Tribune mean by "divided glory?" Is there any glory in the mere act of fighting, by itself, without a cause? Is rebellion as glorious as loyalty? Is monarchical government, towards which the rebellion aimed, as glorious as republican government? Is it as glorious to fight for slavery as for liberty? Is there no distinction between the advocates of a good and bad cause? And why does the Tribune give way to the miserable trick taught by Masonry, to seek to hide a bad cause under the sanctimonious pretense of respect for the immortal dead? Has the great, free, independent Tribune at last fallen into the march prescribed by Masonry, and goes on with the crowd, making a republican virtue out of the slaveholder's vice? Yes, Masonry gave pitch to the music at the beginning of the war, a pitch on altogether too low a note, one to which the grand march of the Republic could not be possibly carried out; and now the Tribune falls in, and keeps step with the rest. It knew how to oppose slavery; but it knew less than nothing of how to manage a war against it, or to make use of that war for the perpetuity of republican government; and it falls as unsuspectingly into the wiles of Masonry as the greenest country editor who is made to believe that Masonry is deeper versed in a "common faith in immortality" than any other religion in the world.

It is no small matter that the Army of the United States should trifle with its own character and the grave importance of its duties in the way that the Tribune finds so meritorious. The people do not hire armies to perform grave-yard ceremonies for the enemies of their government. Our Army is a school for keeping alive devotion to republican principles, to military discipline, and loyalty to their country. As officers from West Point, where Masonry in no shape is taught (or at least was not in former times) it was admirably adapted to keep alive an inflexible tone of devotion to republican government, and to transfuse this tone into volunteer troops when raised. But if this tone becomes destroyed, and rebels are esteemed by it as deserving a "divided glory," share and share alike, with devoted servitors of the country; if it teaches that the proper duties of a republican army are to adopt the popular habits and customs of the place where it is stationed, though these habits and customs are for the purpose of honoring rebellion, it ceases to be a school for the perpetuation of republican virtues, and will be capable of transfusing nothing into volunteer ranks but the demoralization which its own confusion must inevitably generate.

A people properly jealous of their liberties would hold the Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy strictly responsible for this act of Masonic supererogation on the part of the Army; and they would know why it is permitted to be done. It is a matter of far more importance than the inflation of the currency, bad as that is, and both are the demoralizing consequences of a war that was badly conducted under the influences of Masonry. While the war was still raging, it must be remembered, Congress, whose presiding officers of late years have generally been Masons, chartered Masonic Hall Association in the District of Columbia, thus sanctioning a secret power whose oaths bind its members to kill men, whose practices are but a collusion against the common law, and which administers extra-judicial oaths calculated to defeat the ends of justice. The act was as preposterous as it would be to charter the Council of Ten of the Republic of Venice, and as inconsistent with individual rights and liberties.

This act we must insist on being repealed; and we must have another act passed rendering membership with any secret society on the part of an officer of the Army and Navy, an offense for which he is to be dismissed from the service. To become a Mason is an act opposed to public justice; and no one should be employed as an officer by the Republic, who is guilty of that act. He becomes thereby too narrow and partial to be fit for the public service. ANTI-MASON.

The Economical Farmer's "Order."

[From the Chicago Tribune, May 6th.]

HEBRON, Porter Co., Ind., May 5, 1874.

To the Editor:

SIR:—Before there were a dozen granges organized in this State, I joined the movement, believing it to be an honest effort to help the farmer without wronging others. But, if not premeditated, the temptation has been too strong, and the leaders of this movement have taken the beaten track of pillage and plunder.

And what is this "economical" movement likely to cost the farmers? The charter for each subordinate grange is $15; deputies' charges, and express on books and circulars, not less, on an average, than $10,—making a total cost of at least $25 for organizing each grange. There are, or soon will be, 2,000 granges in this State, at a cost of $50,000 for organizing. The degree dues paid to the State Grange will be $30,000 more,—making a total of $80,000; besides $20,000 per year as quarterly dues. This is one State alone. And what is done with the money? This thing is being adroitly worked up. At first we had a constitutional guarantee that the members of the order should know the amount of money received by the National Grange, and how disbursed. But this was too humiliating for these big-hearted fathers, and this guarantee was removed. Now we can only manage to get an occasional glimpse at the beautiful way the money is going. This self-announced and self-perpetuating oligarchy, styling themselves the National Grange, was prompt to provide that the farmers should pay the expenses of their wives in attending the National Grange; but the extortionate charter-fee is left untouched. This $15 fee is too good a thing to be given up at once. They now have it secure until the next meeting of the National Grange; then, by submitting to the State for ratification, they will get another year; and a two years' "run" will rake it about all in.

It is now proposed to establish a rival Agricultural Department at Washington. The Government has been asked to do almost every foolish thing under the sun; and now the very thing that it is doing these economical fathers propose doing themselves. The whole thing, as now manage , is a medley of paradoxes. Under the head of economy, the National lecturer is traveling from State to State, at a heavy expense, and doubtless a fat salary, to instruct the farmers, not how to produce better crops and make farming more profitable, but to teach them how to bend the thumb and crook the elbow! The "proper" angle, you know. The "beautiful" unwritten work occupies the time of the grange meetings so that there is no opportunity for the consideration of agricultural questions. We have a State Agent who is trying to induce the farmers to buy their implements through him, thus monopolizing, if successful, the whole thing in the hands of one man. This, every one knows, would be immeasurably worse than purchasing implements through the hands of 500 or 600 competing agents.

Our State Grange is unequivocally committed to the non-political policy; and the Indiana Farmer, the grange organ of the State, is carried in Senator Morton's vest-pocket.

The subordinate granges have done much good; and, in pursuing their own successes, they have naturally thought that all was going well elsewhere. But I believe a day of reckoning is near at hand. There is too much intelligence among the farmers to allow themselves long to be made the tools of grasping pretenders.—M. V. Galbreath.

Sumner and the Anti-Slavery Struggle.

FROM THE EULOGY OF SENATOR SCHURZ, BOSTON, APRIL 29th, 1874.

The Anti-Slavery movement is now one of the great chapters of our past history. The passions of the struggle having been buried in thousands of graves, and the victory of Universal Freedom standing as firm and unquestionable as the eternal hills, we may now look back upon that history with an impartial eye. It may be hoped that even the people of the South, if they do not yet appreciate the spirit which created and guided the Anti-Slavery movement, will not much longer misunderstand it.

The Anti-Slavery movement found arrayed against itself all the influences, all the agencies, all the arguments, which ordinarily control the actions of men. Commerce said: Do not disturb Slavery, for its products fill our ships, and are one of the principal means of our exchanges. Industry said: Do not disturb Slavery, for it feeds our machinery and gives us markets. The greed of wealth said: Do not disturb Slavery, for it is an inexhaustable fountain of riches. Political ambition said: Do not disturb Slavery, for it furnishes us combinations and compromises to keep partes alive, and to make power the price of shrewd management. An anxious statesmanship said: Do not disturb Slavery, for you might break to pieces the Union of these States.

There never was a more formidable combination of interests and influences than that which confronted the Anti-Slavery movement in its earlier stages. And what was its answer? "Whether all you say be true or false, it matters not, but slavery is wrong." Slavery is wrong! That one word was enough. It stood there like a huge rock in the sea, shivering to spray the waves dashing upon it. Interest, greed, argument, vituperation, calumny, ridicule, persecution, patriotic appeal,—it was all in vain. Amidst all the storm and assault, that one word stood there unmoved, intact, and impregnable: Slavery is wrong.

Such was the vital spirit of the Anti-Slavery movement in its early developement. Such a spirit alone could inspire that religious devotion which gave to the believer all the stubborn energy of fanaticism; it alone could kindle that deep enthusiasam which makes men willing to risk and sacrifice everything for a great cause; it alone could keep alive that unconquerable faith in the certainty of ultimate success boldly attempted to overcome seeming impossibilities It was indeed a great spirit. As against difficulties which threw pusillanimity into despair, it painfully struggled into light, often baffled, and as often pressing forward with devotion always fresh; nourished by nothing but a profound sense of right; encouraged by nothing but the cheering sympathy of liberty-loving mankind the world over, and by the hope that some day the conscience of the American people would be quickened by a full understanding of the dangers which the existence of the great wrong would bring upon the Republic. No scramble for the spoils of office then, no expectation of a speedy conquest of power,—nothing but that conviction, that enthusiasm, that faith in the breasts of a small band of men, and the prospect of new uncertain struggles and trials.

Of Mr. Sumner's principles the speaker said:

He was an Abolitionist by nature, but not one of those who rejected the Constitution as a covenant with Slavery. His legal mind found in the Constitution no express recognition of Slavery, and he consistently construed it as a warrant of freedom. This placed him in the ranks of those who were called "Political Abolitionists."

He did not think of the sacrifices which this obedience to his moral impulses might cost him. For, at that time Abolitionism was by no means a fashionable thing. An Anti-Slavery man was then, even in Boston, positively the horror of a large portion of polite society. To make Anti-Slavery speeches was looked upon, not only as an incendary, but a vulgar occupation. And that the highly-refined Sumner, who was so learned and able; who had seen the world and mixed with the highest social circles in Europe; who knew the classics by heart, and could deliver judgment on a picture or a statue like a veteran connoisseur; who was a favorite with the wealthy and powerful, and could, in his aspirations for an easy and fitting position in life, count upon their whole influence, if he only would not do anything foolish,—that such a man should go among the Abolitionists and not only sympathize with them, but work with them, and expose himself to the chance of being dragged through the streets by vulgar hands with a rope around his neck, like William Lloyd Garrison,—that was a thing at which the polite society of that day would revolt, and which no man could undertake without danger of being severely dropped. But that was the thing which the refined Sumner actually did, probably without giving a moment's thought to the possible consequences. He went even so far as openly to defy that dictatorship which the great Daniel Webster had for so many years been exercising over the political mind of Massachusetts, and which then was about to exert its power in favor of a compromise with Slavery. . . . .

This was one of the striking peculiarities of Mr. Sumner's character, as all those know who knew him well. Neither was he conscious of the stinging force of the language he frequently employed. He simply uttered what he felt to be true, in language fitting the strength of his convictions. The indignation of his moral sense at what he felt to be wrong was so deep and sincere that he thought everybody must find the extreme severity of his expressions as natural as they came to his own mind. And he was not unfrequently surprised, greatly surprised, when others found his language offensive. . . . .

What appeared a perplexing puzzle to other men's minds was perfectly clear to him. His method of reasoning was simple; it was the reasoning of religious faith. Slavery is wrong,—therefore it must and will perish; Freedom is right,—therefore it must and will prevail, And by no power of resistance, by no difficulty, by no disappointment, by no defeat, could that faith be shaken. For his cause, so great and just, he thought nothing impossible, everything certain. And he was unable to understand how others could fail to share his faith. . . . .

Ah! what a lesson in this for the American people; a lesson learned so often, and, alas! forgotton almost as often as it is learned? Is it well to discourage, to proscribe, in your public men that independent spirit which will boldly assert a conscientious sense of duty, even against the behests of power or party? Is it well to teach them that they must serve the command and interest of party, even at the price of conscience, or they must be crushed under its heel, whatever their past service, whatever their ability, whatever their character may be? Is it well to make them believe that he who dares to be himself must be hunted as a political outlaw, who will find justice only when he is dead? That would have been the sad moral of his death had Charles Sumner died a year ago.

Let the American people never forget that it has always been the independent spirit, the all-defying sense of duty, which broke the way for every great progressive movement since mankind has a history; which gave the American Colonies their sovereignty and made this great Republic; which defied the power of slavery, and made this a Republic of freemen; and which—who knows—may again be needed some day to defy the power of ignorance, to arrest the inroads of corruption, or to break the subtle tyranny of organization in order to preserve this as a Republic. And therefore let no man understand me as offering what I have said about Mr. Sumner's course during the last period of his life as an apology for what he did. He was right before his own conscience, and needs no opology. Woe to the Republic when it looks in vain for the men who seek the truth without predjudice and speak the truth without fear, as they understand it, no matter whether the world be willing to listen or not! Alas for the generation that would put such men into their graves, with the poor boon of an apology for what was in them noblest and best! Who will not agree that, had power or partisan spirit which prosecuted him because he followed higher aims than party interest, ever succeeded in subjugating and holding him after its fashion, against his conscience, against his conviction of duty and sense of right, he would have sunk into his grave a miserable ruin of his great self, wrecked in his moral nature, deserving only a tear of pity. For he was great and useful only because he dared to be himself all the days of his life; and for this you have, when he died, put the laurel upon his brow.

What a blessing it would be to the world if its people would be content with the arrangements which God has made for their welfare, instead of devising all kinds of schemes and organizing all kinds of societies to accomplish the end . The various human organizations designed to attain the happiness of man in time and eternity, undoubtedly have their origin in unbelief respecting the adequacy of divine institutions to effect the end. Why need man devise means or establish societies, to confess that for which God has appointed means and instituted the church, unless he supposes that the appointments of God are insufficient? And yet we find even professing Christians aiding and abetting such infidel devices!—Lutheran Standard.

In a late number of the Telescope remarks on the usefulness of the Masonic organ, the United Brethren Tribune:

Some of the Pennsylvania brethren think that the so-called United Brethren Tribune has been imposed upon its few readers long enough, and now needs "blowing up." True, it has been blown up by its would be editors. But these disgusted brethren in the East think that it needs a blowing up like that Conroy of Toledo gave the box of raspberry-jam and mince-meat, on the first page of that paper, in a recent number. One brother from the East writes: "The 'Tribune,' is distilling a secrecy sentiment into some of our ministers in the Pennsylvania Conference, so that it is necessary that we do all we can to uphold the long-tried principles of the United Brethren church." Another says: "I give it as my opinion that if G. and M. knew the facts in the Tribune's management, they would be ashamed to belong to the tribe. Too thin —too thin." We are satisfied that the backbone of the concern is not in the East, but in a section of the West. No wonder the brethren of the East are tired of being falsely charged with opposition to the principles of the church. Well may the progressive men there protest against paying a college agent $1,200 a year to trifle away his time in running a paper whose head-quarters reliable men say they do not know. Since the paper has resorted to going from town to town seeking a press on which to be published, it might find a welcome in a few third or lower rate towns west of the mountains.

—Brother Barlow will find plenty of new fields opening in New York after the Convention. See the correspondence.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard spoke at Saratoga Springs, Bemis Heights and Harford, N. Y., last week. On Monday evening, the 18th, he had an appointment at Utica.

—Elder Barlow has lately visited Pennsylvania to attend a Convention. He has arranged to make a tour of several counties in eastern New York with Prof. Blanchard.

—R. P. Rathbun has been appointed Conference Evangelist and Lecturer at large with head-quarters at Bath, Steuben county, N. Y., where he may be addressed. He will be more at liberty to lecture than heretofore. The Onondaga County Association lately held a meeting which he addressed.

From the Ohio Agent.

CARY, May 8, 1874.

To the Christian Cynosure, Greeting:

DEAR FRIENDS: A number of letters have come to my post-office during the week while absent, and in view of my time all being under contract between now and the 19th inst., the time appointed for the State meeting, this necessarily lays an imbargo upon my replying to them personally, as well as writing to many others that I should love to address, touching our approaching meeting, and other subjects of interest.

I just reached home this P. M. and will leave to-morrow, to spend the Sabbath in Seneca county, and to hold a series of meetings in that county next week, and labor for the circulation of your noble self among the people there. The Monday eve of the following week is also engaged for a lecture which I purpose to fill on my way to Flat Rock Convention; so you see I shall have but little time for correspondence till after our State meeting. I failed to state I have been attending in my absence, a Sabbath School Convention of interest at Winter Station, Sandusky county, at which I procured five subscribers for you, besides doing other work of interest for our mutual cause. You will please say this much apologetically for us to our kind correspondents, one of whom said, "please answer if convenient, but don't forget to write to the Cynosure."

I have received letters from two persons in the vicinity of the Morenci tragedy, both expressive of much feeling on that barbarious and mysterious question. One says: "We think that every unprejudiced mind, when they consider all the circumstances, cannot help but look upon the institution with suspision at least. But if these marks of violence, the throat cut across, the tongue torn out, etc., don't point out the guilty parties we think the way Masons jest about it does. Some of them seem to treat it with as much levity as they would an old horse jockey being bitten in a trade."

He says further: "We trust the matter is not settled yet." To all of which we say, and believe that every lover of law and order will also respond amen and amen!

The other says: "Some of us feel very much alarmed for the safety of Elder J. R. Baird, notwithstanding that notice purporting to come from his pen published in the Cynosure. We fear that may have been a Masonic trick." I may also add that I have writen to him requesting his assistence June 9th, at Spring Hill, Fulton Co., at our first county annual meeting, but have not as yet heard anything from him. We have encouragement to state that Bro. Stoddard will be with us on that occasion; but very much regret that he cannot be present at the State meeting. Bro. J. T. Kiggins, Rev. J. G. Carson, Bishop Weaver and many other friends have been earnestly solicited, and are hopefully expected to be present at the State meeting. Yours as ever,

D. S. CALDWELL.

From the Illinois Agent.

CLINTON, Wis., May 12, 1874.

DEAR BRO. K:—Having occasion to visit Wisconsin, I am doing a little work by the way. At Grand Ridge, LaSalle Co., Ill., I presented the claims of our Association to a respectable and attentive audience. The subject was new to them, but awakened some sympathy as well as opposition. At Lockport, Will Co., I was greatly encouraged by the energy of Father Preston who is truly a veteran in the cause. I spoke on Sabbath evening to an attentive audience in the Cong'l church on the relation of Freemasonry to Christianity, and gave notice of other lectures there. At Baraboo, Wis., I found Prof. J. W. Wood as untiring and devoted as ever. With his assistance we got up a chart of the first seven degrees of York Masonry, which, I think, will be of use in our lectures. At Albion, Dane Co., Wis., I was kindly received by Rev. J. E. Backus, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, and Prof. Cornwall, who is at the head of the flourishing school at that place. The village is pleasant, the people of more than ordinary intelligence and piety, and the school buildngs large and commodious. They have (I think) never had a dram shop in their village. The only church in the place numbers over three hundred members, and all keep the seventh day. By invitation I preached for them on their Sabbath, and for the M. E. brethren in Edgerton on their's. I lectured Saturday evening to a large and intelligent audience. The saddest thing I saw at Albion and vicinity was extensive cultivation of tobacco. This business has tended to lower the tone of Christian sentiment, and though this people stand committed against secret societies, yet many of them have joined the grange. When will the Lord's people learn to be consistent? and when will the power of this hydra-headed mystery of iniquity be broken?

Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

Elder Baird at Linden, Mich.

May 9, 1874.

Our community have been highly edified in listening to three lectures from Rev. J. R. Baird, and I assure you they told terribly on the fraternity through this section of the country. They try, however, to carry a bold front, and some go so far as to offer to bet that he never was a member of a Masonic lodge, but that species of brag does not satisfy those who sat and noted the countenances of the members, for no book ever had a better or more accurate index to its contents, than the countenances of the Masons, (even the most reckless,) to show the truth of Elder Baird's exposition. I am satisfied of one fact, and that is this, that the Masons are a powerful force to combat, steeped in sin and iniquity; surrounded by darkness, bound by the most wicked oaths to screen their unholy principles, well carried out; but while I live, my motto shall be to battle on.

The revelations of the unholy principles of Masonry are becoming more popular here daily, and I hope soon to be able to send for them by the thousands that every family, yes, every child of every family, may have them to use and read, that all well disposed minds may know all about them and abhor them as they merit. I look for good news in every Cynosure abroad as well as here, and may the reform continue to roll onward until every human being on earth may abhor it as the good Lord did the devil and sin on the mount.

Yours in earnest,

SAMUEL SWEAT.

From the Pacific Coast.

Dear Cynosure:

On last Friday evening events occured in our town which will immortalize the order of Freemasons, as being the grand luminary or great dispenser of moral and religious light, in our midst. The Anti-masons, driven as they are in all places by Masonic slander and vile dealing, had resort to a public defense. We engaged the services of Rev. N. W. Harrow to lecture; made a public announcement to the effect that a lecture would be delivered at the United Brethren church on the above named evening; sent posters to various places; put them up; had them torn down, of course. It soon appeared that their first effort to defeat us was to lie the people to stay at home. For this purpose they enlisted all the Jacks to their aid; and while the ancient and the honorable sheep-skin gentleman worked, the Jacks brayed. As the last resort to keep the good people from the light of truth, they reported (just before the time of meeting) that it was postponed to the next night, all this, however, did not suffice; therefore, on the evening of the lecture, they appeared in full force, headed by old grey-headed sinners of the craft, with the braying of Jacks "waxing" louder and louder; and the lecturer had not proceeded far till evident signs of disturbance were visible.

The first was a goat. (Now comes a flood of light.) As the goat entered the house, it became furious and made fight with the ladies and little children. The "Sons of light" at this juncture made the door fast on the outside by means of a rope. The goat, however, was soon made secure to one of the seats, and the lecture went on.

Soon a beam of spiritual light broke in "from the east," by the means of a volley of stones against the church building, damaging the house to some extent. The marks will remain a monument to the memory of Freemasons and of Masonry for its benevolence, charity, innocence, light, love and soul-sanctifying power, for some time to come.

Now I must say that deep mystery o'erspreads my mind how people can and are so humbugged by such a sham and fraud; yet we know it is so.

For the encouragement of your readers, I will say that the ball is in motion at this place, and that we have a few who will fight it out on this line. The ranks of the enemy are on the alert, and they know that the irrepressible conflict is upon them. We feel that "God is our help," and if he "be for us who can be against us." I think that this coast is more oppressed by this nightmare of corruption than it is East. We call upon all lovers of Christ and his religion, to pray for us. We long for an organization against this "hydra-headed monster," that we may be better prepared to fight against so fearful enemy of church and state.

Yours for truth,

Lyceum Debate in Russell County, Kansas.

April 4, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:

The tracts sent me came in the right time. I have been circulating the Cynosure which I suppose originated the question for debate in the lyceum at Bunker Hill: Resolved, "That secret oath-bound societies are anti-republican." The programme placed me on the affirmative with Mr. Corbett, and Mr. Adams and Mr. Higby, lawyers and Masons, negative. I found the programme only gave me ten minutes; so to make the best use of that possible, I read and commented on part of the Master Mason's oath found in Morgan's Exposition. The negative came up with the usual argument that Morgan was a perjured man, and hence unworthy of belief; thereby confirming the truth of Morgan's revelations; and this logic was discovered by the speaker before he had occupied his ten minutes, so he made a sweeping assertion that the affirmative had no arguments and closed. But his colleague having more brass, went on at great length, claiming all the great statesmen and warriors of our country for Masonry; among the rest, George Washington; claiming also that Masonry had done great good during the war for the Union, and that it is a benevolent institution. After the exercises, I distributed tracts to nearly all present. One old grey-headed man told me as I gave him a tract, that he had seen the great excitement consequent upon the murder of Morgan. . . I have voted my last for Masons, and intend to labor for reform in the government. I want the religious amendment inserted in the Constitution. Yours for truth,

Lodge Charity.

NEW CASCO, Mich., May 6, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

I wish to state a fact in regard to Masonic charity, which took place a few weeks ago. A man living in one of the lumber shanties on the Chicago and Mich. Lake Shore R. R. was taken sick, and in a short time after died. He was a member of the Masonic lodge. Being in destitute circumstances, his widow applied to the lodge for help, and was refused, because he failed through sickness to pay up his dues, the amount being $3.00. She had not a dress fit for the funeral occasion, and some of the neighbors (not Masons) helped her in her distress. "Tell it not in Gath," that for the want of $3.00 he was not exalted to the grand lodge above.

C. B. SHERK.

From Jefferson County, N. Y.

STONE MILLS, N. Y.

Editor of the Cynosure:—For a long time I have had it in my mind to write to you on the subject of Anti-masonry. I succeeded in getting a ministerfrom Watertown, (our county seat,) who is a seceding Mason and exposes the evils of the institution in an earnest manner, to give a lecture on the subject. He gave the obligations and penalties of the four degrees, and stated that Morgan's book was true to his certain knowledge, as far as the four degrees. A number of Masons were present; and I have just learned that the minister has received an anonymous letter stating that if he values his life he must keep silent on the subject. But the old man, (he is 75 years old,) is not to be silenced; he says that he will not cease to speak against it as long as he lives. I would be very glad if there could be sent here a traveling lecturer, that the people might be awakened on the subject. I intend to go to the Syracuse Convention in June, and hope to get acquainted with some of the earnest workers against spiritual wickedness in high places (or dark places.) You may hear from me again. Yours in the good work,

C. D. GRAHAM.

At Annieville, Iowa.

Eds. Cynosure:

Our work is progressing very slowly here. I know at present of but four persons in this vicinity who are willing to speak out boldly in the cause: Rev. C. W. Belknap and wife, my mother and myself. My father was the first to make a motion in that direction here. With the aid of Rev's. Belknap and Edgerton, a U. B. mission was established here; but after the removal of the Rev. Edgerton, and death of my father, no other minister being supplied, the grange came in and broke up the church entirely for the present; but I am looking for a better time. I sincerely hope that the organization of a State association will soon be effected in Iowa. I mean to try and inaugurate an anti-secret party in our county next fall or sooner.

Yours truly, T.

Correspondence.

Experience Meeting.

After the refusal to appear before the lodge, action was the order of the day with the lodge men. Among them were ministers of the Gospel, which "is the power of God unto salvation," but to reclaim their wayward brother, the "power of God" was not their plan; it was the power of the lodge. That was brought to bear, and that not in the hands of ministers alone, for they were in the minority, but they being 'unequally yoked together with unbelievers', combined together with them to prosecute their course against my conscience. But the "power of God to salvation" even from the yoke or power of the lodge, was not to be beaten by the lodge; for "it is not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord." But the lodge tried might and power, both of which will be seen in these reports.

The lodge men were "froward" as will be seen, for they did not comply with my requirement, i. e., to drop the question in the outset, and treat each other as men ought to do regardless of Masonry; but as the froward mouth will do, it was the order of the day, and in concert, both ministers, members of churches, and the world, the flesh and the devil, went to whispering as none but naughty persons and wicked men will do. A grand transformation took place at once. The man who they called good, and by their oath (such as it is) had sworn to call good, and defend his character and advance his business, in particular, and generally too, had turned out to be the worst man known, though at the same time an acceptable minister of the Gospel, with the standing of local elder in the M. E. church, which standing is still good, not creditable to Masonry or the world, however, but is by the grace of God, for which I am thankful to him.

REV. J. B. LOGAN.

A veteran friend in the reform of Linn county, Iowa, who has been outspoken in opposing the lodge, thus relates his experience:

I got hold of brother Bernard's work, and although I have lived in a nest of Masons, I alternately read and then went and told it abroad. Within one year I had a horse stolen and a cow taken off and drowned, but I ceased not to warn men against the most damnable heresy that infidelity and the devil ever concocted, and within the last year, in connection with brother Bartholomew and others, have tried to hold some Anti-masonic meetings, trying to bear my share of the speaking. I cannot do it well, but I can do it honestly. Brother Bartholomew I find a true yoke-fellow in this great, but unpopular work. I believe he dearly loves the truth because it is truth. Brother B. has been very sick; for a few days there was little hope of his living, but he did not want for watchers or anything else. This was all done from a better motive than to escape the penalties of secrecy. It was done by full and loving hearts. he is slowly mending, can sit up but few minutes at a time. A. T. CURTIS.

The Political Question.

DEAR LICK, Ohio, May 2, 1874.

BRO. KELLOGG: In answer to the question "What shall be done at Syracuse" Bro. Barlow's letter in the Cynosure of April 30th, so well expresses the wishes of Anti-masons here, that nothing but a hearty amen is require from us. Where voting has been tried by our friends there is no reasonable ground for complaint. Let any two or three working men take hold of the reform in any county; let them stand firm and manifest zeal according to knowledge, and they soon will have their faith strengthened. God will raise them up friends; and there is no restraint with the Lord to conquer "by many or by few." Numbers here will not vote at all if the choice is between two men pledged to secrete crime and shield the criminal. Satan is a diplomat; he loves compromize. Fight him or he will conquer. Give us a ticket; leaders tried and faithful. They are now in our ranks. Saul is amongst the stuff. David is practicing even now with his sling, killing the lion and the bear. His arm is gaining strength. His blows dealt in faith are falling like thunderbolts. He is going forth in the strength of Israel's God; and the thick skull of the Goliah of secrecy shall not withstand him. Our enemies are thrusting the issue upon us. Even grangers are dabbling in politics. This youngest child of secrecy is proving its parentage. With us the chief sachem of almost every grange is also a leading Mason or Odd-fellow, or both. Men who never farmed anything but a lodge are farming the granges in the interest of organized secrecy and fattening upon the spoils. Secrecy proposes to usurp the supreme power and is already preparing to "cross the Rubicon." The great question of the day is, Shall we submit to the dark empire of the lodge, or shall American liberty yet live? The people must decide. The issue must be presented. The enemy is recruiting—almost drafting. Black balls lie idle. Rough ashlars are in demand. They are rushed into the wall with scarcely a touch from the gavel. Sworn to conseal and sworn to obey.

Yours for the war.

H. S. KIRK.

From a Colleague of Stearns and Colver.

CLINTON, Mich., May 7, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure:

I congratulate you in view of the increase and energy of the anti-secret reformers. They seem to be awakening from a long spell of repose, while the enemy has been sowing tares among us. I feel exceedingly mortified that the denomination to which I belong should so generally remain silent. They took the lead in the great Morgan excitement, which drew forth the following compliment from Professor Stuart of Andover in his letter to the Suffield committee. Among other things he says: "It will stand as a lasting memorial to the honor of the Baptist denomination through succeeding generations that they fearlessly encountered this midnight demon, regardless of the popular outcry against them and with steady firmness expelled the fell destroyer from among them. It is a source of gratification that other denominations are fast following their example!

We seem to have been stumbling over a volcano that now is threatening an eruption. Demons never sleep in times of quiet. Our churches and ministers too generally have adopted the "let alone" spirit; and though disgusted with heresy very generally dare not face it with manly boldness. Our editors and ministers seem to dread the power of those dark-lantern systems. It was so in this State when I wrote against them in 1848 and '49. The proprietor of the Christian Herald trembled for the result. On reading the introductory number he said to the editor "Let it come." The result was, where one said "Stop my paper," some half-dozen new patrons filled the vacuum. I think it might be so again if our religous papers would show fidelity to their trust, and unfaltering faith in the Redeemer of lost men. It has been fully demonstrated during the Morgan affair that Masonry sets all laws, human and divine, at defiance, and showed itself too mighty for the laws and authority of the State of New York. Well then does it boast that the "world in arms cannot destroy it." But let the people be fully enlightened and meet it at the ballot box; and they will soon learn what the power of public opinion can do when it maims their right hand of power in our legislative and judicial halls. And to this we must come as a nation and decide the battle by rendering secret clanship odious in civil society as well as religious. Thousands in our churches are held in cruel bondage by this priestly goddess. The terrorism of their horrid oaths hold them at bay, and until they are enlightened by investigation and learn that their oaths, unlawfully taken, are a rope of sand; that they are in duty bound to break them and come out and assume their manhood, and by true repentance take a stand on the side of the God of truth and Christianity, there will be no rest or peace in either civil or religious society. Respectfully yours for truth and righteousness, R. Powell.

Alarming, if True.

While conversing with a Congregationalist minister recently in reference to delivering an occasional lecture on the anti-secrecy reform, he remarked, "I have had some experience in that line and am convinced that the Congregationalist churches will not sustain a minister who utters his sentiments if they are averse to the lodge." I believe that this is the opinion of many who detest the lodges but dare not utter their sentiments for fear of proscription, persecution and penury.

If it is a fact, it is an alarming fact, and should receive prompt attention. It means simply that the churches are in bondage to the lodge, and our young men must obtain license to occupy our pulpits from the lodge and even the fathers in Israel can only retain their positions by suppressing their sentiments if adverse to the craft.

Gen'l. Phelp's Book.

Editor Cynosure:---I have just read Gen. J. W. Phelps' "Secret Societies Ancient and Modern" which I procured at the Cynosure office. Will you let me speak of this book to your readers who have not read it.

"A lesson in itself sublime,
A lesson worth enshrining."

Its heart is patriotism, its soul Christianity, and its tongue a sword for truth and against error. Republicans read it. Patriots, read it. Reformers, read it. Christians, heed its warnings, at the altar of prayer, in the pulpit, in your church meetings, at the ballot-box.

This book is not the only one worthy of high commendations on this subject.--O no! But it swings out like a well trimed chandelier all ablaze in this worse than heathenishly benighted land. Read it! J. C. Graham.

OUR MAIL.

M. S. Drury, Castalia, Iowa, writes:

"I desire to express my gratitude to God and to the self denying workers who take the lead in the publication of the Christian Cynosure for the success already attained. The enlarged paper is destined to have a steady increase of circulation and influence. Its agents can work with renewed zeal and hope. The future never has looked so bright. I am in the midst of grangers on every side. The institution is crumbling. Its foundation stones will not stand the coldness of its own selfishness, nor the bright sunlight of truth and righteousness. Honest thinkers begin to see that the principle of secrecy is wrong, and that the little secret societies feed the large ones as truly as the little fish feed the big ones. I predict for the Cynosure the most brilliant career of any paper in America."

J. Chadwick, Smecthport, Pa., writes:

"God of the Bible bless you in your work of faith and labor of love. I propose never to stack arms until victory or death. Truth will triumph. The right will prevail. Our weapons are not carnal but mighty in proportion to our obedience and faith."

Philo Millard, Woodhull, N. Y., writes:

"I am the only one that has ever tried to get subscribers for the Cynosure in our town. I have heard Solomon Southwick lecture against Freemasonry when he was a candidate for Governor for the State of New York. He told what he knew of Masonry. Those were stirring times. My father took Southwick's paper, so I got well posted in my young days. I shall try to be at the Convention at Syracuse."

Train up children to read the Cynosure as this friend read an anti-secrecy paper in his youth.

J. B. Nessell, Ellington, N. Y., writes of a subscriber who is anxious about Elder Baird, as are many others. Elder Baird has been heard from quite recently at this office. Mr. Nessell writes:

"It is high time that something should be done to put a stop to Masonry."

James Auten, Galion, O., writes:

"I am an old man in the flesh but a young man in the spirit. I have passed my three score and twelve. I have been reading your paper for the last three years and I am a thoroughly converted man to the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ and the wickedness of Freemasonry and all secret societies, clans and rings. I have procured about thirty new subscribers for three months. · · ·

They who fight whiskey must fight Masonry also; for Masonry was born with whiskey and must die with whiskey and both be buried in one grave."

Julia A. Cornelius, Callao, Mo., writes:

"I am much pleased with what you call your new departure. I think the paper is in much better form than before. · · · I have been trying some and aim to try more to get subscribers to your paper."

Moses Gallup, Wasioja, Minn., writes:

"In February I could not get one order for your paper, but after giving or lending papers and books, I now get orders more easily. I can take orders for $5 or $10 books from one to three to ten per day; but the Masonry subject was harder to stir up. I design to send you 100 orders for the Cynosure. I work hard and even give the commission when for six months or more."

We hope others will fix some definite number of subscriptions to obtain as this friend has.

M. Allen, Randolph, Wis., writes:

"I lived in Morgan times, and helped elect Wm. Slade Governor of Vermont. Voted direct for Adams and Barlow last fall. Shall not vote for Masons for any important office. Give us a political party at Syracuse. We move slow in Wisconsin yet we have some determined men on reforms."

Wm. Millet, Springdale, Ia., writes:

"I like the Cynosure all the better in its present shape and variety."

We hope to receive some new subscriptions from that locality.

John A. Dodds, Mt. Chestnut, Pa., writes:

"Everybody is joining the grangers only the old side Covenanters."

John Collins, Antweep, O., writes:

"I am so well pleased with your paper in exposing secrecy that I felt it a duty to the cause and to God to solicit others to subscribe for the paper. I have succeeded in getting three subscriptions. I hope to get more soon."

Miss S. L. Corbett, Commerce, Mich., writes:

"We had concluded not to take the Cynosure this year, but as it was still continued, and in its new form, we read it with renewed interest, and have concluded we will take it again."

Godlib Helben, Logan, Hocking Co., O., writes:

"I am a member of the United Presbyterian church, and stand opposed to secret societies. I have been taking the Cynosure ever since I heard of it and will do all that I can for it."

Rev. Jas. A. Clark, Prospect, Pa., writes:

"I was at a meeting of Presbytery yesterday and got up a club of twelve for three months. · · · I hope some of your lecturers may come to this county and organize it for the cause."

We hope his example will be copied by many others.

James Barnett, West Geneva, O., writes:

"You are informed that the United Presbyterian church exclude Freemasons, but the fact is they have a number of Freemasons and quite a quantity of Odd-fellows in their communion. I know of one of their members who supposed when he became a member of that church that they would exclude Freemasons, but found their testimony was not designed to keep out such if quiet, and he has forsaken the communion in sealing ordinances for that reason alone. Yet he attends their preaching. I understand that one of their congregations is broken into two parties on the farmers' grange matter. I find no denomination of Christians who are not more or less tainted with the disposition of secrecy."

John Dorcas, Shiloh, Iowa, writes:

"I think the Cynosure grows better. I like it more than ever. I hope that in the future, as in the past, it may continue to hew to the line regardless of consequences. God is on the side of right. Let us be sure we are right and we have nothing to fear. Enclosed find a list of twelve three-month subscribers."

D. Baker, Remington, Ind., writes:

"I wish I could get more (subscribers) but folks here are in debt for their land and feel poor. I will get all I can. May the Lord bless you in this noble cause."

A. Hard, Painted Post, N. Y., writes:

"Wish I had 100 Cynosures. I would send them through the post office to men and women that I think would act as agents. I think that is the way to make it known and get subscribers. Will do my best with all the tracts and papers you will send me."

Rev. J. S. Rice, Pownell, Maine, sends nine three-months subscriptions and writes:

"I expect to get many more subscribers soon. · · · The roads have been so bad that I could not get about before. I shall do all I can for the Cynosure."

We are glad to hear from friends in Maine. Until this list was received we sent the Cynosure to five post offices and six subscribers only in the whole State. Yet we think that State contains good material to work on and believe that, through the blessing of God, six or even fewer determined men can set in operation influences that will cause a majority of her 90,500 voters to testify by their votes their abhorence of Masonry, and put the Cynosure into hundreds of those families which are counted in her population of 626,915 souls.

Forty Years Ago.

Spurious Masonic revelations were early palmed off on the public by the fraternity to break the force of the genuine. One such attempt is thus described in the "Anti-masonic Herald" of January, 1829: "A book represented to be Illustrations of Masonry by Wm. Morgan is circulated in many parts of the United States. This book is at least three times as large as Morgan's. It pretends to develope as high as the Royal Arch degree; but the oaths are left out, besides many other things of importance.

In the month of June last, a zealous Mason exultingly placed one of these books in our hand, and pointed out a letter, which was represented to have been written by Capt. William Morgan, to one Williams, a Grand Master, in which the patriot and martyr Morgan was represented as an infidel and atheist. We immediately deteeted the fraud and exposed it to the presenter, who left us with precipitation.

The first edition of Captain Morgan's book was mostly purchased up by the fraternity, and the spurious work alluded to issued in the city of Albany, and spread throughout the country as genuine. It sells at the same price as Morgan's, and in the first three degrees contains considerable fact; but the others are perfectly calculated to mislead. It has been pushed ahead of the genuine work whenever it could be. We have several times been made acquainted with it, but have recently been informed by one of our correspondents, that it is extensively circulated in Alabama.

The "Anti-Freemason," Boston, Feb. 11th, 1829, thus remarks on a Masonic report of the disposition of Morgan: "The old Smyrna humbug is out again. It is pretended that Morgan is now in Smyrna and has turned Turk! We advise those who invented this story to screen Masonry, not to tell so foolish falsehoods as this; but if they will tell any, let them be such as somebody at least will believe. Morgan in Smyrna, indeed! Why then not produce him? Why not bring him hither and allay the excitement now overspreading the land? If Masons themselves believe Morgan to be in Smyrna, they are inexcusable for not taking measures at once to bring him to this country. But Morgan is not in Smyrna. An officer of the United States navy contradicts the report and says that a man by the name of Morgan is there, but that he is not the Morgan in question, having been there five years.

LESSON XXII.—MAY 31, 1874.—THE SMITTEN ROCK.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—NUM. XX. 7-13.
Commit 7-13 ; Primary Verse, 11.

7 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

8 Take the rod, and gather thou the assembly together, thou and Aaron, thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes ; and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock : so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink.

9 And Moses took the rod from before the Lord, as he commanded him.

10. And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels ; must we fetch you water out of this rock ?

11 And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice : and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.

12. And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is the water of Meribah ; because the children of Israel strove with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Between the events of our last lesson and this, there was an interval of nearly thirty-eight years. These are called the years of wandering. We have but a brief account of these years. Four interesting lessons are found in the Home Readings. Our chapter opens with an account of the death of Miriam, and closes with the death of Aaron. Our lesson is between.

What is the first topic ? How long had they wandered ? (Deut. i. 46 ; ii. 14.) How many remained of the men who had been at Kadesh before ? (Deut. ii. 16.) Only Moses, Aaron, Caleb and Joshua. How would they know when to resume the march to Canaan ? (Num. xiv. 33, 34.) Was the conduct of the people much better than that of their fathers ?

What is the second topic ? Verses 7, 8. Where is a similar miracle recorded ? (Ex. xvii. 1-7.) Where was God to stand in that miracle ? (verse 6.) What was Moses to do ? (verse 6.) What three things did God command Moses to do in our lesson ? (verse 8.)

What is the third topic ? Verses 9-11. What four things did Moses do ? (verses 9, 11.) To what was he to speak ? To whom did he speak ? How did he sin in his speech ? (see Num. xxvii. 14 ; Deut. xxxii. 51.) What is said in Ps. cvi. 32, 33 ? What was Moses to do to the rock ? What did he do ?

What is the fourth topic ? Verses 12, 13. What did God say was their sin, and what their punishment ? (verse 12.) Did Moses afterward ask God to permit him to go in ? (Deut. iii. 23-27.) What was God's answer ? What name is given to this place to distinguish it from Ex. xvii ? (Num. xvii. 14 ; Deut. xxxii. 51.)

Lessons. Even great and good men fail and sin. Jesus is the only exception. He did all things well. In God's service we need to be careful to follow just what he says. Sin will be punished. Moses was forgiven, saved, and very highly honored. (Deut. xxxiv. 1-6 ; Matt. xvii. 3.) But he was punished for his sin.—National Sunday School Teacher.

Too Many Points.

The making of too many points in teaching a lesson is often equivalent to making no point at all. In regard to this the Baptist Teacher says:

The thoughtful, studious teacher will often find himself embarrassed by the great variety and richness of truth contained in the lesson. To attempt to develop it all within the limits usually allotted to it, would only result in a failure to develop anything aright.

Persuing the exhaustive method, just as the teacher begins to warm up in his work, and the subject to open up to his view, the tap of the superintendent's bell smites on his ear and heart, and there he is obliged to leave the lesson lying all in heaps, with nothing brought to perfection. Don't say everything that can be said. Don't undertake to teach everything that can be learned from the lesson. Select your starting-point, your line of march, your goal; and, with your eye steadily fixed on it, press to it.

Novels.

It was God's Word they were studying, and the place was the story of Israel's unfaithfulnes—the Golden Calf. Deeply interested in the subject, the teacher was conducting an animated discussion of the truths in the lesson, when one boy turned to another and exclaimed, "Wish she would read us stories." The teacher was instructed and grieved. The hour was short; the lesson full of truth; precious, important, valuable truth. A mine of wealth within the reach of each one, and here were two boys who would not apply their heart unto wisdom. When a child is used to tea, coffee, cider, or wine for drink, pure, clear water does not quench thirst. When the man indulges in tobacco, gaming, and other immoralities, wholesome food, a quiet home, and a virtuous course of life does not satisfy him. So when the mind is accustomed to revel in thrilling fiction; where the ideas are nicely dressed, intoxicating the fancy, and bewitching the imagination, the enervated soul is indisposed to search for wisdom. Does not relish plain, unvarnished truth. Wisdom is not attractive; knowledge is not pleasanl unto the soul. Let us then, in keeping our hearts, abstain from novels. A successful teacher of a large Sabbath-school class of boys, said: "I have learned that telling stories does not accomplish what the teacher desires. I can get better attention and preserve better order when adhering closely to the lesson, to say nothing about the greater amount of good that is accomplished by such instruction."

Home and Health Hints.

Keep Your Mouth Shut.

Keep your mouth shut in cold weather. The nostrils are the proper inlets and outlets of the breath. They are purposely circuitous. The air thus has its chill taken off before reaching the lungs, while, on its return, it restores again the warmth it had abstracted. On the contrary, the air taken in through the mouth strikes, perhaps, at a temperature of zero, directly on the most delicate of the local organs, causing, often, hoarseness, cough, bronchitis or pulmonary congestion.

Moreover, the nostrils are naturally inhaling tubes, better than the best sold in the shops. When the breathing is done through them, the slight resistance to expiration—and it is this resistance which leads most people to form the habit of breathing through their mouth—causes the lungs to fill to the full, thus calling every part of them into necessary action, more completely oxygenating the blood, and greatly diminishing any consumptive tendency. In this latter view, it is important to breath through the nostrils in warm weather as well as in cold, and also to accustom oneself to sleep with the mouth closed.

Keep the mouth shut when infectious diseases are around. Air breathed through the mouth is borne into the windpipe with a strong rush, carrying along the morbid particles with which the air may be charged, directly to the lungs, the thin membrane of which interposes but little hindrance to the action of contagious matter. When the air is breathed through the nostrils, these particles are likely to be lodged on their moist walls, and to be soon washed out by the natural secretion.

It is well to heed this rule when breathing the air of any sick room,—even consumption may prove infectious to one long shut up with it in badly ventilated rooms, but it is of prime importance in cases of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, small-pox and other diseases similarly infectious. Of course, there can be no substitute for thorough ventilation,—even the best disinfectants are of little worth without it,—still, it is often necessary to enter rooms over whose arrangements we have no control.

Keep your mouth shut when the air is filled with dust of any kind. Dust habitually inhaled may prove in time, as fatal as miasma, or small pox-effluvium. As with the particles of morbid matter, so it is with dust particles; inspiration through the mouth carries them directly into the lungs, irritating their delicate membraues, while inspiration through the nostrils lodges most of them along the nasal passages, whence they are easily dislodged. Mistresses, considerate of the welfare of their servants, will duly enlighten them on this point.

But our rule is as good morally as physically; for sometimes worse matter comes from the mouth than ever enters it. We say, then, though it has been said a thousand times, keep your mouth shut when you are angry. A smothered fire, however fierce it may be, is soon out.

We cannot forbear adding, now we are in the mood for it, keep your mouth shut when you have nothing worth saying. If you have nothing within but common-place, or nonsense, or tattle, or evil thoughts, better let them rot inside than pour them out on others. Besides, all bad kept in by a strong will, reacts in good.—Watchman and Reflector.

Farm and Garden.

Setting out Trees by the Roadside.

The growth of timber, to take the place of our rapidly disappearing forests, has led farmers in some sections to set out trees. While it may not be convenient or desirable for all to adopt this plan, every one can set out trees by the roadside along his own land. There are many advantages to be derived from them, which can be seen at once, to more than pay for the trouble. They beautify the premises, and give a better appearance to the landscape. And if the trees are maple, which is one of the best and most easily raised, when grown they will furnish a large yield of maple sugar. If butternut or walnut, the nuts are in a measure a compensation for the labor of setting them out. There is to be in the future such a demand for wood that it will not answer to cut down and not replace in some way. In Baden and in other German States, as well as in some of the departments of France, the law obliges a person to plant a tree in the place of every one cut down. In this way, miles of rows of shade trees line the roads, making pleasant, shaded walks through all the towns and villages. It is a fact not generally known, that trees increase their woodmaking capacity in about the same ratio as the square of the number of years indicating their age. The third year they make nine times, the fifth year twenty-five times, and the tenth year one hundred times the amount of wood they make the first year. The trees grow more rapidly as they grow older, and we cannot afford to cut them down until they get their growth. Some towns have formed associations for beautifying their localities by planning parks and setting out trees by the roadside.

PREPARING SLIPS FOR PLANTING.—The Gazette des Campagne recommends to dip the extremeties of the slip in collodin containing twice as much cotton as the ordinary material used in photography. Let the first coat dry, and then dip again. After planting the slip, the development of the roots will take place very promptly. This method is said to be particularly efficacious in woody slips, and to succeed well in scions of the geranium-fuchsia, and similar plants.

LARGE OR SMALL POTATOES FOR SEED.—The Rural Home Journal gives a report of experiments made on this subject by E. Reynolds, of Manchester, New York. It says he has planted them in juxtaposition, in the same row and in adjoining rows, and found that when planting was followed by moist and favorable weather, there was but little difference in results; but, when a drouth followed planting, the large potatoes took the lead and held it through the season, yielding much larger crops.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, May 21, 1874.

For Notices of the National Association Anniversary etc., see fourth page.

The Corner-stone of the United States Custom House, our readers know, is advertised to be laid by Freemasons, here in Chicago, on their Saint's day, June 24th. I have learned by conversation that lawyers, editors, business men, Catholics and Protestants, here in Chicago, are indignant at it, as an insult to the American people whose the building is. A lawyer said to me to-day, "It goes to the Masons by default, because nobody else takes the matter up." He is mistaken. Freemasons draw money from their dupes as pagan priests do from their's; and keep men paid to watch, seize, and appropriate such occasions, while honest men are worked to death in their own business. There is, however, a talk of a meeting to oppose it, and a tract to circulate among the citizens exposing the imposition.

Our Anniversary in 1875.—Don't forget to consult your constituents and come up prepared to nominate, vote for, and appoint the place of next year's meeting, before we leave Syracuse. This is very important. We want a whole year beforehand to work for the meeting of 1875, when we shall be in the outer gyrations of the next Presidential whirlpool. Don't forget this.

Also, don't forget to bring the last subscriber possible to the Cynosure to our Syracuse meeting. Remember that the paper is put one dollar cheaper than other papers of the same size. It does not yet pay, but the publishers feel encouraged by the receipts to believe that the Syracuse meeting will place it on a paying basis.

THE SYRACUSE MEETING.

One paper more brings us to Syracuse. At no time in the history of our cause have we approached an anniversary under auspices so propitious. Messrs. Stoddard and Barlow, aided by a month's campaign of Prof. Blanchard, and all backed by Bro. Stratton and an energetic committee, give promise of a stirring up of the people, preparatory to our meeting, beyond any other year. And then the locality of the meeting, so near the "Ridge Road," made famous as the old Roman "Appian Way," by the abduction of Morgan and the gloom which has settled over it ever since, and the wakened memories of the multitude of survivors who remember that horrible transaction, will all give added interest to our gathering.

But neither these, nor the delightful region of central New York, robed in beauty by the "month of roses," will make a profitable meeting if we forget our entire dependence on Christ, and the presence of the Holy Spirit. The principalities and powers against whom we "wrestle," ever proportion their dark exertions to the power of the attack on their realm. When Christ took his cause toward Jerusalem for its last earthly conflict with them, then appeared their stupendous energy and malignant craft; attacking Peter, stimulating ambition in James and John, perplexing, confounding and bewildering everything, till their terrible assaults brought "great drops of blood," by mere mental agitation, from Christ himself.

"Forewarned is forearmed." Let all our papers stir Christian people to pray for this meeting, in secret, in the family, and in social prayer meetings. Pray for Syracuse. New York is the Jerusalem of this cause.

FUNDS.

One thing our lecturers cannot do. They cannot work the miracle of collecting funds sufficient for self-support from people who would give more money to suppress discussion than to keep it up and enlarge it. We need and ought to have a strong State Lecturer in every State. If we had thirty-six strong, faithful, fearless men to put into thirty six United States this year, we could get up an electoral ticket in every State, and as the old Masonic Temple in Boston was sold out for a United States Court-house, (a few Masons pocketing the purchase money,) so we should soon see the mammoth temples of Dagon in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, which have sprung up in a night, go down in a day, and pass under the hammer of the auctioneer.

Thirty-six such lecturers could be maintained for fifty thousand dollars, traveling expenses included. And that amount of money, so expended, next year, would nearly or quite give us the balance of political power between the two decayed parties under the new juggling forms which they will put on to carry the next Presidential election. Now let every paper in the interest of our cause take this matter into consideration and tell us at Syracuse how this money can be raised. It surely can be done if we can have concerted action, wise and efficient. I remember when the American Missionary Association first raised fifty thousand dollars, easier than they had before raised ten thousand, and that too in the infancy of their cause.

UNCHARITABLE TO PROF. SWING.

Isaac Preston, Esq., who is a sound Christian and excellent man, writes us that our strictures on Prof. Swing have grieved him, as he thinks them unjust. And it is quite possible that we may err, as we have read but little of his trial or of himself. Our strictures were intended for a class, rather than an individual; that class of preachers who never oppose a popular evil, or aid an unpopular reform, and who treat theology exactly as they treat public morals; that is to say, make capital out of both by lauding truth and goodness in general, shun all notice of the truth which the world and worldly Christians hate; and who court notoriety by seeming to be heretics, alarming sincere believers, warily keeping within the dead line which separates hurtful error from what the Scriptures call "damnable heresies;" and, claiming superior liberality and fearlessness above their brethren, intentionally or otherwise, gall the horse they ride, and injure their brethren and the church which gives them their standing.

Now, if Prof. Swing does not mean to belong to this class of preachers who drive at nothing in particular but notoriety and success; who say nothing against sin which offends the wicked; who alarm the nervous and irritate the pugnacious by professing a larger liberality than the men who ordained them; and please worldlings by showing up the fag-ends of the creeds which they profess to hold in common with their brethren, which creeds, it may be, are getting obsolete in their terms while true in their substance, then we have certainly misunderstood and done him injustice.

Take his letter to Prof. Patton, in which he represents him (Patton) as "teaching what theology once was;" represents the doctor as standing at one extreme of the Presbyterian ministry and himself at the other; while the mass of their brethren form a line or row between them; himself of course at the liberal end of the line teaching 'what theology now is' as the author of a new departure. If Mr. Swing had wished to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace," he could easily have done so by saying that he held and believed what ordinary, common-sense Presbyterians hold and believe. But this would have allayed fears and anxieties and prevented the row of an ecclesiastical trial.

Then he is reported by the papers as ridiculing the Psalms in which King David curses God's enemies as his own. Now there is no doubt but the men were cursed, and cursed effectually, by God as well as by the Psalmist; and that they deserved it, as enemies of all goodness and truth. But instead of asking whether David cursed them as a prophet or a judge, by prediction or by sentence, Mr. Swing, unless falsely reported by the press, sneered at poor David, as he did at Patton, and threw the imprecatory Psalms out of the canon, with the flippant remark that Christ could repeal a Psalm as he did the old Hebrew law. Now Mr. Swing may not belong to that class of theological ventriloquists who wish to seem a heretic to heretics and orthodox with the orthodox, but he certainly acts like it. Instead of sneering at some Psalms as uninspired, thus weakening the whole Bible, let him tell us point blank, which Psalms he wishes to throw out, and his reasons for it, and we shall at least understand him. But if he gets his bread from the church and his praise from the world, we shall fear he is one of those who "run with the hare and bark with the hound."

SCHUYLER COLFAX.

The career of this man is a curious phenomenon and study. When Charles V. laid down an imperial scepter and went to fixing clocks in a convent, there was something sublime in his abdication; for it was a voluntary surrender of power and popularity by one who possessed

> "A comprehensive faculty that grasps
> And wields great purposes with ease."

But Mr. Colfax returned and re-returned to Congress for successive terms, where he was made Speaker of the lower House, and afterwards Vice-president on the ticket with General Grant, from which he was unceremoniously dropped or blown off as light substances are blown by the breeze from among those of more weight; has left political life, simply because he could not stay longer in it, and is now stumping the country for Odd-fellowship, as he once did for votes. It is supremely pitiful to see a man who has worn the robes of the second office in the gift of the American people, habited as a harlequin or zany, and chattering the platitudes of Odd-fellowship, as though his small, shallow nature was filled and satisfied with its shams.

The Burlington Hawkeye brings us an extended account of the celebration of "The fifty-fifth Anniversary" of the order in Iowa. We have run our eye through the report of his speech, and this is its substance:

He told the crowd that Odd-fellowship was young, while other "orders" were old, "stretching back into antiquity;" that it was founded by "Father Wildey," (a Baltimore dramseller,) whom he called "The good Father Wildey, a man in humble life," and for whom he called for three cheers from the crowd. These being given, he exclaimed, "That's first rate," and then proceeded through seven columns of the flimsiest conceivable speech. The first half or two-thirds of a column was devoted to steam, the telescope and the telegraph; to show what an age Odd-fellowship was born in. He then told them that "The most stringent code of morals is enforced by the order!" A fact, doubtless, which was new to every person there, inside of the order or out. He then took up and lauded the one virtue of the order, viz., helping members who are sick and in distress. This he spread out large and thin, and held it up as something peculiar to, and practiced only by Odd-fellows. He quoted from Mohammed that "every smile in a brother's face is charity;" and hinted, in parenthesis, that "to smile was not then considered a crime." He then proceeded to answer objections to his order. He denied that it influences politics, because Odd-fellows may belong to all parties; whereas, the objection is that, while secret society men belong to all parties, as bandits mingle in all crowds, they secretly recognize and favor each other. This objection he did not touch. He then denied that the Odd-fellow society is secret, and averred that it is only a "private" society. He then, in the stereotyped ordinary, fallacious style, proceeded to justify a secret "order" operating on the public mind by speeches, such as his, and by mystery, parades, shows and processions, by the necessary privacies of ordinary life. He justified the regalia by train-band trappings which are silly and unpopular in times of peace; and by God's command to Israelites to put fringes and ribbands on the robes of their priests; and inferred, "If it was no sin in them to wear fringes and ribbands it cannot be in us." This argument would justify our killing and sacrificing bullocks on altars now. And then, returning to the idea with which he stated that Odd-fellowship teaches the equality of men, which is contradicted by the very constitution of the order, which packs men in degrees, and pledges the upper to concealment from those below, the orator closed his false and senseless speech by a neat little peroration on the human equality taught by the New Testament, as though that were a discovery peculiar to Odd-fellowship.

But, while this ex-Vice-president of the United States thus tinkles the trumpery of Odd-fellowship before the multitude, as boys ring little bells while the priest is celebrating mass, he knows that these things are not the power of the secret orders any more than the little Chinese gods and stupid ceremonies are the terrible power of paganism over the masses. O how long ere these tricks by which Americans are being turned into Asiatics shall be loathed as they ought!

H. H. HINMAN.

This gentleman, now agent for Illinois, lately called and spent a night with us at Wheaton. We are much pleased with him. He is a man of mature age, large experience with men in this country and in Africa; has been a physician, a missionary, and a Congregational pastor, and Scribe of his Association. And he has profited by this large and varied experience and observation, and understands the nature of the secret orders of this country better than most of us.

At the request of our pastor, Dr. Walker, he addressed the weekly prayer meeting of the College Church on the state of society in West Africa. He described three secret societies there. The Porroh, or Purroh, answering to Freemasonry, which controls the civil government, (which is by chiefs,) and determines all questions of interest in those dark communities, life and death included. It is there just what Freemasonry aspires to be and is fast approaching in this country, an irrepressible, absolute, secret despotism, by which every person is governed, which all dread, and which is answerable to nobody and nothing but itself. Of course right and wrong in such a community never can amount to anything. I advised Bro. Hinman to write out a whole lecture on those secret societies in Africa, where they absorb all government and all religion into themselves.

The second society, the Bondoo, is composed of women who like the female Bacchantes of Attica of old, meet for night dances and orgies, which answer the treble purpose of amusement, whoredom, and superstition.

The third secret society is a society of cannibals. This is disreputable even there. Their managers seize, stab, carry off, and cook a girl from the Bondoo dance, or an unprotected male; and every member must eat his portion of this human being, roasted in their lodge in the jungle. Mr. Hinman will now lecture where wanted.

THE CHURCH MANUAL, to which is given a considerable part of this page, will be of special interest to many readers who too well appreciate the former situation and struggles of the Marengo church against the encroachments of the lodge, from their own experience. It will be an assistance too for any religious body forming on a like basis. The new church building will be dedicated soon, and over fifty members have already been received into fellowship. Bro. Fanning writes thus of the new organization: "'The love of Christ constraineth us,' and the glory of God and the salvation of men is the object sought. Yet, in the light of surrounding circumstances, the movement is, additionally, a vigorous protest against both the domination of the lodge and the despotism of ecclesiasticism. There is a history, yet unwritten, save in sad memories and bleeding hearts, for the publication of which, in due time, we hope the columns of the Cynosure will be open."

A Manual of the Principles, Doctrines and Rules of the Independent Church of Christ, at Marengo, Illinois. Organized March 31st, 1874.

"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful workers of darkness; but rather reprove them."—Ephesians v. 2.

To the Public:

The body of believers who send forth this little document beg leave to assure the public of their sincere attachment to the cause of Christ. They will rejoice at its success, under whatever banner, and mourn over its disasters, wherever they may exist. They will seek to be the children of light, rather than of darkness, and free, rather than bound. They embark in their enterprise, impelled thereto by convictions of duty, and encouraged by infallible assurance of Divine favor and blessing. With ill-will toward none, but with love for all, and humbly praying that God will lead all his people into clearer light and strike from the enslaved their chains, they subscribe themselves. Yours for the truth,

NEWVILLE D. FANNING, JOSEPH M. DEITZ, } Committee.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

The name of this church shall be, The Independent Church of Christ, of Marengo, Illinois.

ARTICLE II.—GOVERNMENT.

Its government is vested in the body of believers who compose it, and a majority vote on all questions not involving doctrines or organic principles shall be final. Christ is its only head, Scripture its only infallible guide in matters of faith, order and discipline. It is amenable to no other ecclesiastical body. Yet, while controlling its own affairs, it will both seek and extend that fellowship, sympathy, advice and co-operation to other churches which the law of Christ demands.

ARTICLE III.—MEMBERSHIP.

Section 1. Credible evidence of piety; assent to the Constitution, Covenants, Rules of Discipline and Articles of Faith; recommendation by a member in good standing; examination before the society as to faith and Christian experience; and an affirmative vote of the majority of those members present at the preliminary examination, are the indispensable conditions of membership. And those approved shall be received into fellowship on the Sabbath following by publicly assenting to the church covenant and the articles of faith, provided that, if they have not been baptized, they shall submit to that ordinance. It is provided also that members of other evangelical churches, bearing certificates of good standing therein may be received by a vote of the church on said certificate; this church reserving the right to ask for a narrative of their religious history and a public assent to the rules of discipline, articles of faith and church covenant.

Section 2. A certificate of acceptable membership shall be granted to any member in good standing who may desire to unite with any other evangelical church; or any such desiring to withdraw from all church fellowship, may, after due labor first, be granted their request by vote of the church, which vote shall be publicly announced. Neglect to call for a letter during the space of one year from the date of departure shall relieve the church of all responsibility. The form of the letter shall be as follows:

To————————:

DEAR BRETHREN:—The bearer, A—— B——, is an acceptable member of the Independent Church of Christ, of Marengo, Illinois, and we cordially commend —— to your Christian watchcare.

——————, Clerk. ——————, Pastor.

ARTICLE IV.—DISCIPLINE.

Section 1. The law of Christ, recorded in Matt. xviii. 15–17, shall be the rule of discipline; and it shall be the duty of all members knowing of an offense, whether public or private, to observe and keep this rule.

Section 2. Charges must be definitely stated in writing. If the church vote to entertain the complaint, they shall fix the time of trial, and summon the accused, furnishing him with a correct copy of the charges and the names of witnesses relied on for proof, at least one week before the trial. If deemed expedient, the church may elect a select committee to hear the case; in which case, an appeal may be taken to the body of the church.

Section 3. At the trial the accused shall have the right of counsel, who shall be members of the church. Personal confession of guilt, the testimony of two or more witnesses, or its equivalent, shall be required to produce conviction. Admonition, suspension and expulsion shall be grades of penalty, to be decided by vote of the body that hears the cause. An expelled member may be reinstated in the church upon repentance, confession and reformation.

ARTICLE V.—OFFICERS.

Section 1. The officers shall be a Pastor, three Deacons, a Clerk, a Treasurer, three or more Stewards and five Trustees; all of whom shall be elected annually by ballot, and, except the pastor, without public nomination. All, except the pastor, shall serve until their successors are elected, and vacancies shall be filled by a new election. One trustee shall go out of office yearly.

Section 2. The pastor shall be, ex-officio, a member of the church, have control of the pulpit and exercises of worship, preach the Word, administer the sacraments, and, when so ordered, execute discipline.

Section 3. The deacons shall provide elements for the communion service and aid the pastor therein, lead the classes, have the oversight of the poor, and be general assistants of the pastor.

Section 4. The clerk shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of all business meetings, a register of the names of all members, with the date of reception and removal, a record of all baptisms, shall audit the treasurer's accounts, keep on file all valuable papers, issue letters of dismissal voted by the church, and make an annual report.

Section 5. The stewards shall collect and disburse the monies of the church designed for the support of the pastor, and to defray the incidental expenses of church service, and shall make an accurate return of all such collections and disbursement of money.

Section 6. The trustees shall see that they are legally incorporated; shall hold the property of the church, using so much of the proceeds as may be needful to pay debts, or make necessary repairs; but shall have no power to buy, sell, mortgage, or transfer real estate without a vote of the church; and shall make an annual report, including: 1st, income; 2d, expenditures; 3d, debts, and how contracted; 4th, improvements made.

ARTICLE VI.—MEETINGS.

The annual meetings shall be held on the first Monday of April, when the reports shall be made and elections held. A monthly meeting for business shall be held on the Saturday preceding the first Sabbath of each month. Special meetings may be called by the officers or five adult members. Prayer and class meetings shall be held weekly. The society shall determine by vote the enterprises of Christian benevolence to which they will contribute.

ARTICLE VII.—ORDINANCES.

Section 1. The Lord's Supper shall be celebrated four times in the year, and the invitation to it shall include all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and have made a public profession of their faith.

Section 2. Baptism, in the form chosen by the applicant, shall be administered.

ARTICLE VIII.—AMENDMENTS.

The constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote of the resident members of the church, provided the time of the meeting and the changes proposed be publicly announced on two successive Sabbaths immediately preceding it, and providing organic principles or doctrines are not changed thereby.

ARTICLE IX.—BY-LAWS.

By-laws to carry out the provisions of this constitution may be enacted at any business meeting by a majority vote of those present.

ARTICLES OF FAITH.

1. Scripture is the only infallible rule of faith and practice.
2. One God, revealed as the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, whose providence extends to all events, and who exercises a righteous government over all his creatures.
3. "Ye must be born again."
4. Repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, are the conditions of salvation.
5. God's love for the race is the moving cause; the Atonement of Christ, the meritorious cause; and faith in Christ, the instrumental cause of human salvation.
6. In Jesus of Nazareth the Deity and Humanity were united. "He bore our sins in his own body on the tree." He was crucified, dead, buried, and rose again for our justification. He ascended upon high where "he ever liveth to make intercession for us."
7. The Sabbath, the ministry of the Word, the visible church, and the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper, are of Divine appointment, and binding.
8. We believe in the resurrection of the dead, and a general judgment, and that the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous unto life eternal.
9. Holiness is the central idea of Christianity.

CHURCH COVENANT.

Do you avow your personal sense of the love of God in the forgiveness of sins, and, relying upon Divine grace, do you covenant to be Christ's disciples, receiving him as your great Teacher, Lawgiver and King? And do you dedicate yourselves to God as the object of your highest love, and to his service as your highest joy, engaging to walk with us in the close observance of church ordinances, and that, by Divine aid, you will honor your profession by a constant Christian life?

BAPTISMAL COVENANT.

Do you renounce the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh? Do you confess God, the Father, Son and Spirit, and do you trust in his sovereign grace and almighty power? And do you promise that, "Denying all ungodliness and worldly lusts, you will live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world?"

RULES OF DISCIPLINE.

1. Avoid all evil, yea, the very appearance of evil.
2. Do good to the bodies and souls of men, of every possible kind, and as much as possible.
3. Membership in secret societies shall disqualify for membership in this church; but one who publicly renounces his relation to a secret order and ceases affiliation with it and attendance upon its meetings, shall not be held to be a member in such a sense as to disqualify him for membership in the church.
4. Prayer, searching the Scriptures, and the public worship of God, are enjoined.

BY-LAWS.

The Home Circle.

The Wine-cup's Blight.

BY MRS. L. H. HAMMOND.

Upon the ocean's strand—
There sat a lonely band,
Speaking of losses, which their lives had known;
While twilight waned away
From rocky cliff and bay,
And the slow tides went out with weary moan.

There were some who mourned their youth,
With a most earnest ruth,
For its brave hopes and memories were green;
And one turned toward the West,
An eye that would not rest—
For far off hills whereon its joy had been.

Some talked of vanished gold,
Others of proud tales told,
Some spoke of friends—their trust no more;
And one of parent's grave
Beside a foreign wave,
That made him sit so lonely on the shore.

And as their tales were done—
There came among them one,
A stranger—spake in tones of sorrow he:
Sad losses have ye met,
But mine is heavier yet,
For 'tis the wine-cup that hath blighted me.

Of all I held most dear,—
No wife or child to cheer,
O! fortunes cruelty, O life's sad cross.
The wrecks of land and sea!
Ah! what is earth to me;
Mine is life's latest and most grevious loss.

Remarkable Answer to Prayer.

The case I refer to transpired in 1831 or '32, in Oakland county, Michigan. The parties were schoolmates of the writer, and he was living in the neighborhood at the time, and can vouch for the truth of the statement. The following are the facts in the case: Mr. Chester Goodrich had married a Miss Rhoda Mathews. She had made a profession of religion, but he had not. After their marriage she became cold and back-slidden. While in this state she was taken very ill. The best medical help seemed to do no good, and she became so low and weak that she could not lift her hand to her head and could only speak in a whisper. Her physician gave her up, and told her sorrowing husband that he could do no more and that she must die. This was after a council of physicians had sat on her case and pronounced it hopeless. The husband felt that there was no hope but in God, and was powerfully impressed that he must carry her case to him in prayer. Accordingly, retiring to the woods back of his house in a secluded place, he knelt, and tried to pray. It was the first time he had ever offered a prayer. As soon as he began to plead for the life of his wife, a deep conviction of his own lost and sinful condition began to roll on to his mind, and he was led to make confession of his own sin, and his bad influence on his wife, and to plead for pardon for himself and her restoration to both spiritual and bodily health. While he was thus agonizing for divine help and mercy, a divine peace was given him with the assurance that his prayer was heard in behalf of his wife; so that his prayers and tears were turned into thanksgiving and praises; and with that feeling he returned to his house to find her dressed and sitting up in the rocking-chair, healed, but weak. While he was thus praying, and at the moment of his own deliverance, a power came over her, and she suddenly sprang up in bed, clapped her hands and praised God, saying he had healed her soul and body, called to her nurse for her dress, put it on, arose and seated herself in the rocking-chair, as noted above. She recovered strength rapidly and was the mother of several children. The husband passed away some years since, but she was alive and well the last I heard from her, and living with a son at Howard, Livingston county, Michigan. This is but one of a thousand of such cases occurring from time to time, and is proof conclusive that God hears and answers prayer, and that Christ is still the Great Healer of both the souls and the bodies of men.

The Pilgrim Fathers.

There was no artist for our forefathers, nor are their countenances now known to men. But more than any powerful contemporaries, at whose nod the earth trembled, is their memory revered. Pope, emperor, king, sultan, prince, grand duke, doge, margrave, count, what are they all at the humble company that landed on Plymouth Rock? Theirs indeed were the ensigns of worldly honor. But the Pilgrims had in themselves that inborn virtue which was more than all else beside, and their landing was an epoch. Confront the Mayflower and the Pilgrims with the rulers who occupied such space in the world, the one ascending into the firmament there to shine forever, while the others have been long drooping into darkness of oblivion, to be brought to light only to illustrate the fame of their unknown contemporaries. Do I err in supposing their destiny an illustration of the supremacy which belongs to the benefit of the moral nature? At first impeded or postponed, they at last prevail. There is a brightness which, breaking through all clouds, will shine forth with ever-increasing splendor. I have often thought that if I were a preacher one of my sermons should be from the text: 'A little leaven shall leaven all the lump.' Nor do I know a better illustration of these words than the influence exerted by our Pilgrims. That small band, with the lesson of self-sacrifice, of just and equal laws, of the government of a majority, of unshrinking loyalty to principle, is now leavening this whole continent, and in the fullness of time will leaven the whole world. By their example republican institutions have been comprehended, and in proportion as we imitate them will their institutions be assured. Liberty, which we so much covet, is not a solitary plant. Always by its side is justice. But justice is nothing but right applied to human affairs. Do not forget, I entreat you, that with the highest morality is the highest liberty. A great poet, in one of his improvised sonnets, speaking of liberty, has said: 'But who loves that must first be wise and good.' Therefore do the Pilgrims in their bountiful example teach liberty, teach the republican institutions, as at an earlier day Socrates and Plato in their lessons of wisdom taught liberty and helped the idea of a republic. If republican government has thus far failed in any experience—as perhaps in Spanish America—it is because their lessons have been wanting. There have been no Pilgrims to teach the moral law.—Sumner.

Giving Reproof.

Reproof, to do good, must be given in earnest. If administered in a trifling spirit, in a jesting manner, it will be likely to result in very little good. Them that sin rebuke sharply.

No matter with what kind of feelings a reproof may be given, it is very natural that the person receiving it should think that it was given in a wrong spirit. It is not very often that punishment is inflicted to the satisfaction of the culprit, no matter how deserving he may be of his sentence. The Pharisees never admired the style in which the Saviour addressed them. His words of warning aroused their fiercest indignation,

When you are reproved, no matter how it is done, see if you cannot derive some benefit from it. It is lawful to learn, even of an enemy. Gold is seldom found so pure that it can go through the fire without losing some of its dross. Get some good out of reproof. Even if you do not deserve it all, you may by quiet endurance, reap a great spiritual blessing. If when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you.—Earnest Christian.

What kind of Books shall I give to my Children.

Who can duly estimate the benefits which would flow in upon us, if parents, even but for one year, would withdraw from their children's hands all works of fiction, and substitute those which contain only the truth? Long and general habit has corrupted our taste, enfeebled our minds, perverted our judgment, and dethroned in our hearts that high regard for the truth which is so generally found in the human mind until counteracted by education.

Let us consider what a change would be produced in any family taught to value the truth, and reject fiction as necessarily inferior in value. The weak, unnatural, and often injurious works of novel writers, large and small, would give place to books of history, travels and science. The mind would be trained to contemplate the characters, habits and deeds of men, and the varied, useful, wonderful and glorious works of God, as well as the powers of of our own minds, and our relations to our Maker, and to each other. Now, how many of us enter upon scenes of duty ignorant of ourselves, our fellowmen, and the objects around us, with false ideas, erroneous principles, and unfounded expectations!

If we would ensure to our children a life of disappointment, mortification and unhappiness, a downward course to the grave, and the loss of hope beyond it, we might teach them to prefer the vagaries of fiction writers to the observations of sense, the discoveries of science, the treasures of learning and the revelations of God. But if we would regard the mind according to its nature and capacities, we should be among the advocates of sound taste, useful truth, and the men of learning and labor who have claims our high regard; and, above all, adherents to the Bible, as the richest treasure the earth contains. Brought to this as the touchstone, how soon will the brazen counterfeits of taste and learning expose their worthlessness and the corroding canker which would poison us and our children?

On this subject we have a fund of reflections to make, of arguments to display, and of interesting examples to quote, when opportunity shall present. We can only add a warm wish to see our countrymen waking to the pernicious influences of that prevailing taste which produces such various and extensive evils.—Ex.

Roman Catholic Schools.

As to Roman Catholic female schools taught by nuns, they are neither designed to promote a thorough education, nor to teach morals and religion.

The former they cannot for the want of competent education on the part of the teachers, and the latter they are forbidden to do, lest they interfere with the functions of the priests.

Dr. Nathan L. Rice is good authority on this subject. He says: "I had during nine years a fair opportunity of ascertaining the literary character of their most celebrated schools in Kentucky. I have repeatedly received pupils from their nunneries, whilst myself conducting a female institution; and in every instance their minds had been injured instead of improved. I have attended their examinations, and found them, notwithstanding the special previous preparation, very superficial."

Dr. William S. Potts, of St. Louis, is a no less competent witness in regard to such schools in Missouri and Illinois. After a careful and thorough examination he published in substance the following results:

First. That the teachers were incompetent to teach American females, having never been taught themselves.

Second. That what they call a thorough education is a misnomer; consisting merely of the rudimental and ornamental—reading, spelling, and writing, a little French, a little music, a little painting and calisthenics or dancing; om called the solid branches of learning.

Third. That the object of these schools was not to educate either the mind or heart, but to make converts to Popery.

Fourth. That Protestant parents had better bury their daughters than ruin them in these institutions.—Herald and Presbyter.

—There are two sorts of minds; the one penetrates rapidly and profoundly the consequenses of principles, and this is the acurate mind; the other comprehends a great number of principles without foundin them, and this is the geometrical mind. The one is force and exactness of mind, the other is amplitude of mind. Now one may exist without the other; the mind may be strong and narrow, or wide and weak.—Pascal.

Hymn for the West.

Our fathers plowed the ocean,
To plant an empire here;
And in the dead of winter
Began their mission drear.
The wild beast and the savage
Roamed through the trackless wild;
A truly Spartan nursing
Gave freedom to her child.

But from that little handful
Sifted from land to land,
God took the precious seed-corn
And sowed it with his hand.
And now its fruit is shaking
From East to Western shore;
And all the wakened nations
Stand knocking at our door.

Shall we, sons of the Pilgrims,
Be faithful to our sires?
Shall we go westward lighting
Religion's sacred fires,
Until the white Sierras
Shall to our anthem wake,
And on the calm Pacific
Its swelling echoes beak?

I see by faith's clear vision,
The star of empire rise,
And in the nation's future
Kindled the sunset skies:
Exalt the lowly valleys,
Plains let the mountains be,
Until our Jesus triumphs,
Go westward to the sea!

How Eggs become Chickens.

READING, Mass.

MR. EDITOR:—This is indeed a fast age, a labor-saving age. Science has made decided inroads upon the domains of ignorance and the "world is moving," sometimes backwards, it may be, but generally forward. We rush across oceans and across continents by steam, or communicate with distant points of the planet in a few brief moments, almost annihilating space.

In such an age when "pure blood fowls" command fabulous prices ($75 for a pater-familias,) it is not strange that the fancier feels that he cannot afford to allow a favorite hen—only a hen—to devote three weeks to the plebian business of hatching a few eggs, and then in this "woman question" age to descend to the low druggery of caring for and nursing her offspring for a few days longer.

My friend and neighbor, Jacob Graves, Esq., has met this demand of the age by the invention of his remarkable "Incubator" and "Artificial Mother," though he has not yet devoted his versalite inventive genius to meeting the demands of the "strong-minded," to relieve them of all responsibility in the matter of "replenishing the earth."

At our convenience we step into his apartments and see a large lot of eggs nicely packed away in his "incubator," dated and marked, laying cosely and safely in the drawers ready to be "transmuted" into valuable "birds"—he keeps no plebian hens—by the wonderful process of incubation changing the simple substance of the egg into bone, muscle, feathers, beak, claws, blood, etc., etc., almost a miraculous elaboration.

We observe from day to day these remarkable changes, and watch with amazement the rapidity with which these changes occur. The various steps from day to day are carefully observed through the glass, or by drawing out the eggs; the first easily noticeable change in the egg being a dark point which proves to be the future eye. At the large end of the egg there is an air cell, at which part this remarkable transformation commences.

At the end of twenty-four hours the embryo, already formed, becomes larger at the ends than in the center, the air cell enlarges slightly, two veins appear running toward the air cell at the larger end, which must be regarded as temporary lungs. In three days the red vessels appear, the whole of the inner surface being covered with a net work of veins and arteries, connected with which a pulsation is distinctly observed, the heart acting, while the air cell has increased in size. On the fifth day the limbs move slightly and certain changes in the heart occur, its form changing. At the end of the sixth day the chick sometimes turns onto the back, having been up to this time on the left side. At the end of the thirteenth day the head becomes more curved, and the bill is curled up under the right wing where it remains till the time of hatching. From this time the developement is slower, the different organs gradually maturing, approaching perfection till the eighteenth day, when the development is complete, the size and form complete. On the nineteenth day the air bag extends round half of the interior of the egg, and the chick is heard to "yip." About this time the remaining part of the yolk, on which the chick has been sustained thus far, is absorbed by a peculiar membrane and is transferred to the abdomen to nourish it till in the new life it can take its own nourishment. On the twenty-first day, or a little sooner, especially if there has been a little more than the usual warmth, and sooner than under the hen, the shell is punctured near the large end by a small "pick-ax," intended expressly for this purpose. Situated on the top of the beak near the end, the chick moving around in the shell till a section of it is cut, or nearly so, when, as with herculean power, the little bird swells and pushes with its feet till the shell prison is burst. For a time the little fellow is much exhausted, lies still for a short time, then flounders and after a short time is able to use its limbs.

In a short time he is transferred to the "Artificial Mother," which is warmed like "Incubator," by lamps controlled and regulated by an ingenius device, invented by Mr. Graves, who now is regarded as a kind of prince among the "fowl fanciers." Indeed, the scientist as well as the lover of curiosities and novelties may well spend time in watching this remarkable process.

According to Pettenkofer, the air in our houses becomes unwholesome when the carbonic acid in it, provided it be derived from the respiration of animals, rises from the normal proportion of 4 parts in 10,000 to 1 part in 1,000. The experiments of Dr. Angus Smith and Dr. Hammond have shown that the organic matter in the air, which increases in proportion to the amount of carbonic acid, is by far a more deadly impurity than the gas.—Sanitarian.

Children's Corner.

Learning Things out of School.

Every child ought to try to teach itself, in addition to learning its lessons; and I do not want boys or girls to overwork themselves. Nor will they do so if they do a little of their own free will, in ways of their own inventing, in addition to their lessons. For one thing, they will—some of them, at least—so much improve their own power of learning, and understanding things, that their lessons will come easier to them. And for another, one sort of study helps another in ways which only those who have tried can conceive. There is another thing. Every wise parent is on the watch with the children to see how their minds grow, and what they seem likely to be fit for when they grow up; and nothing helps them so much in forman opinion as what comes out in what the children do to teach themselves. In some things, any particular cleverness a child may have is almost sure to come out easily—for instance, if it can draw well, or sing well, or invent machinery. But in some other things children will keep much alike for a number of years, learning the same lessons, and one being about as clever as the other, so far as we can judge—unless they do something for themselves. Then we begin to know more about them; for, of course, they pick out, as we all do, the things they like best, and can do most easily.

Let us take such simple matters as reading, writing and spelling, and we will suppose that you are very young indeed. It will be of use to you as long as you live, and it will actually make your lessons much easier, if you will only take, of your own free will, a little trouble in addition to that of learning the lessons that are set you. Suppose, now, you take some book of poetry, and learn a verse or two by heart, just what pleases you. Then shut the book and put it away, and write out as well as you can, from memory, what you have been learning by heart. Then go to the book again, and compare your writing with the print. You will then see what mistakes you have made, if any, in spelling or in putting in stops. To tell you the truth, you ought not to make any mistakes in copying, but it is pretty certain you will; and you are sure to make some at first when you write out from memory. Next time, take a sentence or two in prose, out of a book of history, or geography, or out of a story-book, and so on. You will pick up knowledge faster than you know; you will do something every time you try, towards making yourself more clever; and your usual lessons in reading, writing, and spelling will come all the easier to you.

A good plan is to keep a diary, in which you put down how you have passed the day. This is exercise in writing, spelling, and composition, and you will find it very amusing indeed.

When you ask some boys whether they can do certain things, they will make some such answer as, "No, I have not been taught yet; I have not got as far as that." But you may depend upon it that no boy ever learned much who did not sometimes go faster than his lessons. Take geography. How very, very stupid it sounds to hear a healthy, lively boy, who is learning geography, say he has never been taught to make maps; or, perhaps, that he can't make a map just to show the different great divisions of the world, because he has not got a pair of compasses. Why, a common dinner-plate will do beautifully to begin with. Get a plate as near the size of your maps as you can, and make your first round with a pencil—you can ink it afterwards. Then draw one line across the middle for the equator, and another across the middle the other way for the central meridian of longitude. You can easily fix the middle, and, in fact, measure all distances by a piece of paper marked with a pencil. Now measure off with your piece of paper the degrees of latitude by tens, as you find them on the map you are copying from. You will not be able to draw these lines exactly across the circle without the help of a pair of compasses, but you can come very near, if you take pains. Then draw the two tropics, and the north and south polar circle, and the meridians of longitude. After this, you will find it easier to draw the inner rim of the great circle, (I am supposing that you have no plate that fits,) because the parallels of latitude will help you. When once you have made the lines of latitude and longitude, and figured the degrees round the margin, there will be no difficulty whatever in making your map correct. And when you have done it, you will have learnt more geography than many people who have spent years at school carry in their heads all their lives long.

I will now suppose that I am speaking to boys and girls who have got some way on in arithmetic. Let me assure you that you will find your lessons much more interesting if you sometimes, of your own accord, go out of the rule you are in, and try to do things that are more advanced. It is rather tedious to do 22 tons 13 cwt. 1 qrs. 6 lbs. at £7 9. 3-4 per ton. Suppose you go a little way ahead, and look into an easy book on Algebra. "If A can do a piece of work in nine days and B could do it in twelve days, how long would they be in doing it togother?" That is a much more interesting question; and when you have managed to find out how to answer it, you have done yourself a great deal of good and gone some way towards making your other work easier.

Young people not so far advanced as to do sums of this kind may yet help on their own education as well as that of their younger brothers and sisters, if they have these, by giving them easy lessons in arithmetic,—I mean now and then, almost as an amusement, and not in a stiff, formal way.

—Good Things.

Mr. Colfax in Rochester, N. Y.

The distinguished champion of Odd-fellows does not always find the popular ear open to his platitudes and deceptive reasonings. He lately visited the city of Rochester and the following is a report of his lecture on the lodge published in the Rochester Union of April 11th.

. . . There are some facts which can be made plain by evidence or by a proper course of reasoning; others which elude the application of evidence, set all ratiocination at defiance, and are visible only to the eye of faith.

It is consoling to reflect that we are permitted, on some subjects at least, to arrive at some degree of certainty. For instance, had a vote been taken among the three hundred persons who gathered in Corinthian Hall last evening to hear Mr. Colfax, it is not unlikely that the audience would have been equally divided in their opinions touching the manner of that gentleman and the matter of his lecture: one half of them would have pronounced a "Christian statesman," and his oratory magnificent; the other, that he was a charlatan and a bore. Thus men will differ on some subjects; but, if the empty benches which stood in grim array around Corinthian Hall last evening, afford any criterion from which to draw a conclusion, that audience would unite in the belief that, as lecturers, ex Vice-Presidents of these United States are at a discount in this city. The numerically miserable audience which assembled to hear Mr. Colfax can be accounted for on no other hypothesis, except that, perhaps, the counter attraction of Professor Hartz, the prestidigitator, proved greater than that of a "Christian statesman."

The subject of the lecture was one well calculated to attract attention, and one not unworthy the best efforts of even a great orator. An accurate historical account of the rise and progress of the Odd-fellowship the beneficient influence it had exerted—the good it did for the individual man and for society certainly afford abundant material for an address, some parts, at least, of which would be worthy of remembrance and reproduction. It is but simple truth to say that Mr. Colfax's lecture lacked every essential that should save it from utter contempt. Giving a string of wilted platitudes about the material progress of the age, a long quotation from some of Dickens' sentimental twaddle, another from Confucious, a half dozen or more from the Koran, a score or more from Holy Writ, something about "the great heart of humanity" and "the procession of the ages," with the name of the Supreme Being in various forms, thrown in here and there, in a fantastic way, and you have the mosaic of less than mediocrity which bore so grievously on three hundred unoffending citizens in Corinthian Hall last night.

And this was the man who for five successive terms shook around in a seat which Henry Clay had once filled: whose name was at a later day inscribed on a roll which embraces those of Adams and Jefferson, and which has been inflicted on perhaps fifty per cent. of the male children born within a radius of one hundred miles from South Bend during the last ten years! We give it up. Dundreary was right. There can be no sort of doubt that there are some things in this world which no fellow can find out, and one of them —which will probably forever remain an impenetrable mystery—is how Schuyler Colfax ever attained to the dignity of "a Christian statesman."

Religious Intelligence.

—There are fifteen Protestant Episcopal communities in the United States called sisterhoods or associations of deaconesses. Some of these are conducted in a very rigerous manner, and a recent Protestant writer says: "The work and the religious life are strikingly similar to that of the Roman Catholic Sisterhoods." The leader of the system is the Rev. Dr. Dix, of Trinity Church, New York, the Chaplain of the Sisters of Mary.

—The missions of the Methodist Episcopal church comprise: Missionaries 207, assistants 162, teachers 310, members 13,170, probationers 2,957, churches 111; day-schools 180, pupils 5,329; Sabbath-schools 426, pupils 18,971. The appropriations for these missions for 1873, amount to $373,825.75. There are also missions among the Indians of our own country, for which the appropriations are $6,650. The missions in Mexico and Japan are new—commenced in 1872.

—The Episcopal church in Virginia is discussing quite earnestly the future position of its clergy in regard to questions of church doctrine and polity. A journal of that State declares that there is no expectation that the movement of Bishop Cummins will be followed, but it is said to be not impossible that a more important and effective protest against the new sacerdotalism which is represented by a Bishop of Illinois and his sympathizers will be made.

—The Report of the Burmese Baptist Missionary Convention for the last year gives interesting facts respecting the Christian work among the Burmese, Karens, and Shans. The statistics show that there are 18,546 baptized Christians in 356 churches, with 82 ordained and 329 unordained preachers. There are 85 schools with 4,874 pupils, some of them in a theological college. The annual contributions, chiefly of the Sgau Karens, amounted to the large sum of $25,000. The number baptized during the year was 777.

—The Rev. Mr. MacIntyre, U. P. missionary to North China, has followed one of the best ways of mastering the language of the country. He has plunged into the midst of the people and traveled far and near among them. Not being as yet able to preach in the Chinese, he has done the work of a colporteur. He speaks with enthusiasm of the kindness he has received from the people, and their readiness to read the Gospels, as well as William Burns's translation of the "Peep of day" and similar works. Everywhere he was unmolested, and the fact that he was bearing "good books for the instruction of the people," a phrase often repeated in his hearing, made every one ready to answer his inquiries in a friendly manner. In the single city of Tsining-Chow he sold 3,000 copies of the Gospels, and the demand was still brisk when his stock was exhausted.

—The Mercantile Library has for two years tried the plan of opening reading-rooms on Sunday, and now pronounces it a failure. Only about one per cent. of their members having availed themselves of the opportunity for Sunday reading, and those for the most part middle-aged men. The Tribune professes to think this experiment does not affect the real issue, because the poor young clerks without attractive homes or many friends are not found amongst the the membership of this Association. The argument is a poor one, for if there had been any real desire, as alleged, on the part of young men to avail themselves of this method of spending the Sabbath, would not this class have come forward in large numbers and joined the Library? Two years trial of the experiment has, however, shown that the opening of Sunday reading rooms as a means of reaching, elevating, and benefiting the great masses of our young men, is a lamentable feature; and its advocates may as well turn their attention to some other scheme.—N. Y. Witness.

—In the last report of the American Home Missionary Society, it is stated the number of ministers in its employ in thirty-three different States and Territories has lately been 969. Of this number 486 have been the pastors of single congregations, 298 have ministered in two or three congregations each, and 185 have extended their labors over still wider fields. 2,195 missionary stations were supplied during the year. The number of pupils in their Sabbath-schools are 74,300. Fifty-seven churches have been organized by the missionaries during the year, and thirty-five have become self-supporting. Forty-seven houses of worship have been completed, 110 repaired, and thirty-two are in process of erection. One hundred and five churches report revivals of religion and 385 missionaries report 3,200 hopeful convertions. The additions to the churches, as nearly as can be ascertained, have been 5,421, viz.: 3,163 on profession, and 2,258 by letter. The receipts were $290.-120.34; expenditures, $287,662.91, leaving $12,652.45 still due to missionaries for labor performed, but not yet reported. In addition to these past dues, appropriations, already made and becoming due, amount to $106,979.95. Toward redeeming such and meeting other apppropriations, there is a balance in the treasury of $4,723.16. This summary shows an increase of missionaries and receipts greater than any year since 1861.

News of the Week.

The Country.

—The skeleton of a large mastodon is being unearthed at Dansville, N. Y. Prof. Jerome estimates that it was fourteen feet high and twenty feet long, or forty feet long measuring from the tips of the tusks to the end of the tail, and that it weighed twenty-five tons.

—Governor Allen has been petitioned by the prominent coal operators in the Hocking and Straitsville, Ohio, mining regions, where the miners are on a strike, to send one or more military companies to protect the non-union men, who would work but fear violence at the hands of the union men.

—The relief committee of New Orleans submitted a report to Governor Kellogg on Saturday, in which they say that from April 25 to May 8 they shipped to the overflowed districts 852,000 rations of breadstuffs and 353,000 rations of meat. The Government supplied 162,000 of breadstuffs and 118,000 of meat. The Committee estimate the number of sufferers in Louisiana alone at 56,500.

– The position of the Western press on the inflation veto is summarized from reports sent to the Chicago Tribune in reply to a circular from that office. Of the 933 papers answering the circular, 514 sustain the veto, 408 oppose it, and 11 are non-committal. Of those sustaining the veto, 205 are Republican to 217 Democrats; and of those opposing the veto, 234 are Republican to 174 Democratic. Indiana, Missouri, and Kansas are the only States where a majority of the papers oppose the veto.

—On Saturday morning last a fearful calamity visited the valley of Mill River near Northampton, Mass., by which over 150 lives were lost and property valued at from a million dollars to a million and a half destroyed. The story is thus told by the press despatches:

"Up among the hills of Williamsburg there was a large reservoir of about 104 acres in extent, where the various mill operators of Williamsburg, Spinnersville, Haydensville, and Leeds were wont to store their summer supply of water. People living in the vicinity of the dam say that it has been leaking more or less for several weeks, and it is believed that, having thus gradually undermined the dam, the water acquired a strong headway, and suddenly the dam gave way, and the immense body of water poured out in its strength, carrying everything before it.

The torrent rushed upon the doomed villages with a loud roar, apparently a large advancing billow of underbrush and debris issuing rapidly through the deep gorge to the height of forty feet, and again spreading over a wide expanse of seething, angry waves as it reached the more open country. Reaching the beautiful village of Williamsburg, some two and a half miles distant, it struck a small button factory, sweeping out of existence. Next, a saw and grist-mill was attacked and melted,—not a vestage remaining. Houses, barns and shops followed, like grass before a scythe, and men, women and children were caught and borne away struggling and shrieking in vain. The waves swept to Skinnersville, two miles distant, a silk factory being hurled down, and a huge iron boiler being carried nearly half a mile and landed high and dry. In Haydenville, about one mile further on, the bank building, a three-story brick structure, was swept away, scarcely one brick being left upon another, the money in the vault sharing the same fate.

The smaller village of Leeds, between one and two miles distant, was the next place to suffer, and the scenes at Williamsburg and Haydensville were here repeated.

A short distance below Leeds were two bridges, one of iron and one of stone, both nearly fifty feet above the bed of the stream. They were both swept away, the former being carried bodily and a considerable distance down the stream. Here the greatest destruction appears to have stopped, although along the river, until it emptied into the Connecticut, a short distance below Northampton, the banks are covered with all manner of debris—timber, trees, pianos, tables, chairs and other furniture.

Everything was ground fine, and when the flood was past the timbers were in tooth-picks; scraps of iron, bricks and great stones had become boulders, and here and there was found a corpse, or a piece of corpse.

All the windings of the valley were filled with the debris, making a terrible picture of waste and death in the most beautiful valley of Massachusetts.

The gracious work of saving the dead for burial began at noon at Skinnerville. The first bodies were picked up, dug out from mud, or taken with difficulty from overloaded ruins. All through the valley the work went on till night, and then men with lanterns, seeking their dead, stood guard. At Haydenville forty bodies were gathered by night; at Leeds, forty-five. There had been, in the afternoon, gangs of plunderers who were promptly turned to workers by no stinted threats; the people were ready to brain them with the first stone. There were fewer dead at Florence and Northampton. There have been found 140 in all, and many more are certainly buried in the mud and rubbish that fill the valley with black heaps from Williamsburg to Northampton."

No less than eight cases of insanity are reported from the fright or loss of friends. Many lives were saved by a horse-back messenger who rode through two or three of the upper towns shouting the warning. One horse fell dead under him, but he leaped on another and rode on.

The Capitol.

—The inflation party succeeded in getting another finance bill through the Senate last week. The bill was started as an anti-inflation measure, but several amendments changed its character so that its passage would postpone specie resumption.

The City.

—The Young Men's Christian Association have arranged to rebuild Farwell Hall in a substantial manner with large hall, lecture room, library and offices.

—Chicago Presbytery sat all last week on the Swing trial, the prosecutor, Dr. Patton, and Dr. Noyes for the defense, occupying several sessions, with a summing up, which closed on Saturday. Pref. Swing also spoke explaining his theological views. The decision is expected this week.

Foreign.

—A crisis is said to be impending in France. Pres. McMahon has just excepted the resignation of his cabinet and another is being formed. The Republican journals urge the dissolution of the National Assembly, and it is said that the monarchists will favor the project if their demands are not quickly met.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

This account would be incomplete were the following decided testimony omitted.

The Illinois Synod of the United Presbyterian Church, convened at Monmouth September 6th, 1873, adopted the following statement and resolutions on college secret societies:

"1. They are unnecessary; 2. They are the means of much time being misspent at their meetings, etc.; 3. They are the cause of much money being wasted in the buying of badges, etc.; 4. Their secrecy affords a cover for any evil which the members may commit; 5. They are progressive, and tend to the more odious forms of secrecy, as Masonry or Odd-fellowship; 6. They are a hindrance to the usefulness of students, as they curb their free expression of sentiments; 7. They are entangling; they entangle the good with the bad, and corrupt the former; 3. They are condemned in the Gospel; 9. They breed and foster discord among the students.

Therefore be it resolved, That the faculty of Monmouth College be encouraged in their opposition to Greek fraternities.

That the friends of the college may be assured that these societies will be opposed till the evil is blotted out of the college.

That no Presbytery recommend any young man to the Board of Education, for aid in his study for the ministry, who is connected with a Greek society."

This positive encouragement has forwarded the result desired by the faculty and patrons of the college: and, it is believed, there will be one instance to prove that institutions can, successfully and singly, clear these factious elements from their halls.

CHAPTER IV.

THE CORNELL TRAGEDY AND ITS EFFECT.

The history of the college secret society system has now been briefly traced down to an occurrence which gave a sudden and fearful impetus to the efforts to abolish it. On the 15th of October, 1873, a dispatch was published throughout the country that a student had been accidentally killed while undergoing initiation into the "Kappa Alpha" society at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. At the risk of repetition in the articles republished in this connection some of the particulars of the event will be given.

On the 10th of October Mortimer M. Leggett, son of Gen. Leggett, U. S. Commissioner of Patents, having obtained consent of his parents to join the Kappa Alpha society, was taken to Six-Mile creek in the environs of Ithica for initiation. While waiting, blindfolded and accompanied by two students, on the verge of the precipice overhanging the creek he fell over the bank, dragging his companions after him, and died within two hours. Whether his fall was through fright at some part of the ceremony going on in charge of other students who were on the ground, as stated in correspondents' reports, or his attendants were intoxicated, or the whole affair was purely accidental, has never been made public. President White and four professors of the University were members of this or some other college fraternity, and one, Prof. Crane, was on the spot when the accident occurred. Whiskey had also been taken along for use in case of accident.

After the fall, Leggett was carried to a retired room in the third story of a brick block and there died. At 2 o'clock at night his body was taken unobserved to the undertaker's and placed in a coffin, and the members of the fraternity endeavored, but without success, to remove it from the town without an inquest. Efforts were made to prevent investigation and suppress the news of the accident. The editor of the Ithaca Journal was approached the next morning by one of the professors and requested to say nothing of the matter, as "the boys were after a few grapes when the unfortunate thing happened." The young men who fell over the cliff with Leggett were kept carefully guarded in their rooms by their fraternity associates, and none but members permitted to exchange a word with them. The unsatisfactory result of the coroner's inquest is related by Prof. Wilder. The testimony there given was in the main discredited by the public, as inadequate to the case; and the connection of the society with the faculty and with the wealthiest and most socially pretentious students did not tend to allay the dissatisfaction. One strange fact could not be concealed: that the press, contrary to its habit, did not publish the affair until the fifth day after it occurred. Other facts in this singular tragedy appear in the remarkable letter of Prof. Burt G. Wilder, of Cornell University, published originally in the New York Tribune of October 22d, 1873, and the copious extracts from the remarks of the press which follow:

SECRET SOCIETIES.

SIR:— The Tribune for the 15th inst. mentioned the death of Mortimer M. Leggett (son of the Commissioner of Patents) as having occurred during ceremonies preliminary to initiation into the "Kappa Alpha" Society of Cornell University. The following verdict was rendered by the coroner's jury on the evening of the 16th inst.:

The jury being duly charged and sworn to inquire on the part of the people when, where and how the said Mortimer M. Leggett came to his death, do find that said Mortimer M. Leggett, a student of Cornell University, came to his death on the night of October 10, 1873, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock, by accidentally falling from a cliff on the south side of Six Mile Creek, in the village of Ithaca, Tompkins County, New York.

The witnesses were the physician who attended the injured man, a professor in the University, who is a member of the Society, and seven students, also members of the Society.

The evidence shows that Leggett and another student were to join the "Kappa Alpha" Society on the night of the accident. Before the formal initiation the candidate was, according to custom, to be led blindfolded to some lonely spot, in this instance nearly a mile from the village, in the dry bed of Six Mile Creek, which could here be reached by a secure path. The blind was to be then and there removed, and the candidate to renew his pledge of desire to join the Society; he was then again to be blindfolded and led back to the rooms, where the initiation ceremonies, described as very impressive and enjoyable, would take place. All agree that none of the preliminaries consist in taking candidates to dangerous places in order to terrify them; also that none had been drinking; also that no ill-treatment of any kind was intended or offered; and that Leggett made no opposition.

A party of "Kappa Alpha" students were to rendezvous about 9 o'clock in the road which follows the south bend of Six Mile Creek, at a point about 150 yards beyond the last house in the village, and nearly opposite a pine tree which stands upon the very brink of the rocky precipice which here overhangs, and is about thirty-five feet from the turfy bed of the creek. The road fence is about fifty feet from the edge of the cliff, and the intervening ground has an inclination of about one foot in four or five, but is pretty even and clear of shrubbery. The tree is five feet in girth, has no low branches, and sends several large roots into the bank, one of them forming the edge over which the fall occurred; there are no bushes on that side for several yards, but to one at a distance, unacquainted with the locality, the tops of trees in the creek bed might appear as such. While awaiting the arrival of others, Northrup buckled a black cloth over Leggett's eyes; Leggett was then helped over the fence (about four feet high), and left in charge of Wason and Lee, neither of whom had ever been there before or had any idea of the nature of the bank.

The ground over which Leggett was to walk had previously been examined by Flint; but no one else knew the nature of the bank, excepting perhaps Northrup, a Senior and a resident of Ithaca, who, however, did not appear to be familiar with it.

It is important to note that all of the ravines in Ithaca have, as a rule, steep banks, varying from ten to 100 feet high; and that so great care has been exercised in approaching them that, although the University lies between two of them, but a single accident has occurred in them.

Wason testifies: When I got over the fence Leggett was standing with one or two of the boys; I took his arm and we walked down to a large tree; I had some conversation with one of the boys; Leggett was not leaning against the tree at that time; don't think I had hold of him before; I then stood him against the tree, or rather he leaned against it; I had charge of him because I was better acquainted with him than the other boys; he was leaning against the tree, and I stood about a foot from him, or within reaching distance; in about three or four minutes I saw his body inclining to one side as though his feet were slipping and he was going to fall; he was on the right side of the tree, or rather on the south side; I thought he was merely falling to the ground, not down the precipice; I moved forware to steady him, and in so doing stepped on what I thought was a limb; believe now it was a root of the tree; it caused me to slip, and I fell over the brink; did not succeed in doing what I intended, or in supporting him; in attempting to save him I fell myself; don't know how Leggett came to fall; his arms were not pinioned in any way.

Lee testifies: I was in the field between the fence and the tree; then I saw Wason slip and disappear, Leggett disappearing in an instant afterward; there was hardly four feet between them when they fell; I was entirely ignorant that there was a precipice there; was greatly surprised to see them disappear, and imagined they must have slipped down a bank; the idea of a precipice never struck me; my natural impulse was to help them, and acting upon it, I ran or moved diagonally off the cliff.

Lee and Wason were light men, and, though bruised and stunned, will recover; Leggett was large and heavy; he died in less than two hours, his only distingushable words being, "Oh don't," and "Take it off," of which various interpretations, or perhaps none at all, may be given.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

In the same issue of the Courant was the following editorial:

"The speakers at the Yale alumni meeting yesterday did well in entering their protest against the influence of the class secret societies in killing the two great rival debating societies, which were open to the members of all classes. The training which they afforded was of great advantage in preparing the collegian for future work, especially in the legal profession. But it was of use to all students in teaching them to think rapidly, and not to be disconcerted by meeting opposition or disapprobation. Mr. Evarts, who has few equals and no superiors as a ready thinker and talker, attributes no small degree of his great success to the training of these societies; and the same may be said of the ablest men who have been graduated from Yale during the last century. Of late years the secret societies, confined to classes, and seldom mustering more than twenty at any evening session, have monopolized the time and attention of the students and have destroyed the honored old societies. To the graduate of a few years, there is nothing more absurd than the importance which the undergraduate attaches to his society badge and secrets, which, from the jealousy with which they are guarded, might be supposed to rival the secrets of the state department, or of the grand lodge of free and independent blacksmiths. And yet after all the mystery is penetrated it means simply that a dozen young men meet in a badly ventilated hall to be mutually bored with essays, speeches, and perhaps plays, the best of which would be greatly improved by the wider range and more impartial critizism of the large open societies, where the speaker or essayist is brought in contact with the keenest intellects of other classes.

Moreover, the secret society fosters snobbery and tends to create division among the best friends, one of whom may be fortunate enough to secure an election to a more popular society than the other. There is hardly a class in which sincere friendships are not thus broken only to be renewed after an experience with the world has taught the youth the insignificance of the cause of separation and ill-feeling. Another bad result of the secret societies is seen in college politics, the combinations of which prepare the young men for the most corrupt side of future politics. Classmates are elected to places of honor, not on account of their pre-eminent merit but because they are skilful enough to control the successful combinations among different societies.

It would be a good thing if young men had the manliness to appreciate the bad effects of these societies and to voluntarily repudiate them and revive the more honorable and more manly rivalry of the great, open, college debating societies. But as young men are not always the best judges of their own needs, perhaps it would be well for the colleges to act on the suggestion of Mr. Evarts and other able and liberal thinkers, and suppress the secret organizations. If, in this way, the old debating societies can be revived and made to perform their ancient part in mental training, the benefits to the colleges would largely outweigh the temporary ill-feeling produced among a few undergraduates by the suppression of their favorite societies."

The arguments already presented are believed to be final and exhaustive; and, though not unprofitable, it would be a labor unnecessary to the present purpose to collate the numerous public utterences of college presidents and professors of the same general tenor. But it would be unjust to suppose that so general a conviction should be without some practical results. A considerable number of our colleges have met the secret fraternities with an excluding rule. Official timidity sometimes winks at its violation; but of the 298 universities and collegiate institutions (not female or scientific schools), reporting to the United States Bureau of Education and published in the Commissioner's report of 1872, eighty-eight are believed to sustain such a rule. Among these are colleges of the first rank in intellectual endowments and moral character. Other institutions have used their authority to restrain or suppress the fraternities by college law. In 1857, the faculty of Princeton College, N. J., issued a general order abolishing all the secret fraternities of the institution. In the same year they were suppressed by a like measure at Harvard University, Mass. Some of the societies, however, are said to have kept up a secret existence, and their demise is not acknowledged in the fraternity catalogues, and under the present administration at Cambridge they expect an early and full restoration of former privileges. A chapter of the "Sigma Theta" was brought to an end by the faculty at Amherst, Mass., a short time after its establishment in 1847. At Yale, restrictions have at various times been placed on the societies. Singing and boisterous conduct on the streets after adjournment is forbidden the Junior societies. In 1864 "Sigma Phi," a Sophomore society established in 1846, was suppressed, "having become notoriously disreputable." Another society arising in its place was only permitted on condition it should in no way become the successor of the "Sigma Phi," either in use of name, badge, or hall, that its attention should be given to literary exercises, and that some one of the faculty should be elected to honorary membership, thus securing representation and nominal control. In 1865 each society was ordered to initiate only in its own hall and in the presence of members alone. Some years ago all the fraternities of Davidson College, North Carolina, ceased to exist by order of the faculty; but within a few months the same body has consented to their re establishment. These are probably the most prominent instances of regulation or suppression which fall within the limits of this chapter, and they are sufficient proof that firmness only is needed in enforcing college law to utterly eradicate a system so generally and justly condemned.

Another factor in this problem is the efforts of students themselves. While none can feel more keenly the evils of the Greek societies, their opposition, either from lack of enthusiasm, or pertinacity, or organization, or all these, has not been greatly successful. The rapid changes of student life, the preoccupation of mind with study or with schemes for an ambitious future unfit the undergraduate for a reformer; and those who would make a conscientious war on the fraternities are least likely to give to extraneous matters time devoted to study. The most prominent organized efforts made by students are represented by the "Delta Upsilon," the "Gamma Nu" and the "Independent" societies. The Independents, it is believed, have always been local associations; and through frequent change of membership, lack of organization and pointedness of effort they have led a life of uncertainty. In 1868–9 there was a society at Cornell University which issued the following address to the students of that institution:

"Thus early in its history this institution has become the scene of two opposing forces, one of which we believe to be foreign to its spirit, and at war with its liberal and comprehensive plans. This element is represented by secret societies. Believing them to be fruitful of strife and dissatisfaction, we look with concern upon their presence and their growth in the University. Belonging to times of violence they cannot but disturb the peacefulness of academic life. They throw off the healthful restraints of popular criticism, and seek influence and honors by ways not provided in society at large. In Universities that offer the privileges of culture to all, they become exclusive; and where all ends should be intellectual, they turn ambition to other and unprofitable uses. As aids to culture they are seldom entitled to especial consideration. Their alliances are rather arbitrary than friendly. By lessening the restraints upon indulgence; by their temptations to waste money and time; by constraint over their minorities; by their divisions, rivalries and secrecy, they dangerously touch the character of their own members and peace of all. Their history is a story of turbulence and disorder. At Yale they have been sharply condemned. At Harvard, Princeton, Union, Oberlin, Jefferson and West Point, even their existence has been forbidden."

The following were adopted as the principles of the society:

"1. We hold that college secret societies are not in harmony with the liberal principles of Cornell University.

"2. We hold that they are calculated to produce strife and animosity, and to create distinctions not founded on merit.

"3. We hold that the objects of equality, fraternity and morality can be obtained without resorting to the veil of secrecy.

"4. We maintain for every student equal rights and privileges, and we hold that a man should be judged in all charity not according to his pretensions but according to his worth.

"We have united for the purpose of maintaining and defending liberal principles, and for promoting intellectual, social and moral improvement."

The excellence of this platform should have secured large and beneficial results; but the society is not now known to be active at Cornell. A similar association existed at the University of Michigan at about the same time. It is possible that these societies have been absorbed in the "Delta Upsilon," as has been the case with other open organizations.

The "Gamma Nu" is an open society in the Freshman class at Yale. It was instituted in about the year 1855, and had in the first ten classes 296 members. Coming into existence in an order of things so uniformly adverse as at Yale this society has worked its way steadily into recognition. Its founders were abused, derided, set aside. Every effort was made to crush out the organization; and yet a trace of the proscriptive spirit is shown toward it, although it is acknowledged to be the "society of hard-working scholarship." While having but about one-fifth of the members of the Freshman class, it has in a single year, out of 243 honors or prizes with a cash value of $3,396, taken 109 of them valued at $2,400. Some of the best and some of the poorest men in every class are said to join it: the one, from a "manly contempt for the silly mummeries and greedy extortions" of the Greek fraternities; the other, from a dread of their initiations. Another society of the same name and character was established at Brown University, R. I., in 1860. An unsuccessful effort was made in 1864 to unite with Yale; and in 1868 it became a chapter of the Delta Upsilon anti-secret fraternity.

The above societies are local and independent; the Delta Upsilon has branches in a number of institutions; the catalogue published in 1860 has reports from seventeen. They are known as chapters, and were established at the following institutions at the dates mentioned: Williams College, Mass., founded 1834, whole number of members 472; Union College, N. Y., 1838, 461 members; Amherst College, Mass., 1847, 247 members; Hamilton College, N. Y., 1847, 194 members; Colby University, Waterville, Me., 1850, 117 members; Rochester University, N. Y., 1853, 117 members; Middlebury College, Vt., 1856, 90 members; Rutgers College, N. J., 1858, 74 members; Jefferson College, Pa., 1859, 69 members; New York University, 1865, 35 members; Western Reserve College, O., 1865, 46 members; Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y., 1866, 69 members; Washington College, Pa., 1866, 16 members; Miami University, O., 1868, 29 members; Brown University, R. I., organized 1860, 86 members; Cornell University, N. Y., 1869, 27 members; Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., 1869, 14 members; total membership 2,163. All but three chapters, those at Williams and Washington Colleges and Colby University, report up to the date of the catalogue.

The Delta Upsilon organization is modeled after the Greek letter societies, but on the principle of opposition to their secret character. It has annual conventions and an organ, Our Record, published at Utica, N. Y. Its object is thus stated in the constitution:

"Believing that secret societies are calculated to destroy the harmony of college, to create distinctions not founded on merit, to produce strife and animosity, we feel called upon to exert ourselves to counteract the evil tendency of such associations. We believe that the evils resulting from them are such as can be suppressed by action combined with principles. We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity and morality may be attained without resorting to the veil of secrecy. We, therefore, the several anti-secret societies of Hamilton and Waterville Colleges, the University of Rochester, and Middlebury, Rutgers and Jefferson Colleges, in order to secure greater unity, permanency and efficiency of effort, do agree to form ourselves into a fraternity for the purpose of counteracting the evil tendency of secret associations in college, for maintaining and diffusing liberal principles, and for promoting intellectual, social and moral improvement. In doing this we trust we have at heart the best interests of the institutions to which we belong, and that we are directed by the light of experience, the suggestions of reason and the dictates of conscience."

No person is admitted "who does not practice strict morality, or who belongs to, or countenances any college secret society," and each member, on joining, takes the following pledge:

"You affirm that the principles of this fraternity as expressed in its preamble and constitution, accord entirely with your views; that, as a member of this fraternity, you will faithfully adhere to those principles and abide by all its rules and regulations; that you will ever extend to each brother the right hand of sympathy; that you will uphold and encourage your fellow members in all that is honorable and right; and that, at all times, and in all circumstances, you will endeavor to cultivate those feelings which should ever exist between brothers engaged in a common cause;—all this you solemnly promise on your sacred honor."

Among the prominent members of this organization are Austin Blair, ex-Governor of Michigan; William Bross, of the Chicago Tribune and ex-Lieut. Gov. of Illinois; Judge Field, of California; David A. Wells; Generals James A. Garfield, M. C., and J. C. Lee, of Ohio; Presidents Bartlett of Maryville College, Tenn., Merriam of Ripon, Wis., Northrup of Chicago University, Cowles of Elmira Female College, Bliss of Syrian College, Bierut, Williams of West Va. College, Ferris of New York University and Weston of Crozen Institute. There are also thirty-five professors and thirty-nine missionaries of the American Board. Distinguished honorary members are Albert Barnes, Prof. Nelson of Lane Seminary and Gen. J. W. Phelps of Vermont.

So far as results are known the Delta Upsilon cannot be regarded as greatly successful, although undoubtedly useful in keeping alive an honorable sentiment and laying the foundation of a thorough reform. Formed after an exacting model its energy is to a considerable degree exhausted in preserving its own vitality before its great work is begun. Outside the Yale society it seems, however, to be the best organized movement among students to remove the evils of the secret societies.

RUM AND TOBACCO.

—By a law which recently passed the Missouri Legislature, the selling or giving intoxicating liquor to any minor or habitual drunkard, after warning from wife, parent or guardian, is to be punished by a fine of not less than $40 and forfeiture of license.

—The Boston Journal says of social usages in that city, "Public dinners without liquors are the rule instead of the exception. Many of our military companies have done away with the use of wine for several years. The entire Fire Department of Boston is required to sign the total abstinence pledge.

—The Ohio Constitutional Convention lately passed to a third reading the following alterative propositions to be voted on separately by the people: First, license to traffic in spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, under such regulations as shall be presented by law, may be granted, but this section shall not prevent the General Assembly from passing such laws to restrict such traffic as to compensate injuries resulting therefrom. Second, no license to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall hereafter be granted in this State, but the General Assembly may by law restrain or prohibit the traffic, or may provide against the evils resulting therefrom.

ELKHART, Ind., April 12.—Gore & Wright's planing mill was entirely destroyed by fire at 1:30 this afternoon. It originated by ashes from a pipe falling into the shavings. The flames spread so rapidly that only one desk was removed. The building was owned by the Elkhart Hydraulic Company, and cost $3,500. Insured for $1,750 in the Aetna and Pennsylvania. The machinery was worth $6 000; insured for $2,500 in the Orient, Lancaster and Franklin, of wirginia. The loss will reach $5,000. It is a severe blow to the enterprising proprietors, who lately added new machinery.

—Last Thursday morning the Staats Zeitung published what purported to be a report of a trial before Justice Scully, wherein a law-breaking beer-seller was defendant. There was a jury in the case, having among its number several very sensible and respectable gentlemen. Two or three of Field, Leiter & Co.'s employes served on it. The beer-seller was acquitted, though the evidence against him was conclusive, and on the following morning the German paper fairly howled about rights and privileges, constitutions, tyrants, etc., etc. The firm of Field, Leiter & Co. came in for more than its share of abuae, because a few of its clerks chanced to be in the jury-box, and were honest enough to perform their duties. The Germans were told the firm was composed of Know-Nothings, who were born with a hatred for foreigners, and were advised not to deal with it any more. It is now stated that a rival firm, when it discovered that this damaging article concerning Field & Leiter was in print, endeavored to buy 1,000 copies of the Staats Zeitung for private circulation. Failing in this, it borrowed the article in type, and had it printed in the form of a circular. The German paper was given proper credit for the article, and an additional paragraph was attached to it which called the attention of the people to the fact that the rival firm was the friend of the Germans, that it had taken no part in the beer matter, and that it was a good house for Germans to trade with. And this is what is called "business enterprise."—Chicago Tribune.

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

We expeet to report our subscription list again next week. We hope you will do your best to enable us to make that report as encouraging as possible.

It seemed to be time for an onward movement, an enlargement in the field of operations. It seemed to be our duty to go forward. We had been too recently studying about Red Sea difficulties to hesitate when the command was, as we understood it, "Go forward." So we enlarged and improved the Cynosure.

But we must all move forward together. We must not hesitate or turn back. We must not lose our faith, if the sea is boisterous or we may begin to sink as Peter did.

If the Cynosure needs, as we have stated, 5,000 new subscribers now, in order, successfully to publish it in its present enlarged, improved form; since that number has not been received, of course you will not be surprised to know that the receipts during the month of April were too small to meet the expeses, although economy is used in every department; and a large part of the editorial work is done without cost to us. The receipts were two hundred dollars too small to meet the increased expenses. We do not mention this to discourage or dampen the zeal of any friend. We hope it will make every friend who reads these words say, "If the receipts do not cover the expenses and make up this deficit during the present and following months, it will not be because I have not done all that I can to make them."

June, July, Aug. and Sep. are not usually considered the best months for obtaining subseriptions, but they are goodmonths after all. The weather is not inclement, the roads are good and people often spend a portion of the season in visiting friends. All these and many other circumstanees afford opportunities for eanvassing.

Is not the cause worthy of your best endeavors? Is there any truth that calls more loudly and reasonably for your support now, than the truth which is sent out from week to week in the Cynosure?

"Up! Let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad."

Send in the sixteen hundred subseriptions needed to make the list six thousand before the first of June, then during the remainder of the seasons work for the two thousand more needed to keep the Cynosure out of debt, and we trust that the momentum gained by the persistent and powerful efforts put forth this summer will in the fall and winter, to speak figuratively, be so great as to carry everything before it.

TO DELEGATES TO THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

The publishers of the Cynosure expect to have a full assortment of Antimasonie traets and Masonic books at the Syracuse Convention. A person purchasing ten or more books of one kind at that time ean obtain them at the one hundred rate. Delegates who expeet to attend the Convention will do well to eonsult with friends at home and bring orders for books with them. Those who buy books there will save postage or express charges, and get their books without any accident or delay.

Orders for the Cynosure and for extra eopies containing the minutes of the Syracuse meeting will be reeeived there. Shall not the report of the Convention be read in every State in the Union? Let us have orders beforehand so that there will be no doubt as to the number of papers to be printed.

Do you know the views of all your friends on the subject of seeret societies? Improve your opportunities for bringing them out on this subjeet and you will realize more fully the neeessity for distributing tracts and circulating the Cynosure. One of the best ways to introduce this subjeet is to take one or both of the petitions reeently published in the Cynosure and circulate them thoroughly, give every man, and women, old, middle aged or young, an opportunity to sign them.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

The readers of the Cynosure have doubtless been interested in the artieles which have been prepared with some care on College Seeret Societies. We have already been to considerable expense having sent out our cireulars at two different times to about two hundred and fifty different eolleges for the purpose of eolleeting information on the subject, besides expending mueh time in correspondence and research on the subject.

These artieles are to be issued in pamphlet form early in June. Orders have already been received for several hundred copies. The price will not exceed $15.00 per hundred, two dollars per dozen, postage or express eharges extra. This work supplies a want whieh has long been felt by persons opposed to seeret societies in eolleges.

Nothing, we believe, tends more to confuse the ideas of equal justiee and prevent an honest recognition of real merit in the minds of men educated in sehools which allow secret societies than a four year drill in the conecalment and favoritism of their college societies.

The alumni of one institution, which has ordered two hundred copies of this book, have combined together to aid the faculty in the total extermination of these pestilent parasites from their "alma mater." Send on orders.

A friend in Illinois sends us forty-one subscribers, and another in Ohio thirty-three. Every county in each of the thirty-eight States which has a population of 3,000 or more we hope will some day have a capable, earnest agent who will aim high and hit the mark. Can you aet or find some one who will, in your locality?

We wish to remind our fortnightly subscribers who receive the enlarged weekly now, without a call from us for more money, that we hope they all will make up the difference, as some have already done, by sending in new subscriptions.

Does your subscription expire in May? Please renew promptly. If you can not pay for the whole year now put the date forward for three or six months until you have more money.

Topics of the Time.

—The May anniversaries of various religious bodies have this year returned quite generally to New York. Among those which have met during the present month are the American Seaman's Friend Society, which held its forty-sixth anniversary in the Church of the Holy Trinity; the American Home Missionary Society in Broadway Tabernacle; the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions in Dr. Paxton's Church; the American French Guardian Society in the West Presbyterian Church; the National Temperance Society in Steinway Hall; the American and Foreign Christian Union in the Bible House; the American Tract Society in the Bible House; and the Baptist Sunday-School Union and the American Congregational Union.

The Swing trial closed on Wednesday last. Forty-six of the presbyters voted for his acquittal on both the charges preferred, thirteen to convict, and two votes were divided. Dr. Patton gave notice of an appeal to the Synod. On Thursday Prof. Swing telegraphed from Oxford, O., (where his public life began,) that he intended to withdraw from the Presbyterian church. He returned to Chicago on Friday and preached as usual on the Sabbath. His church (the Fourth Presbyterian) voted on Friday to remain in connection with the Presbyterian Church, and also to retain Mr. Swing, an independent minister in a Presbyterian church, an anomalous but occasional connection. After his sermon on Sunday a subscription of over $20,000 was raised to pay off the floating debt, which may be considered as an evidence of his popularity. The result of the trial was received also with great satisfaction by the daily press, which seems suddenly elevated to be "Sir Oracle" in theology. Revs. Collier and Powers, Unitarians, and Thomas, Methodist, gave a part or the whole of a discourse to gratulations on the course of the Chicago Presbytery.

The Mill River disaster is likely to have a place with the Pemberton Mills. The reservoir dam was built several years ago by a contractor named Bassett. This person was present with a copy of the original contract, when a committee sent from the Massachusetts Legislature visited the fatal wall, and called attention to any evidence that might show that its stipulations were fulfilled. But it was shown to his face that the foundation should have been sunk at least three feet below the bottom of the reservoir, whereas it was built only from the bottom, giving opportunity for hidden springs to undermine it. The wall was four feet narrower than the contract, without buttresses, tapering to the top, and banked up with earth sand. It is a wonder that it has held so long and that hundreds of villagers could dwell beneath it with so little caution. A coroner's jury, composed it is said of men who understand their business, are at work on the case; and if the accident is the result of carlessness in construction or otherwise, let there be no faltering in judicial punishment.

In several large cities the temperance movement conducted by women has received a check. This is notably the case in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, where several praying bands have been arrested on the ground of obstructing the streets and hindering business. Shallow and false to justice as this pretense is, when a Masonic procession spread through the streets for mere ignoble display is never interfered with for that reason, the effort to brave it out against constituted authorities does not command that public sympathy without which the temperance movement largely fails. The arrested ladies were generally discharged with a reprimand. The arrests caused great excitement and in Pittsburgh gave an impetus of indignation which may have a brief effect. It is worth while to inquire whether the same perseverance and effort used in a different manner might not accomplish more. The ladies of Chicago since the failure of their petition to the Common Council have maintained a daily prayer meeting for this object and occasionally a day of fasting and prayer, while temperance meetings are frequent. This may be more slow, but by God's grace more sure. At Wheaton, near Chicago, meetings for prayer and for the public have been held weekly; the people were brought to harmonious action; and the saloons all surrendered before a cent of the prosecuting fund was expended.

The moiety system by which Jayne and Sanborn have gained an unenviable noteriety, is at length near its end. The House of Representatives passed a bill last week abolishing the system utterly, and the Senate will not long defer its endorsement. The amount of official corruption uncovered in the investigations preceding the adoption of this measure would astonish any but Americans, who are likely to become proverbially indifferent to such often repeated developments. The Ways and Means Committee, who have conducted the examinations, have in their capacity prepared a censure upon Secretary Richardson, Assistant Secretary Sawyer, and Solicitor Banfield, for their connection with the fradulent system, which will be a lever for their removal from the money chests of the Treasury, where they have clung like barnacles. The press of the country as the exponent of public opinion, has been largely influential in securing this reformation, and has thus once more vindicated its mentorship over the affairs of the nation. There are yet other dark and hideous forms of error which must feel the point of its eager spear.

"The two best known of all secret societies that ever have been are the two most extensive monuments of humbug on the one side and credulity on the other. They divide themselves between the ancient world and the modern. The great and illustrious humbug of ancient history was, The Eleusinian Mysteries. The great and illustrious humbug of modern history, of the history which boasts a present and a future, as well as a past, is Freemasonry.—Thomas De Quincy."

Masonic Corner-Stone Laying.

[A Soliloquy.]

BY J. L. BARLOW.

There's music on the air. I hear a tramp,
As if an army late had broken camp.
And see! Did e'er my eyes such visions greet,
As this procession, coming up the street?—
A line of apron'd, collar'd, armed men,
With silken banners, telling what and when.—
And then, yon mitred priests, and crowned kings,
The dim and misty past, to mem'ry brings.
Has Aaron come from Horeb's rocky height—
Ezekiel's vision turned to men of might?
And has Jeshurun's king come back again,
To lead a host of resurreeted men?
I'd think them ghosts, from Hades lately come,
But for their tread, and sound of trump and drum.
I've read of knights who graced a former day,
Can these be such? or savages are they
More riehly tinsel'd, feather'd, than their wont,
Out from their wigwams on a stately hunt?
What's that! upon yon silken cushion borne,
On whieh a square, and compasses are worn?
It is a Bible!—Word of King of kings;
But why upon it are those other things?
Is this a crowd from home, or coast?
Is it a Christian, or a heathen host?
I strive to read the riddle, but in vain;—
'Tis mingling of the saered and profane.
But stop! Do I not know yon mitred brow?
'Twas a familiar look I caught but now.
O no, it cannot be! Yet still it seems,—
It is my pastor, Reverend Doctor Deems!
What, he—a Christian—'mong that motley crew!
Has he become a masqucrading Jew?
An Israelite is walking by his side;
And next a godless lawyer, fill'd with pride,
Who on the Sabbath leads our village ehoir,
And eools the pulpit's anti-seeret fire;
And next to him, behold our pompous squire!
I know them now in their outlandish gear,
As in their mareh each one is drawing near.
Lo! there goes Deacon Smooth-face, "eheek by jowl"
With—as I live!—that drunken Doctor Growl!
My brother, Tom,—the rattling, crazy seamp—
Walks arm in arm with Superintendent Camp!
Then that molasses-colored man, Ah Sing,
Is sandwiched in between the brothers King,
With Christian, pagan, Jew, and everything!
What does it mean? My head aches with surprise
At the strange pageant passing 'neath my eyes.
But stop! priests, kings aud knights, a halt have made,
Right where a corner-stone is to be laid;
And from the erowd stand forth a chosen few,
Who have the contemplated work in view.
My priestly pastor, now, is mouthing prayer,
In which, nor work, nor name of Christ is there.
A song in saintly fashion now is sung,
Among whose chords is heard no female tonguc.
The stone is tried by level, plumb and square;
And then the Master lays it with an "air!"
The corn, the wine and oil have played their part,
And spoke the heathen, more than Christian art;
While like most solemn noodles, there and then,
Admired the work—those aproned, strange-clad men.
What is this medley? Has the thing a name?
E'en while I look I feel a rising shame.
Here walks a Christian in this strange attire,
And there a heathen—worshiper of fire!
A minister and infidel are next;
(Would I could give that godly man a text;)
All, all that host are in one livery clad,
The seeming good fused with the well-known bad.
Freemasons?—Yes. I've heard!—And these are they?
What is the world the better for them, pray?
What right had Masons thus this stone to lay,
And so to bear these honors all away?
I've read strange things about this mystie craft,
Of silly rites, o'er which I've often laughed;
And then I 'mind me of the awful oaths,
They're made to take, when stripp'd of half their clothes;
But now how fine, yet very strange they look!
Is this the way they bait the mystie hook,
With which the raw recruits are lured and eaught,
And then into their galling slavery brought?
My pastor, too! who would have thought that he Would condescend with such a crowd to be?
When next I hear him preach, I shall, I know,
Recall the hood-wink and the cable-tow;
And when he's praying in his holiest tones,
My mind will see him on his marrow bones;
And when my hand he takes, my thoughts will slip,
I fear, to this, or that, Masonic grip.
With what I know of this promiseuous clan,
It will prove hard to listen to this man.
I've thought him to his Master leal and true,—
And now to find him joined to sueh a crew.

And giving moral aid to all they do!
In church 'tis Christ, but here he worships Baal;
All such divided service can but fail.
Of ministers, alas! there's more than one,
The so-called honors of the lodge has won;
For nearly all the preachers of the place
Are out, with stately tread, and solemn face,
These modern pagan mysteries to grace;—
Though one or two, I thought, did not appear
To feel as if the moral was quite clear.
'Tis well we know our pastors are but men,
Lest 'twixt our God and us they come; but then,
'Twere well we learned it in some other way
Than by the humbling lessons of to-day.
How could this man in public thus proclaim
Such fellowship, without a blush of shame?
I've learned from reading Morgan and Bernard,
(Though to believe their saying has been hard,)
That Masons do not hesitate to claim
Deliverance without His saving name!—
And that the "Common Gavel," as they say,
Will cleanse and fit one for the "shining way."
The Bible, as a "saving light," must share
Its honors with the compass and square!—
While unto them our Holy God of love
Is but Grand Master of a lodge above!—
And to that lodge, each infidel and Jew
Is bound, as well as every Christian, true
If but his oath he keeps, and pays his due.
All this my honored pastor can but know;
As all their manuals do plainly show.
Does he believe in this religion bald,
As he's "from labor to refreshment call'd?"
Can he consent to mumble Christless prayers,
While gravely climbing up the "winding stairs?"
Or, will he keep that obligation strong
To save a "craft companion," right or wrong?
And when he's challenged, will he dare the sham,
And give a password, "I am that I am?"
And did he find within the secret den
That "name" he may not tell to Christian men?
Did he the oath of Master Mason take
And ne'er his conscience nor his manhood wake?
He made to swear he would not violate
The chastity of Master Mason's mate,
Or daughter, sister, knowing them to be,
While—for his oath—towards others he is free!
Were honor, pride, and manhood with his clothes,
While he his soul was blistering with such oaths?
What consorts for a minister are they
Who must protect themselves in such a way!
And much a self-respecting man is he,
The supple tool of such a "craft" to be?
Can he with love these obligations view,
And to the Gospel, and to Christ, be true?
He's not a Christian, if he does believe
The lie. But if he'll willingly deceive,—
And through such solemn, awful mockery wade,
A thing for our contempt himself he's made.
The march is past; the flaunting banners gone;
Which in their passing thus my thought has drawn.
Like nightmare it has weighed my spirits down,
To see my pastor wear that priestly crown.
I feel there's danger both to church and state,
Unless we waken soon 'twill be too late
To save our country from impending fate.
Who will our churches from their slumbers wake—
The careless patriots' numbing fetters break,
And on their hearts and hands the burden take?
The press is in their hands, or else too weak;
The pulpit will not, or it dare not, speak;
And on the people's conscience, out from hell
Has come a blasting mildew, and a "spell."
But God's not dead, nor is our Christ asleep;
Nor is it our's to wring our hands and weep;
But in God's strength to conquer as we go,
A loyal host against this Christless foe.
Then fling our banners out; and with the sword
Of Truth we'll march and conquer for our Lord,
Sustain'd in all our conflicts by his Word.

The Grange.

BY REV. J. O. BAYLES.

Seldom has there been a more plausible trap laid for men than the grange organization. It has a winning story about cheap purchase and the shelving of middle men. It has the same bait as Masonry in the way of religion; just enough to soothe an easy conscience yet not enough to disturb the sleeping soul.

These two ingredients make the cup appear very plausible. Man wants a religion of some nature and this has a very happy connection and satisfactory degree. The church is too spiritual in its nature, but the combination of business and religion with little of the latter and much of the former strikes many men in a favorable light. As a kind of back ground to aid in this movement, not a few farmers are fully persuaded that nearly all virtue has taken refuge in the rural districts and they imagine they see in the grange what will steady the helm and set all things right. The novelty in its ritual and secrecy is also a very pleasant little waking up to the staid life of the farmer, especially the youth, exciting a vague hope that it will transform the world. That this full of illusion we think, because:

First, need we suppose that the middle men that the grange must employ will do the work any more reasonably than our merchants? Gavazzi found those who thought he and his associates of the Free Church of Italy ought to have remained in the Roman Catholic church and reformed it. His reply in the first place was, "he did not want to become a fool at once." Men ought not to throw away common sense. Who hinders any one from engaging in any lawful manufacturing and merchandising? Our merchants buy at the manufactories when they think best, but frequently prefer to avail themselves of the skill and labor of middle men. Will not the agent that distributes the goods of the grange (in case there should be any) require remuneration as well as our present merchants? Can he or will he make brick without straw? We do not deny but an article here and there may be furnished at a reduction, yet we have seen some grangers, but none that were ever benefitted in this way. The rule will be to the masses as some of the craft now testify, their outlay in it is more than their income.

Second, because of the nature of its organization.

It is selfish, designed to benefit only the farmer. It is at war with the other classes of society, without whose co-operation all progress will be seriously impeded. It is a secret society, which fact will recoil on itself. As in Masonry the rank and file will pay their dues without receiving benefit, because the managers will need all the proceeds. As in Masonry the masses will know little about and have little to do with managing the general fund. A good Mason of fifteen degrees told me he liked Masonry in all but one thing, he did not know where so much money went. We live in an age where it is hopeless to look for honesty in such a co-operation. Supposing all is honest, the insurance societies consume on an average thirty-three per cent. in management; will the grange be any better? The sum of it all is likely to be, more middle men and increasing the burdens of society.

Third, one of the articles of their constitution is that all questions of politics and religion will not be tolerated as subjects of discussion in the work of the order.

During this winter the order in the West sent a list of questions to their members of Congress at Washington, asking them to reply yes or no. It is well known that in some of these States they are doing their utmost to control the politics, and yet they are to have nothing to do with politics! They are to discuss no questions of religion, and yet we are told by it that the mind is to be expanded by tracing the beautiful laws the great Creator has established in the universe and to enlarge the views of creative wisdom and power. But in case a member speaks of these things in a religious light, or speaks of religion in any aspect he is called to order for violating the constitution of the society. It is surely a strange place for a Christian, and we can safely say that an order that is so self-contradictory and ignores the light of heaven will not be very remunerative in the long run.

Novel Reading.

BY. WM. S. SPENCER.

The morals as well as the intellectual character of a people are dependent upon their literature. The same is as true of the individual as of the nation. Alexander's character was moulded and shaped, very much, by the constant reading of Homer. He kept it always with him; that by contemplating the life and character of Achilles, he might himself become truly heroic. Our Puritan fathers were truly great as well as good men, but they drank in the spirit of Milton, Howard and Baxter, the great authors of their age and nation.

He who said, "Let me write the ballads of a nation and I care not who makes her laws," meant to state this great principle: The morals of society are more affected by its literature than by its rulers. The young especially, whose passions are ardent, and whose imaginations are ever on the wing, love to dwell in an ideal world, rather than in a world of reality. They crave the romantic, the strange, the startling. Fictitious works are especially adapted to feed and fire the natural propensity, instead of curbing and directing as every stimulus should. We have only to furnish works of this immoral, vividly-pictured character, and the minds of the young will receive a bias which may fit them to move in some ideal world, but not in this life of toil, sorrow and moral responsibility, for this latter the mind must undergo a severe, rigid discipline which it is not the province of fiction to impart. From the multiplication of this trash literature, from its universal diffusion we see the danger to which our youth are exposed.

Mark, we do not enter upon a crusade against the perusal of works of fiction; we should be sorry to debar the individual from the Pilgrim's Progress or Paradise Lost, and other works which are an ornament to our literature and an honor to the men who wrote them.

But it is this indiscriminate novel reading that we do detest; the constant perusal of those licentious, vile novels, which craze the mind and then give place to corresponding stupor; which destroy the taste for the true and holy; which stain the character and benumb the soul; which excite and call forth sympathy without giving the opportunity to act upon those impulses; which degrade, debauch and vilify the moral, and blind the mental; which prompt to no holy aspirations or philanthropic motives, covering duty with self and pleasure.

Novel reading is an infatuation which masters soul as truly as rum drinking does. It leads on and on; ne'er content, but ever luring to drink deeper from the poisonous draught. Many are the melancholy sights one meets; for instance, a woman, worn, wasted, in tatters and near starvation. It is equally sad to meet the well dressed lady of forty or fifty with the three greasy volumes which are to be devoured between the noon of to-day and the dawn of to-morrow. His satanic majesty is equally as sure of his victim.

Would you purify the morals of a people and lead them to nobility of action? Give them reading founded on truth and inciting to higher life. But if you wish to crush out that little ennobling spark that flickers, give them the modern novel, more insidious and subtle than those of any former date, because founded on adultery, bigamy, elopements and the like; and you'll surely help them in a course of debauch on earth and to a high seat in hell at last.

Novel study causes unnatural excitement even where the characters are properly drawn, but still more fatal are the consequences when such works are employed to decorate vice and deprecate true excellence; to picture human nature as essentially good, and the ungodly as truly happy; to represent piety as mean—as we are sorry to say Dickens does at times by his delineation of professors and ministers of religion,—or profanity as something noble; to picture the religious as either fools or hypocrites, or daub over with fair paint the face of fading worldly vanity. As to such perusals, we advocate total abstinence as the only safe ground.

When the characters are properly drawn, like the works referred to near the outset, we advocate temperance principles. We are not afraid of an occasional glass of like fiction, provided the person be not constantly sipping at it, and in case there be taking solid food in far larger measure. For every fictitious work devoured let there be read and digested several books of history or biography, a few books of voyages or travels, besides books of good theology, with at least a few books of science. If you examine our circulating libraries you will find more works of fiction than works of truth, and in many cases, fiction of the vilest character. Those who consume this garbage will soon take its line; as the worm takes the color of the green herbage on which it feeds.

Nor let it be argued by the novel reader that he does not believe the tale to be true and therefore it can do him no harm. The harm comes from the effect produced unconsciously, abiding unconsciously, operating unconsciously like the poison caught by visiting contagious districts, the mania of the rum guzzler, or the influence of evil companions. A refined selfishness is apt to prevail over every better feeling and when the trial days come, dark days, as they surely do to all, the higher sentiments furnish us no support or consolation.

The specific doctrine that we would set forth is, that the excessive novel reading of our times is chargable with many of the irregularities that prevail among us in a degree unknown at any previous period. Xenophon commended the Persians for the prudent education of their children, but we have need of one to reprove us for the obscene instruction of our youth. There is an opening here for labor and reform. Let the question be thought of, talked about, and acted upon. Let him that pineth for work, be no longer idle; but strive, in his own household and his own society, to root out filthy, unchaste literature.

A Seceder on Masonic Religion.

Dr Joel Swartz, editor of the Christian Work. Williamsport, Pa., is a seceding Mason. His views on the subject were published last August in the Lutheran Observer. The following is an extract:

But there is a thing or two which we do not regard as quite so innocent. These brotherhoods pretend to be religious. Some of the most "ancient and accepted," claim the Bible as sanctioning, if not authorizing, their existence and labors. They take their terrible oaths of secrecy upon it, they read from it in their lodge work as a part of their ritual, they carry it in their public processions; they pray and address God as their "Grand Master," the "Great Architect;" speak of heaven as a "Lodge," lay the corner-stones of Christian churches, have their chaplains, and strangely these are sometimes Christian ministers and sometimes men of no religion, and sometimes, too, men of notoriously immoral habits. They claim to do the works of piety,—they visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction,—and this, too, in a manner much more certain and liberal than the church itself,—alas, that this should ever be so!—and in general, to be very benevolent. It is true that they often give back to a brother in need some of the money which he paid in, and in case of his death, like some other much better insurance company, they pay something to his family. But as for piety or benevolence of such giving, we have only to say that it seems to us a little like the same thing in an insurance company, only we prefer the insurance company, even the "Ministers' League," to that. But their religion, it is this of which we wish to speak. We will take, for example, the Masonic fraternity, the most ancient, and without disparagement, perhaps the most reputable and religious of all the fraternities. And now, without personal arrogance, we may claim for this secret society, the first we ever joined, what we think even its enemies must concede, that it gives a tithe of all that it possesses to its own members; that its members are generally neither "extortioners nor unjust;" that it prays oft, and thus leads many of its more ardent admirers to claim that it is as good as the church of Christ, if not better. But our own grand objection to its religion is that it is anti-Christian, that its prayers are blasphemous, that its use of the Bible is sacrilegious, and the whole a compound of Judaism and paganism.

1. Its Religion is Anti-Christian.—Perhaps it would be thought sufficient to say that it is unchristian, which might simply mean that like many other organizations, it does not profess any connection with Christianity. But to speak after the manner of the Bible, it is anti-Christian. Masonry, with all its religion, studiously avoids the name of Christ. It does not recognize it in any capacity. Indeed, it does not know that "Jesus Christ has come in the flesh:" and hence, if the Bible, over which it swears so much, may be taken as authority, Masonry is not of God, and is anti-Christian. "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is that spirit of anti-Christ." (1 John iv. 3.) Moreover, since its prayers make no mention of him, they are simply deistical. How can a Christian minister or any Christian man address such prayers to God? And what has Masonry to do with the laying of the corner-stones of Christian churches, or burying the dead who die in the Lord? Does it not reject the "chief corner-stone," and "deny the Lord that bought us?" This the Bible, which Masonry carries when it goes abroad in its gaudy processions, calls a "damnable heresy." And, if it seem not to be more uncharitable than the Bible is, and pressing the matter too much, we might say that Masonry,—not its many truly pious, but mistaken adherents,—is a damnable heresy.

2. Its Prayers are Blasphemous.—We make this point not on the ground that notoriously immoral men who make no profession of religion, sometimes publicly officiate in offering them, but on the ground already adduced, they ignore Christ while assuming to address God in the way of worship. "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father."

3. Its use of the Bible is Sacrilegious.—It profanes this book by its horrid and barbarous oaths of secrecy taken upon it. The initiate invokes upon himself penalties in case of breach of his oath, which every merciful and humane sentiment of the Bible utterly abhors, which insults human nature, made in the image of God, shocks every feeling of piety, and would degrade even the Modoc Indians below the savage level to which their barbarity has thus far consigned them, if they could be imagined bad enough to execute them. We say this deliberately and advisedly, and ask whether it be not sacrilegious to use the Bible in administering and taking of such an oath, —oaths,—for, as if one were not enough, many of the same kind are taken! The forced and impertinent applications of Scripture to Masonic "work" in the lodge, grates harshly upon the ears of those who have been accustomed to an honest hearing and reading of the Word.

4. The Whole is a Compound of Judaism and Paganism.—Masonry ignoring Christ, goes back professedly to the time of Solomon, and seeks its origin in transactions about the building of the temple between the Jewish king, and Hiram, King of Tyre, who was a heathen.

We are the more confirmed in the grounds of our objections, since we know that they can have no trace of their origin in any dislike for any individuals connected with the orders. The only remembrance we can have of them is of their too partial kindness in receiving us, and of too long detaining us by their attractive fellowship in such unholy bonds. We can only ask those whom we deserted long ago in these fraternities to consider our accusations as bearing against the orders and not its many excellent and esteemed members.

Prohibition in Maine.

The Advance lately addressed inquiries to several prominent citizens of the pioneer prohibition State. The following are from the replies:

Gov. Nelson Dingley, Jr.—Yours, inquiring as to the working of the laws prohibiting drinking-houses and tippling-shops in this State, is at hand. In reply, I have to say that these laws have accomplished great good, and have proved far more affective in suppressing dram-shops and restraining the evils of intemperance than any other system of legislative restraint ever tried in this State. For more than two hundred years, first in the parent province and commonwealth and subsequently in the State of Maine, a thorough trial was made of what is popularly known as the license system in every form that could be devised. So powerless was the system in restraining the evils arising from drinking-houses and tippling-shops that in 1851 the State of Maine adopted the policy of prohibiting dram-shops altogether. We have had twenty-three years' experience of the policy of prohibition, and the results have been, on the whole, so far greater than those secured by any other system of legal restraint that the prohibitory policy is accepted as a settled fact in this State, and no considerable body of men favor its repeal. In more than three-fourths of the State, particularly in the rural sections, open dram-shops are almost unknown, and secret sales comparatively rare. In some of the cities and larger villages, where public sentiment on the temperance question is not so well sustained as in the rural districts, the law is not so effectively enforced as to prevent open sales to some extent, although even in such places, prohibition is not without some influence for good. Statistics show that under the influence of our prohibitory system and the indispensable moral efforts which have been put forth to increase its efficiency, the sale and the use of liquor in this State have very largely decreased; that drinking habits have ceased to be fashionable; and that total abstinence has come to be a common virtue instead of, as formerly, a rare exception.

Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, U. S. S.—I have your favor of the 21st inst., in which you ask my opinion of the Maine Prohibitory Liquor Law, its efficiency, workings, &c. I have not a doubt upon my mind that the law has been highly beneficial in its effects. In my judgment, less than one-half the liquor has been consumed in the State than would have been consumed had there been no law. That is my opinion. In the cities and larger towns liquors are, undoubtedly secretly and illegally sold. But much less is there sold in consequence of the law. In the rural towns, however, the restriction has been most marked and favorable. In many towns liquors are not sold at all; in many others, hardly for any purpose than for medicinal and mechanical purposes; and in all, its effects are palpable.

The law has been, I feel certain, of great use in the suppression of pauperism and crime. Nor can I have a doubt that a large majority of the people of Maine sustain the law.

Rev. John O. Fisk, D. D.—In reply to your inquiry about the Maine Prohibitory Law, pemit me to say that vastly too great expectations have been entertained in regard to its efficiency in preventing the sale of intoxicating liquors. The judge of the municipal court told me on Saturday that there are about ninety places in this city in which it is well known that ardent spirits are sold by the glass; as many, he thought, as there have ever been at one time. In the leading hotels the free sale of intoxicating liquors is notorious, at the same time that the proprietor of one of them has given his bond not to sell any. I often meet with drunken men in the streets, and there is no doubt that drinking alcoholic liquors in places of public sale, as well as private houses, is very common. What is true of Bath is true of many other places of equal importance in the State. The law is all that the best friends of temperance can desire; only there is wanting in many places the needed public sentiment properly to enforce it. In many small country places almost no liquor at all is sold by the glass; and this happy condition of things is attributed, whether with justice or not, I cannot say, to the force of the Prohibitory Law.

Hon. Wm. P. Frye, M. C.—You ask my views as to the success of our prohibitory law in Maine, and having had large experience in their enforcement, as a prosecuting officer, I feel no hesitation in complying with your request. My impression is that our first law of this kind was enacted in 1851, repealed in 1852, re-enacted in 1853, and has continued in force ever since, amended from time to time as its weaknesses were exposed by experience. Since 1853 no abatement in the stringency of its provisions has been made. . . . The sale of liquor has fallen off more than two-thirds; more than one-half of the State is absolutely free from it; the corner groceries and taverns have gone forever; so, too, have all the evidences of poverty and suffering. The jails in the three counties adjoining Franklin, Oxford and Somerset, have been tenantless for more than a year, and I presume the same is true of several other counties. In my own city, Lewiston, of 18,000 inhabitants, and in Auburn, just across the river, of 10,000 more, not a hotel keeper or druggist or grocer sells a drop of liquor. Of course, with our large foreign population, liquor is sold in shanties and dens, but it is a precarious business, for our warfare against the seller is constant and vigorous.

When the law was enacted, I have no doubt two-thirds of the people were at heart opposed to it; now they could not be induced to repeal it. I know that all good citizens will join with me in the assertion that the law has been a wonderful success.

Reform News.

—The General Agent writes that a local interest is being carefully worked up by meetings in and about Syracuse.

—Bro. Kiggins is pushing the work in Indiana, and is working up a good enthusiasm. There should be a large representation from that State.

—Sister Hayden, of Harmon, Ill., spoke on a recent Sabbath in the Wesleyan church of that place, and made direct charges upon the grange and the other forms of secretism. Her plain words hurt a Masonic merchant of the place who talked and blustered about slander suits.

—Delegates are already on the move toward the National meeting. Father Linns Chittenden and wife called on their way a few days since. Rev. J. Travis passed the Sabbath with Bro. Terrill's church (Free Methodist), also on his way as representative of the Illinois Conference of the Free Methodist church.

Grant County, Ind., Organizes.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 15, 1874.

Leaving home on Saturday, the 2d, expecting to visit Grant, Shelby and Fountain counties before returning, I stopped over Sabbath and filled an appointment for Rev. David Holmes at Salem Chapel in the south-east corner of Noble county. I stayed over night with Bro. Perry, and on Monday took the train south, for Grant county via Ridgville. Arrived at Portland at 4 P. M., where I visited a number of the friends at that place and Liber. I found Bro. Jones as active as could be desired in keeping the subject "before the people." One of the first things I noticed upon entering his store, was the Cynosure lying on the show-case, where persons coming in may read it gratis. And I am glad to know that notwithstanding he is surrounded by Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers, and has had the manhood to "show his colors" on the right side, he is doing a good business. He keeps a large and full assortment of hardware, agricultural implements, etc., etc. Let the friends in Jay county show the world that a man need not forsake his principles to succeed in business, by sustaining Bro. Jones with their influence and patronage. Let the friends of our cause everywhere patronize men of this stamp. They are worthy of your patronage; they will be opposed, and are hindered in their business by the "ring" men. Let the world know that men of principle are needed everywhere,—syecphants and time-servers nowhere!

On Tuesday night I stayed with Bro. Milligan who now resides at Liber. One J. A. Henning, a Masonic M. D., has taken the Jay county "Anti's" in hand, and proposes to defend the ancient and honorable" institution against the "barbarians" and "profanes" who have ever dared to "resolve" that they would not recognize any Mason (i. e., any Freemason) as a minister of the Gospel. He "hauls them over the coals," in a column and a half article in the Portland Commercial, in a manner that, no doubt, satisfied himself of his own merit, and enables him to "read his title" to another degree quite clearly. Let the hero be "Knighted,"—but, hold! the fight is not over, and our hero may yet be unhorsed, or worse yet, put to "inglorious flight;" the "Anti's" have gladly taken up the discussion, and the readers of the Commercial will have the privilege of learning what Masonry pretends to be, and what it is.

On Thursday morning I took my leave of the dear friends at Liber, and arrived at Fairmount at four o'clock in the eve. Most of the friends at Fairmount were deeply interested in some trials which were then in progress in the court at Marion. Some parties had undertaken a "granger's store" at Fairmount, and the result was —bankruptcy! Involving not only the parties themselves, but their friends outside of the "ring," who, having confidence in them as men, assisted them with their means. Bros Daniel Thomas and Robert Bogue, (both Quakers and genuine Anti-masons) lost about two thousand dollars each in the affair! Grange stock is very low in that vicinity just now. Rather an amusing incident occured at the County Council of Patrons in Marion last week. Mr. A——, a citizen of Fairmount being in Marion during the session of the "Council" and desiring to see a man who was a member of said "Council," understanding that the pass w ord was "Adam," he presented himself at the door of the hall in which they meet, and after observing the peculiar "raps" on the door given by the members going in, he rapped in a similar manner. The door was opened and a man put out his head, holding his ear in a proper position to receive "the word;" Mr. A— whispered in his ear, "Adam!" The door opened. Mr. A—walked in and imagine their consternation when he said, "I am no granger. I only want to see Mr. 'So-and-So,' and thought I'd come in." Another man living near F— went into a grange at its regular meeting (on "Adam," the word, and "Farming" the explanation) and sat in it during its session,—"just to joke them," he said. Upon arriving at Fairmount I was directed to see Wm. Hall, (not the famous doctor of that name) but a United Brethren minister, who represented his county in the State Legislature during the war. I found him, and after consulting, arrangements were made for a lecture on Friday evening in the Wesleyan church.

Friday evening came and a good audience gathered in the meeting house and listened attentively to a discourse on the topic—"Secrecy may be right, but Secret Societies are wrong" After the lecture I went home with Bro. Jonathan Baldwin, who has a large heart, and lives in a large house. With his kind family I had a pleasant home during my stay at Fairmount. Bless the Lord for such dear good people! Saturday was spent in visiting and getting acquainted with some of the people. I urged the importance of organizing an association, and all agreed that it was just what they needed. On Saturday evening I spoke on "What makes the man a Freemason," to a large audience; and after the lecture a committee of five was appointed by the congregation to prepare a constitution and report on Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock. After meeting I had the pleasure of forming an acquaintance with Bro. Rector, a U. B. minister of Delaware Co., who is traveling a circuit near Fairmount, and who is also the Vice-President of the State Association for his county. He stayed with me at Bro. B—'s and on Sunday I preached for him at a church one and a half miles south of town, where arrangements were made for a lecture on Monday eve; at 3 o'clock I preached in the Wesleyan chapel in town, and in the evening spoke in the Friends church at Oak Ridge, four miles northwest. Here arrangements were made for another meeting on Wednesday.

Joseph Bennett, of Fairmount, spoke about fifteen minutes in conformation of what had been said, with great effect. He is a minister of the Wesleyan church, and was a member of the Masonic lodge in Jonesboro. He gave the name of a "Worshipful Master" of that lodge whom he had seen delivering moral charges and lectures when he was, to use his own words, "so soaking full of whiskey that his tongue was thick." He is regarded very highly in that vicinity, and his testimony seals the truth. On Monday evening we had a very pleasant meeting at the U. B. church above referred to.

On Tuesday eve., at 6, a goodly number of earnest men assembled to organize themselves into an anti-secrecy association. The lxxxiv Psalm was read, and all hearts and voices were raised in singing "Coronation," after which Bro. Hall lead in prayer. The writer was elected temporary chairman, and soon a good association, well officered, and with an excellent membership was organized. Steps were taken to call a county convention, in June, to place a ticket in the field.

On Wednesday I took my leave of Fairmount, Bro. Baldwin and wife taking their carriage and accompanying me to Oak Ridge, where I spoke on the grange to the satisfaction of some who have been bitten by the grange snake, and have left it in disgust.

After speaking, Mr. Arnet took me to the station, some seven miles, where at half past one in the morning, I took a train for this place, which (after changing cars at Bunker Hill, and waiting three hours,) I reached at 10 A. M. yesterday. I stopped with Mr. Bryce, near the depot, slept an hour, then ate dinner, and in company with Messrs. Bryce and Robinson, went up town to see what I had a glimpse of at the depot as I came in, a—well, you 're getting tired; I'll tell you what it was after supper. Till then, adieu.

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Prof. Blanchard at Utica, N. Y.

UTICA, N. Y., May, 19, 1874.

BRO. KELLOGG: As I am writing allow me to say that Professor C. A. Blanchard is with us. He delivered one of his best lectures in our church (Free Methodist) last evening to a good sized and very attentive congregation. We feel that he struck a blow for God that the kingdom of Satau felt, and yet it was done in the Spirit of Christ. God is with Bro. B. and I pray that he may be spared to the church and world for many years to scatter the light in the dark places. He goes to Ilion this evening. Yours fraternally,

J. B. FREELAND.

The Utica Herald gives a long and very good report of the lecture. The following extract contains the introductory part of the report:

"Last evening an Anti-masonic lecture was delivered in the Free Methodist church, by Professor C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Ill. The professor came into this State under the direction of the National Christian Association, a body whose alleged object is to combat Masonry. This association holds a convention in Syracuse, on the 2d, 3d and 4th of June next, and Professor Blanchard has been constituted a sort of avant courier to announce the principles of the body and arouse whatever sentiment can be excited in favor of its work preparatory to the convention in question. The church was passably full when the lecture of the evening began. The larger portion of the audience was composed of ladies. There were a few Masons, Odd-fellows and Knights of Pythias present. The lecturer was introduced at about 8 o'clock by Rev. J. B. Freeland, the pastor of the church. The lecture which he gave was sometimes eloquent, at all times extemporaneous, often close in logic and at times somewhat forcible in invectives. The speaker had evidently spent some considerable time in studying his subject and gaining all that was most favorable to his side of the argument. He seemed to the average hearer to be well posted in all the Masonic lore, although there were some present who claimed that he was not. The lecture consumed about an hour and a half of time, and was almost entirely an argument from a religious standing-point."

Correspondence.

Threats and Intimidation.

The following letters have been waiting for an appearance until perhaps, to some, their freshness will be nearly gone; but they will have better effect to be read in connection, showing the "Border Ruffian" spirit of the lodge. [Ed. Cynosure.]

BLACKBERRY STATION, Dec. 1, 1873.

Editor of the Cynosure:

Inclosed, I send you a note which I cut from the Kane County Republican, published at Geneva, Ill. Mr. Peterson showed me the letter to-day. It was written in red ink, and inclosed in an envelope with a black border. In the letter there was a picture of a coffin, and in the coffin was a human skeleton. Mr. Peterson is a Swede, a good mechanic and a worthy citizen. He is opposed to secret societies; hence this letter. Yours in opposition to secret societies, J. P. BARTLETT.

—The following letter was sent to Mr. John Peterson, of Geneva, as it appears, from some Masonic brother:

"Chamber of death. Blood! Blood! Blood! So mote it be. Grand revenging and dispatching and twice terrible Lodge of Hercules and Jupiter, and order of skull and cross bones.

This epistle being addressed to John Peterson, watchmaker, by the Grand Master and lifter of the goat's tail at the above terrible lodge existing under the old Masonic constitution as it was. So mote it be. Written in the blood of Morgan.

John Peterson: Sir! We hear that you, a watchmaker, residing in the town of Geneva, have been from time to time revealing secrets which pertain to our order, and have tried to influence away from us young men who were inwardly inclined to join us, the lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. Now we take pity on your forlorn and benighted family, have not taken any bloody measures against you. But henceforward beware! for if you do not stop right there, but continue your course of infidelity, we, as the dispatchers of skeptical unbelievers and revealers of hidden secrets, will tear your tongue out by the roots and bury you on the sands of the sea shore where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. Our secrets are not to be revealed. Rather let all the watchmakers in the northwest be buried forever in the boiling waters of the bottomless pit. So mote it be. So mote it be. So mote it be. The revenger comes when least expected. So mote it be. Thousands who were against us are now roasting in hell. Beware or you will join them. So mote it be. He who is not for us is against us. So sayeth the holy Scriptures. Beware. The wails of the dying unbelievers are borne on the wings of wind from the pit of death. So mote it be. John Peterson, of Geneya, is on the list of secret revealers, and this epistle is sent to him by the grand orders of Masons of the world. As it was to Morgan, so shall it be to him.

James Watson, Grand Executor.

This note is written with the blood of Morgan. Beware! So mote it be."

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—The following is an exact copy of an anonymous letter received by John Russel, a well known Anti-mason of Pine Grove. (His post-office address being Hammondville, Jefferson county, Ohio.) He sends it with a desire to have it published. He reserves the original, which can be seen by any one desiring it.

"Oct. the 24, 1873.

FRIEND J. RUSSELL.—As I thought it best to write to you to let you know what danger you stand in, as I, a Freemason, heard some of my brother Masons talk of putting you out of the way, I thought that I had better inform you so that you may be on the lookout. The reason that I give no name is that I don't want to be found out, remember this, and then you will thank me for it."

On the original one are some pictures such as pitchfork, house with stairs and other figures in it, and different other representations and below all these is written "Beware of these."

Sent by order of John Russel.

Editor Cynosure:

The following I have just cut from Carbondale Advance. It was written by the Rev. James W Raynor, Presbyterian minister of Uniondale, Susquehanna Co., Penn. He is sound on the anti-secrecy question.

Yours fraternally,

J. T. YARRINGTON.

Two or three days since I received a letter containing something so peculiar that I do not know to classify it exactly. If it were not for the fact that many better men than myself have been thus favored, I would be quite nonplussed. There is no writing in the letter, except one word. Instead of writing, there is the figure of a coffin, with skull and cross bones at the top, and the terrific word, BEWARE! in red ink at the bottom. The reason for my receiving this symbolic compliment is that I am opposed to secret orders, and express that opposition in public lectures. I wish to say that I shall continue to lecture as opportunity offers and my conscience dictates, without any fear from the Dagon of Oddfellowship, or the Baal of Freemasonry, or any other secret clan. One of these orders has tried intimidation, another of its moral and benevolent arts, very often; but all men will not quail or be silent before such works of darkness. I, for one, will not allow these secret orders to corrupt religion and advance their selfish ends without remonstrance. J. W. RAYNOR.

Temperance Orders.

YORK, Pa.

Editor Cynosure:

I have just ascertained that one of our largest liquor dealers rents his store from one of our Sons of Temperance.

Now, when we remember that the temperance orders are only Masonic Sunday Schools, and that Freemasonry originated in a rum hole, we can see how beautifully all things harmonize, and how true it is that "truth is stranger than fiction," especially when it is Anti-masonic.

Not long ago, I was informed that the Good Templar's lodge that once existed here, was a mere place for courting. And furthermore, it is reported on good authority, that some of the love-making was quite Masonic in style. It is true, however, that many of the members of this lodge were very respectable people. This was what put an end to it; when I scattered tracts and Cynosures that lit up the darkness like a great bonfire or an Atlantic light-house.

The temperance excitement has reached this quiet place at last, and the real temperance men and women are now moving without regalia, winks, nudges, or any childish monkey shines, which so delight those who have very small heads and very little in them. Reason is returning! "So mote it be."

From Williams County, O.

WEST UNITY, O.

The battle between the powers of darkness and of light is still increasing here. We have had three anti-secret lectures here since last fall, which served as checks to Masonry and Oddfellowship. I was told there have been no accessions to them since. I was also informed that the M. E. minister said he did not attend the lodge any more, for the reason that a great many people are opposed to secrecy and refuse to pay quarterage.

E. MILLER.

A Personal Letter.

MALLET Creek, O., May 8, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure:

Excuse me for troubling you with this article at the urgent solicitation of Bro. Stoddard, who assured me that for this once at least I should be heard and not, as usual, consigned to the waste paper basket.

While we are and have been radical of the radicals at home for forty years, we seem to be too conservative to be at all represented in our national organ, and did I not know that much the largest portion of our best Anti-masons in these parts fully agree with me in this particular, I should not trouble you farther.

Our conservatism, so far as we understand the Cynosure and ourselves, consists in holding and respecting the following declaration of principles:

1st. We believe our God is all wise, omnipotent, just and truthful, and no respecter of persons.

2d. That our only hope is in God, and to secure his blessing in reform movements we must respect the rights of our friends and opponents; that nothing is gained and much lost by being unjust to either.

3d. We believe there are different degrees of wickedness among Masons, and especially among secret societies; that Good-Templarism is not necessarily as wicked as Masonry.

4th. We believe since the Morgan excitement died out by common consent of Anti-masons, as well as by the design of adhering Masons, that a generation grew up that knew not Morgan, that knew not the evils of secret societies, under various pretexts, not necessarily criminal, were deceived, ensnared, blindfolded, and cable-towed and had notorious oaths and obligations crammed down their throats, that now see no way of honorable or safe escape, until those who are free create a public sentiment around them that will protect them against the vengeance of their cut-throat brethren and their long-eared "Jacks" who believe Herod ought to behead John the Baptist, because he had taken an oath to do it. Nay, verily, I believe we old Anti-masons are made guilty before God for suffering a generation to grow up in our midst thus ignorant. Let him that is without sin in this matter cast the first stone. I will not do it until kind, faithful, and persevering labor ceases to have effect. For the same reason, while I would not fellowship, as a Christian, with an intelligent adhering Mason, I dare not condemn entire churches because they have Judases in them, even if Judas does carry the day and serve on their committees. If the tares cannot be rooted out without destroying the wheat (except in extreme cases), both better grow together until harvest, than that we be sunk in the sea with a millstone tied to our neck.

5th. We believe it to be the policy of the devil if possible to turn all reformers aside upon false or side issues for the purpose of stirring up their enemies and disheartening their friends. In this particular we believe the Cynosure has been greatly at fault from the beginning. Though from a hasty reading, I think your issue of April 30th is an exception. We ought to let the devil know that our work cannot cease to come down to discuss the propriety of General Grant's smoking propensities and thereby incur the displeasure of the millions who worship General Grant as the saviour of our nation. If you wish to do a child good you must not abuse the mother, and if you wish to beard the old lion in his den and the cubs will keep quiet let them do so. Light Masonry as Masonry and other secret societies as such upon their own demerits. Do not impute the sins of the father to the children and the sins of the children to the father. When the harlot mother Masonry is dead there will be as little use for those minor secret societies to sprout Masonry in as there would be for Sabbath-schools were the church, Bible and Sabbath blotted out. Perhaps these notions are not sound, but we know them to be honestly entertained by many good Anti-masons. Possibly by meeting them with the candor in which they are presented may convince us of their unsoundness, but selling them to the rag-pickers leaves the impression on our minds that they are discarded because they are unanswerable.

Four years ago last fall, or early in the winter, the Cynosure published an article of mine setting forth that the Masons had decreed the political death of Senator Pomeroy on account of his Anti-masonic speech at Chicago. That article was dictated not by the spirit of prophesy but by the immutable laws of God's providence as revealed in his Word; for the purpose of intimating that as he had put his hand to the plow he could not retreat, but had much to lose and nothing to gain by looking back; which if he had heeded to-day he would have stood head, neck and shoulders above all his enemies.

Perhaps as that prediction has so literally been fulfilled it might be of interest to your readers to reproduce a portion of that article.

You will excuse my boldness and plainness; you claim to be the National organ of the Christian Anti-masons and I am an old Anti-mason and hope a Christian, and ask no one to be responsible for what I say. Yours truly,

SAMUEL HALE.

OUR MAIL.

A. C. Moffatt, Albion, Ia., writes:

"I am doing what I can for the cause. I am circulating the petition to the President against the Masons meddling with the Custom House building in Chicago. It stirs up the fraternity. People about here begin to look up the matter and sign the petition."

Wm. B. Gibson, Springfield, Iowa, writes:

"I sit down to rest this noon and conclude thus to send the Cynosure to [here follow subscribers' names]. . . . . I thought by doing this I might scatter a little Anti-masonic fire in several directions."

Henry Elder, Avery, Iowa, writes:

"I wish you God speed in your enterprise."

Joseph Wren, Sturgis, Mich., writes:

"I find many that say the Cynosure is on the right principle, but dare not take it for fear it will hurt their business. I shall keep trying as I have done ever since I took the paper. This makes five in two weeks, the first that I could get around this place; so I feel a little encouraged. I like the new paper very much."

We are encouraged also by your success.

Mrs. Ellen Hurst, Golden City, Col., writes:

" . . . I assure you it [the Cynosure] will be to me like the face of an old friend as I have been deprived of it for some time. . . . Some of our members [U. B.] here have joined the grange, and still remain in the church. I hope your paper will give some insight as to what the church is doing in other places in regard to this matter."

R. Powell, Clinton, Mich., writes:

"I wish to continue the paper. It is well edited and will operate like the barley cake in the Midian camp. I have been more than forty years in this war. . . . I drew up the plan of adjustment which in our great denomination (Baptist) at convention at Rome, New York, in Oct., 1832, which was adopted after two days and two evenings discussion by a committee of 32 able brethren, which settled the whole concern in our distracted churches. I am now an old man, nearly eighty-four years of age. My hearing and eyesight are failing. I shall patronize the Cynosure as long as I can read."

Wm. Atkinson, Saybrook, Ill., writes:

"My wife and I are very well pleased with the Cynosure, especially with its late improvement, and with the Christian spirit with which it is edited. I have belonged to the M. E. church over forty years, and never has the prospect been so dark to me as at present, for real spirituality in it, on account of Masonry and popularity. For most of our ministers and many of our members belong to secret orders. Our stationed minister is Worshipful Master and conducts the lodge here. For years we have been pained to hear none but Masons preach to us. We have been somewhat posted in Masonry since the murder of Wm. Morgan. We think it to be the crying evil of our church and country. My prayer is that God will bless the means now in use, and that the time is not far distant when the dreadful stain shall be wiped out of the nation and of the entire world."

Rev. Jas. Pixley, Hudson, Mich., writes, as postscript:

"I think that I will be able to get some more soon."

Such postscripts are to us very pleasant and encouraging.

Francis Semple, Esq., Ft. Madison, Ia., writes:

"Very many secretists in this county and I am suffering largely in my profession (the law) because of my publications, but will live through it I trust."

This battle is a severe one, but Masonry cannot stand against bold, faithful and intelligent opposition. Let all enemies of the evil works of darkness rally to the support of our picket guard who have given the alarm and a glorious victory will follow.

B. Fuller, Union Valley, N. Y., writes:

"I hope I shall be able to get more subscriptions before the Convention."

John F. Worley, Bowensburgh, Ill., writes:

"I am among many of these Masons and wish to obtain knowledge. I pray God to suppress the evil."

W. H. Smylie, Cadiz, O., writes:

"The grange is doing a good deal of harm here for the Cynosure, as they don't uphold an anti-secret paper."

Wm. Gilmore, Madrid, N. Y., writes:

"The Masons here say they have never taken any such oaths," as those in the Morgan book, and adds: "I would be glad to have you print the oaths they take now if you can. The third degree, Royal Arch and Knight Templar's."

These men have taken the oaths, substantially, as given in the Morgan book, (the Morgan book gives only three,) and in Bernard's Light on Masonry, (who gives the Royal Arch, Knight Templar's, etc.,) or they are not genuine Freemasons. One hundred Masons at the LeRoy Convention in New York, testified to the correctness of these revelations more than forty years ago; and multitudes of others have done so since. Fresh testimonies from seceding Masons as to their accuracy (truthful, honest men) come to our office every few weeks NOW. Some Masons put Bernard's Light on Masonry (secretly) into the hands of their brethren who are not well posted, for their instruction.

Emory Sprague, Hill House, O., writes:

"I am sure the grange movement will have a tendency to wake up the people with regard to secret societies generally."

S. Macy, Pleasant Plain, Ia., writes:

"I realize that God can make friends for his children as well as the devil can for his; and better ones too. I hope and pray that the Cynosure will be kept strictly upon Christian grounds, and that the contest will not terminate in the use of carnal weapons. The granges in this couutry seem to be rather on the decline. An elderly Quaker who had joined them told me he thought they would kill themselves, for they were ruuning into politics. Another one of the Friends said if they would leave off one half of the ceremony it would be stronger than it is. When they started in this section they made an effort with the merchants to furnish them goods at lower figures than to others who were not grangers. That soon played out, for most of them stood to the true position that one mau's money ought to buy as much as another man's. Another granger told me he threw his grange ticket upon the counter, told the merchant he might have that, for it had not profited him one cent. Thus we see that after giving it a trial, even in a small section of country coming under one's immediate observation, the grange, by the more thoughtful, is held in disrespect. The grange is beginning to look like the Irishman's toad that he found under an apple tree while picking apples. He held it up in full view by one leg and said he had found a pretty bird but all the feathers were picked off. A seceded Mason told me that a considerable portion of their meaus went for feasting. He had seen fifty dollars drawn out of the treasury at one time and used in that way. I know two Quaker brothers, middle aged men, one was a recorded minister, who joiued the Masons, both of them took to using liquor to excess and were expelled from the church."

Rev. Hosea Washburn, Madison, Me., writes:

"I have been a subscriber for the Morning Star more than forty years, and agent for the same. It used to be outspoken against Masonry, now it is whist and silent. So with all the papers. I think it seems as though the press was muzzled. I think if they will not come out publicly against Masonry and its kindred evils, I shall not patronize the paper after my subscription expires."

L. C. Gaskill, Newark Valley, N. Y., writes:

"I am not working for profit but principle."

Azel Kinney, Lima Center, Wis., writes:

"The new paper is a great improvement."

M. W. Jordan, Cortland, Ill., wrttes:

"Why not make an arrangement with some manufacturer of ready or self-binders, suitable for the Cynosure, and send them to subscribers at cost. They might be made so as to hold one or two volumes as they might wish; then many would preserve them that now do not."

If this binder is generally wanted we will see what we can do about it.

Jacob Rasor, Lockington, O., writes:

"It would do me much good if I could get one or two dozen subscribers. I live in hopes. God speed the good cause. It seems I can see the hand of God at work fully as plain as it did in the slavery question."

C. W. Howell, E. Constable, N. Y., writes:

"Some tell me it is a good cause, hope the Lord will prosper it, yet when we speak to them about money, they have none to spare. They seem to want the Lord to do all the work and furnish all the material. We are anxious to hear more about that murder. Our Masons tell us it is not so, got up for a sensation."

E. Beardslee, Sydney, N. Y., writes:

"I have got one new subscriber. . . . I have tried to get subscribers, but cannot for want of money. Some cattle are starving for want of something to eat. It takes all the money to buy feed."

Let those more favorably located send enough money to make up for what we miss from Sydney and similarly situated places.

Forty Years Ago.

The Genesee Consociation.

Extracts from the minutes of their session in Mendon, N. Y., on the 3d and 4th of June, 1828.

Whereas, the principles of speculative Freemasonry have been exposed to the world by a great number of members who have seceded from the fraternity, consisting of ministers of the Gospel and professing Christians of various denominations, and also of many persons of fair character, which show beyond all doubt, the extreme corruption of the institution in its ungodly perversion of the holy Scriptures: in its idolatry and blasphemy, by conferring degrees in the name of the Holy Trinity, and by personifying the great I AM in the burning bush, in its profane and horrible oaths, requiring the candidate to forswear himself contrary to the instruction of the Scriptures, and directly in opposition to the commands of Christ, who says, "Swear not at all," the violators of which oaths forfeit their lives according to the rules of the institution, which brand its members to commit enormous sins, even to secrete, defend and protect each other in their secular interests and iniquities in the violation of the laws of God and man; in its selfishness, by devoting its members to an alarming extent to defend the principles of the institution, however opposed to those of morality and religion, and by the inducements it holds out to ministers of the Gospel to become connected with the institution for the purpose of extending their influence contrary to the principles of the Gospel, which requires all men, especially ministers, to trust only in Almighty God. Therefore,

Resolved, that it is the duty of this body to commence a work of reformation—and that we ought to begin with the ministers in our connection, or with those who may apply for such connection, and who are required to set a suitable example—that the institution may no longer, as it hitherto has been in the estimation of many, sanctified and rendered popular by their presence and countenance, and that no persons may hereafter, as heretofore, place their confidence in its principles, as being of sufficient efficacy to redeem the soul, an opinion against which every minister ought to bear testimony.

Resolved, that the Consociation will neither lisense, ordain or install those who sustain any connection with the institution, or who will not disapprove and renounce it; nor will we give letters of recommendation in favor of such persons to preach in any of the churches in our connection.

Resolved, that the silence of religious papers on the subject of Masonry, ought no longer to be countenanced, inasmuch as the conductors of such papers are required, as all other Christians are, to put their trust in God for support, and not in Masonic patronage; and to exercise a full belief that the friends of the Redeemer will rally around his standard. If Sabbath breaking and drunkenness are subjects justly calling forth the animadversions of Christians and Christian presses, we cannot account for the fact that kidnapping, arson, murder, idolatry, and blasphemy should pass without censure.

LESSON XXIII.—JUNE 7, 1874.—THE SERPENT OF BRASS.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—NUM. XXI. 4-9.

Commit 4–9; Primary Verse, 8.

4 And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way of the Red Sea, to compass the land of Edom: and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way.

5. And the people spake against God, and against Moses, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness ? for there is no bread, neither is there any water : and our soul loatheth this light bread.

6. And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people ; and much people of Israel died.

7 Therefore the people came to Moses, and said, We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord, and against thee : pray unto the Lord that he take away the serpents from us. And Moses prayed for the people.

8 And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole : and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it shall live.

9 And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole ; and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up : that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—JOHN iii. 14, 15.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Where were the Israelites at the time of our last lesson? (ch. xx. 1.) What request did Moses send to the king of Edom? (ch. xx. 14–17.) What reply did Edom return ? (ch. xx. 18.) Who was Edom? (Gen. xxv. 30 ; xxvi. 1, 8.) What is the land called in Obad. 8, 9 ; Jer. xlix. 8, 10? The modern name is Idumea; originally it was Seir (Gen. xiv. 6 ; xxxvi. 20–22), which signifies dwellers in caves. Find the boundaries on the map. What brook separated Edom from Moab? What gulf is on the south ? The name of the capital is given Gen. xxxvi. 33, and the principal fortress, 2 Kings xiv. 7. It had two seaports (1 Kings ix. 26). Where was the next stopping place ? (ch. xx. 22.) What occurred there ? (ch. xx. 28.) How long did they remain? (ch. xx. 29.)

What is the first topic? Ask your teachers what kind of a road it was they traveled. What did they do? (verse 5.) Was it true that there was no bread? What did they say of the manna? The words light bread signify vile bread. What did they leave in Egypt that they wished for? (Num. xi. 5.) Can you think of any things they had in Egypt that they had now forgotton?

What is the second topic? These were God's answers to their murmurs. Do you ever murmur? What was the effect of the bite? What did the people say to Moses ?

What is the third topic? Did God answer the prayer? Did he grant the request? What did he provide ? How did the remedy resemble the plague ? Repeat the Golden Text. How does the brazen serpent resemble Jesus? What is the title of our home reading for Thursday? What must is in the 7th verse? What one in the 14th verse?

What is the fourth topic? How many things had any one to do to be healed? Were thy healed by looking at the bite? There was only one thing to do, only one way to do it, and only one time for doing it. If you had been bitten when would you have looked?

LESSONS. Jesus had been lifted up. The remedy is provided for all. Only those who look will live. Believing in him is looking ; it is the look of faith (John iii. 16, 36.) No one can look for another. We may point others to the remedy. Look and live.—National Sunday School Teacher.

Have a Purpose.

Teaching to my purpose is impossible, unless it is directed to some purpose. A definite aim is essential to serviceable method. This is well expressed in the following, from an essay by Edward Drury in the S. S. World:

Every lesson should have, to the teacher, a distinct and well-defined purpose. There should be some one truth or lesson intended to be fixed on the minds and hearts of the scholars. There may be many important secondary lessons drawn out and enforced during the course of the lesson, but there should be always one main purpose or end aimed at in every lesson. Without this there can be no true method at all; for method is neither more nor less than the way or path by which we seek to reach some desired end. But if no particular end is sought, how can there be a method or path to it? The first matter to determine in each lesson, then, is the main truth to be enforced. "Purpose is the first and main thing on which success depends." Unless there be this the plans must be vague, and indistinctly conceived by the teacher; and what is not clear to the teacher can never be made clear to the scholar.

Work and Pray.

Work and pray! The day is dawning,
Error's night flies fast away;
All the radiance of life's morning
Gleams and glistens on your way.

Work and pray with hand and spirit,
Scatter wide the gems of truth;
Let the coming years inherit
Something worthy of thy youth.

Work and pray! Thy work is ready,
Ever waiting for thy hands;
With a purpose firm and steady,
Scatter broadcast o'er the land.

Let the seeds be patience, duty,
Temperance and honest zeal;
These shall grow to perfect beauty,
These shall make thy deepest weal.

Sow thy seeds! The harvest given,
He who worketh over thee,
Made thee for an earnest liver,
And he claims thy due of thee.

Work and pray! Not sitting idly;
Let the years go on and on,
But with open hand fling wildly
Golden seeds ere all are gone.

Work and pray! We all must labor,
Weakly waiting will not do,
Will not heal a wounded neighbor,
That is work for me and you.

Work and pray with hands and spirit,
In life's spring-time fresh and free;
Sow thy seed and never fear it,
Harvest time shall surely be.

The Teachers' Class.

Every member of a Teachers' Class ought to be ready and willing to add at least a little to the interest and profit of the occasion. An article in the National S. S. Teacher puts the case in the following strong light:

Think of a week with no thought or study, or plan for the week of an hour that will tell in eternity. What a blank! Not much better those who think the Teachers' Meeting a kind of a Sabbath-school omnibus, where they take free rides and pick up information from the conversation of fellow-travelers. The standard of study for teachers ought to be so high, and some time will be, that he who comes to Teachers' Meeting to learn by absorption what he has not thought of before, will be considered as really dishonest as he who in any line of business furnishes no capital, but unhesitatingly claims a share of the profits. No one can be a successful teacher who does not give every day some reading or helpful study to the work.

Home and Health Hints.

Doing any kind of work about home quietly seems to make it easier. A slamming of oven doors, clatter of dishes, and kindred noises tire and bewilder all who hear them. The persons who accomplish the most and the best in anything—and the rule applies to housework—are usually the quiet workers.

BLACK WALNUT STAIN.—To impart to common pine the color and appearance of black walnut, the following composition may be used: One quarter of a pound of asphaltum, one half a pound of common beeswax to one gallon of turpentine. If found too thin, add beeswax; if too light in color, add asphaltum, though that must be done with caution, as a very little will make a great deal of difference in the shade, and black walnut is not what its name implies, but rather a rich dark brown. Varnishing is not essential, as the wax gives a good gloss.

BOIL YOUR MOLASSES.—When molasses is used in cooking, it is a very great improvement to boil and skim it. It takes out a raw taste and makes it almost as good as sugar. Where molasses is used much for cooking, it is well to prepare one or two gallons in this way at a time.

It is said that if castor oil is mixed with glycerine, and a few drops of oil of cinnamon added, the taste of the castor oil can scarcely be recognized.

It is stated that a lamp chimney put in cold water, and allowed to remain till the water boils, will not readily break.

Turpentine and alkanet root make a beautiful purple color for staining marble for fancy chimney pieces.

An exchange says: "If you don't want to put gauze over the guilt frames of your pictures this summer, and don't want the flies to speck them, boil three or four onions in a pint of water, then with a clean paint brush wash over your frames, and the flies will not light on them. No injury will result to the frames.

Asthma is sometimes cured with mixture of two ounces of the best honey and one ounce of castor oil. Take a teaspoonful night and morning.

Alum water is good for frosted feet. Bathe with it every night before going to bed. It will generally remove all pain and soreness in three or four days.

A simple cure for hoarseness is this: Take the whites of two eggs and beat them; add two spoonsful of white sugar; grate in a little nutmeg and then add a pint of lukewarm water. Stir well and drink often.

RAISED WAFFLES.—To make nice waffles, take one quart of wheat flour, stir into it sufficient lukewarm milk to make a thick batter. Add a tablespoonful of melted butter, a teaspoonful of salt, half a cup of yeast and two eggs well beaten. Stir it all together and let it stand until light. (If the waffles are for tea, they should be made soon after breakfast.) Bake in waffle-irons well greased and very hot. Turn the irons over each while baking, that the waffle may be browned on both sides. Bake until a nice brown—about five minutes.

Farm and Garden.

SUGGESTIONS TO FRUIT GROWERS.—Sometimes from well known causes, trees will split at the junction of their limbs down centrally, or limbs will commence to split off from the trunk. In such cases, make a hole with a bit or auger through the severed parts for an iron bolt of the size required to secure all needful strength to the parts and hold them in position; taking care to countersink the head and nut of the bolt in the wood, so as to allow the wood to grow over the same, to prevent evaporation of sap and consequent loss of vitality in the tree.

To destroy worms use strong soap suds, and apply with a "swab." To keep worms from ascending the tree, take wool finely carded into thin bats; if the tree is old, with rough bark, scrape the bark a little, or if there are scions in the tree, apply the bats tied with woolen yarn about two-thirds the distance from the top of the same, leaving the bat to double down. I first tried the wool-bats in 1833, and they proved a success, multitudes of the pests perishing under them on the tree-trunks. Last year I raised over 200 barrels of apples, and not more than one two-hundredth part of the fruit was worm-eaten or "stung," as was the case in too many orchards. —N. E. Homestead.

PERMANENT GRASS.—Water meadows are amongst the most productive of permanent grass lands. But the management of water meadows is very frequently injudicious. No cattle should be allowed upon an irrigated meadow, nor should the water be permitted to run continually over one spot. A meadow thus treated very soon becomes a morass, and is then spoiled. A dressing of bone dust is remarkably beneficial to water meadows, greatly thickening the grass and improving the quality of the hay. An application of plaster the next year still further improves the meadow. As soon as the hay becomes inferior in quality and decreases in quantity, it is restored by a repetition of this treatment. The opportunities for making water meadows are frequent, and as their value becomes appreciated they will become much more common than they are now.—American Agriculturalist.

A Wisconsin farmer, having tried to sell his place that the might go West, failed to do so, and finally concluded that he did not want to sell, for the following reasons: They had good roads, all the county improvements were made, churches were built, and first-rate schools in operation; the orchard bore abundantly, and there were neighbors who knew and trusted him. There are many other people rovingly inclined, who would do well to look at the case from this point of view.

It is estimated that the roots of a good crop of red clover, left in an acre of land after the removal of the crop, weigh from three to three and a half tons. The same examination gave the weight of an acre of rye roots at 3,500 pounds, and of wheat roots at 3,400 pounds.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, May 28, 1874.

LAST WORDS BEFORE GOING TO SYRACUSE.

Ho for the Anniversary! This is the last number which will reach our readers before we hope to meet a goodly number of them in Shakspeare Hall, Syracuse. We see them, in the kaleidoscope of fancy, even now. A large sprinkling of old white-headed veterans, to whom the dark conspiracy against our hopes, temporal and eternal, under the false name of Masonry, revealed itself in the days of Morgan. These venerable men have found that a political remedy is no cure for a religious evil. They saw the cause of God against this comprehensive work of darkness taken charge of by a political party, and after a few years, demoralized, run down, and run out. They have seen the deadly wound of this "Image" of the Popish Beast healed, and the dark, shadowy monster returned to more than its prestine power. And now that God is opening the eyes of Americans to see that Freemasonry is a false, anti-Christian religion of the last days; these old patriots and servants of God, with hearts swelling tears of gratitude to their eyes, come out like the prophets of all ages to utter their dying words of love and warning to their fellow-men.

Next to these I see some care-worn, toil-worn faces of men in middle life, who have looked to God in prayer till their faces shine like the face of Stephen in the council, "as an angel of God." These are angels of God to to their fellow-men. Men who have too well learned to trust in God to incur his displeasure by trusting in man.

Beside and along with these the bright, calm, clear faces of women, like those who followed Christ from Gallilee, when as yet there was no Christianity, nothing but Christ, to follow.

And then come, like the young Elisha, a troop of young men to pour water on the hands of God's aged prophets for a little while, before they ascend to heaven by whirlwinds of flame. Earnest, eloquent, clear-eyed and clear-hearted, kings and their armies shall yet hear and heed them, as they heard and heeded Elisha of old.

Let us go up to this meeting, brethren, conscious that Christ alone is mightier than Satan; stronger than the "strong man armed;" and he alone can give us power over "the rulers of the darkness of this world" with whom we restle. Let us pray before we start, and on the way, and continually, for the Committee and people of Syracuse, that God will preserve the health of those over-labored men.

Read the nineteenth chapter of Acts. Let us seek such a work as that in Ephesus, when Paul preached a gospel which brought men out of the devil-worships and "curious arts" of that day, and burned their books to the cost of "fifty thousand pieces of silver!" Revivals of religion which do not exclude Freemasonry are superficial. They may save the ignorant and uninformed, but they leave the worship of Satan mixed with the worship of Christ. Pray, brethren, pray for the Syracuse meeting.

TROUBLE IN THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A pamphlet letter has been sent us, written by Rev. G. D. Matthews, of New York, to the Moderator of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, relating to some personal and Presbyterial matters with which the Cynosure has no concern, as we never meddle with denominational difficulties further than to regret there should be any in so good a church as the United Presbyterian. The statement is made in said letter, however, that several members (whose names are given) of the Jane Street Church, New York, are known Freemasons; and that "Freemasons have been freely admitted to the membership of this congregation."

If this be so, the fact is a clear and explicit violation of the Book of Discipline of that church; and our advice to those respected brethren who guide the action of their Assembly is the solemn appointment of a day of fasting and prayer for the purification of their church from the sin of secretism. Mere injunctions to lower church courts to remove the scandal will never accomplish it. Freemasons, like the slave-holders formerly, will always throng to the holiest and best church which will receive them. A Friend Quaker astonished me by the information, that "the lodge has been snaking its way into Friends' Meetings." And if such communions are not purified the accursed leaven will soon "leaven their whole lump."

THE SWING TRIAL ENDED.

As was expected, this trial has ended in the acquittal of Prof. Swing. The vote is reported forty-six for clearing, and thirteen for condemning him, on charges of heretical teaching and ministerial unfaithfulness. The papers contain also his notice of withdrawal from Presbytery. Dr. R. W. Patterson made a long and labored speech in vindication of Professor Swing. This Dr. Patterson, now Professor in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Chicago, was once so strait-laced a doctrinarian that he declared his College President, Sturtevant, of Illinois College, to be unsound in the faith. He was also an early and ultra abolitionist, in favor not only of abolishing slavery but of running off fugitive slaves. But, having taken charge of a popular church in Chicago which was anti-abolition, soon after the Fillmore bill became a law, imprisoning a man six months and fining him $1,000 for refusing to catch and return escaping slaves to their masters, and when the Mayor and Council of Chicago had resolved that their constabulary should not enforce a law so infamously inhuman, Dr. (then Rev. Mr.) Patterson preached in favor of obeying the laws, and on the sin of not submitting to "the powers that be"! His discourse so pleased Alfred Dutch of the old Whig conservative Journal, that he published a considerable part of the sermon which may be found in the Journal files of that day. Henry Ward Beecher and Robert Ingersoll, of Peoria, are also admirers of Prof. Swing.

The Cynosure has taken very little interest in this trial, believing that no one would be made better by it, no error corrected, no sin rebuked, or reform achieved, which surely could not be said of the debates when Paul, at Ephesus, "disputed in the school of one Tyrannus." "So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed." Paul had a definite end in view, viz., to displace false worship, and establish the true. This he achieved. What Prof. Swing wishes to teach we cannot learn. His writings, so far as examined, "take the mind nowhere and land it upon nothing." We fear the whole commotion is sinking the churches of Christ with reflecting, penitent men.

SCYLLA AND CHARYBDIS.

It is a grave question for the church, not the man. David Swing will be a living influence, whether he be called a Presbyterian or not; but Presbyterianism may well pause to ask if it can afford to lose so much life-blood from the deep heart of Christ as wells out in the work and words of such a man. The Congregational church, these many years, has had within its domain a greater heretic than even Prof. Swing, but it has wisely left him undisturbed. The council that recently considered his church's infraction of Congregational polity prudently refrained from discipline. Henry Ward Beecher may continue to contravene and set aside dogmas and systems with royal audacity; Congregationalists know that he is their crown and glory, and dare not disown him. The martinets of theology have nothing to do with Catholic souls like his and David Swing's.—Springfield Republican.

"Liberalism" or belief of nothing in particular, and the fag-endism of orthodoxy are two extremes of error with no midland of truth. Like unbelief and superstition they produce each other. If a man does not believe himself vitiated and depraved, how can he seek to be "born again," as Christ insisted to Nicodemus, men must? If he does not believe Christ can save him, why should he apply to him? If there be no hell, how can he believe in heaven, which rests on the same style of Scriptural utterance? Doctrines mean truth; and if there be no truth, pray what is a lie? Truth applied and received saves and sanctifies; but though I have studied cause and effect in the religious world with some care, for the last forty years, I never knew one man repent or reform under what is lauded as liberalism, and as to such men and ideas, as the above paragraph gives us, being anybody's "crown and glory," there is in such talk no religion and little sense.

SHALL MASONS BE RECEIVED WITHOUT QUESTION TO THE CHURCH?

Some of our churches and ministers, who have opposed Masonry as anti-Christian in its theory and tendency, under the impression that when a man was once wedded to the order he was lost to the church and his conversion and salvation was well-nigh hopeless, seem to have gained new light on this subject and have come to regard Masonry as at least no obstacle to a man's conversion; and they seem almost ready to admit its claim to being the handmaid of religion and a co-worker with the church of Christ. And so when a Mason asks admission to the church they promptly receive him asking no questions for conscience' sake.

Well, we believe Freemasons can be converted, and so can infidels, and every other class of idolaters and sinners of every name and degree; for the grace of God, like his nature, is infinite and he gave his Son for us that "whosoever will, may come" to him, and "whosoever cometh to him shall in no wise be cast out." He is not a physician who expends his skill upon the whole, or the slightly diseased, but upon the sick; and hastens to the sickest first, and his skill is most illustrated by the cure of the most desperate cases. Our Saviour is most glorified by saving the very chief sinners, those whom Satan has bound most securely and with his strongest chains. But when he saves a man, he saves him from his sins. If he was before an idolater, when saved he forsakes idolatry and keeps himself from idols. If he was adicted to profaneness, Sabbath breaking, tippling, lewdness, cheating, lying, stealing, quarreling, all these works of the flesh give place to the opposite virtues, the fruits of the Spirit, and thus old things pass away and all things, morally and spiritually, become new.

The mere profession of conversion, the mere joining of the church, determines nothing; but a new creature, the denying of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and the life of soberness, righteousness, godliness, after the pattern of the meek and self-denying love and lowliness of Christ. They who are thus brought from sin to holiness are saved, and if not thus turned from sin to holiness, men are not saved; profess what they may, hope what they may, they are not saved at all. Now, if the many Freemasons that have lately professed conversion are really turned from sin to God, it is well. They will be found to have been converted from Masonry to Christianity. If they are not converted from Masonry, either Masonry is not anti-Christian, or these men are not soundly or truly converted to Christianity.

To infer from the fact that Freemasons are willing to unite with the church that makes no objections to their Freemasonry, that Freemasonry is not evil, but is what it professes to be, viz., benevolent and religious in the true sense of those words, in fact the handmaid of Christianity—to infer this is surely to fall into a very grave mistake and at the same time a most inexcusably stupid one. A mistake that savors more of a desire to make proselytes to a sect, than to make converts to righteousness. A mistake that is likely to be followed by the most serious and deplorable consequences.

The Jewish priest had no difficulty in persuading the Samaritan colonists to adopt the rites of the Jewish worship when they allowed them at the same time to continue those of their own idolatry. "They feared the Lord and served their own gods." They accepted the Jewish worship because they were afflicted, and their own gods gave them no rest or security against the lions sent of God to punish them for their wickedness; and they continued their idolatries, for that was needful for their popularity. What was the result of this mixture of religions? Were these idolaters made Jews? Was their Jewish worship accepted? Manifestly neither. The idolatrous worship was not supplanted or purified, but the Jewish was degraded and defiled. Their idols had the post of honor and the priests of the Jewish rites were selected from the lowest classes. So far as the outward rites of worship were concerned they served both their idols and the God of Israel. But morally the heathen law which required them to burn their children in fire to Adrammelech was kept, while they "feared not the Lord nor did after the law and commandments, which the law commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel." And this delusive, hybrid religion continued for ages. (See 2 Kings xvii. 27–41.)

The Jesuits converted whole nations to nominal Christianity by simply leaving their idolatry alone, not requiring them to renounce and forsake it; but rather adopting and mingling with their Christianity their most cherished superstitions and ritual abominations. The result was, heathenism was not Christianized; but Christianity was heathenized.

You can induce slaveholders or rumsellers to come into the church if you say nothing against slaveholding or rumselling; and so you can any class of unsanctified worldlings if you demand no renunciation of the particular form of sensuality or selfishness in which their carnal mind finds especial gratification. Just allow men to get the idea that practically they can serve God and mammon; can serve God and retain their darling sins, their covetousness and pride, their sensual indulgences and vain amusements and wicked companionship, and you can fill your church with sinners of every variety. You can draw in whole communities as the Papists and other formalists do. But in so doing you have not brought the community up to the standard of holiness which makes the church the salt of the earth; but you have sunk the church to the Dead Sea level of the world that lieth in wickedness; whereby the salt loses its saltness and is profitable for nothing, not even for the dunghill. The more extensive your conquests made by this principle of cowardly compromise the more disastrous your defeat and subjugation, the better is Satan pleased with your success. Such conquests of the church are to him what the wooden horse was to the Greeks at Troy. By them he dupes the soldiers and citizens of Zion to tear away their own defenses, and weary themselves with drawing his own armed legions into the very citadel of the fortress he seeks to sack, and knows he can never take by open assault. Entreat all ministers and church members to consider carefully whether they can receive into their fellowship an adhering Mason without question or protest, and not thereby give their sanction to the institution, to the order, and throw open their church door to the whole fraternity, and to every sect of errorists and idolaters as well. Will not such reception of one Mason be sufficient to silence discussion and prayer on the subject and debar all testimony of the church against any and every secret association however corrupt? Will it not render the church a free recruiting ground for the lodges, and be tantamount to a license to their proselyters to enter it, and a permission to all your members to join the lodges?

Will it be said, Masons may be Christians and not be enlightened as to the sin of Freemasonry? That in similar ignorance, slaveholders and rumsellers have in past times been received into the church and proved themselves worthy members? Yes; but was it right for them or the church to be thus ignorant? And can such ignorance be pleaded now for Masonry? Is it not clear as day light that Masonry is but one of the numerous sects of idolatry which worship a god or Baal in clear and designed contradistinction from the Christian's God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost? Can we receive slaveholders, or dramsellers, or those who intentionally ignore Christ in their worship as Masons do, and not incur the rebuke of Smyrna for retaining those in their fellowship who held the doctrine of Baalam and of the Nicolaitanes; or the rebuke of Thyatira for suffering the teaching of Jezebel, who taught the disciples to explore the "depths of Satan" (heathen mysteries) "and eat things sacrificed to idols?" O brethren, search these things to the bottom and forget not that our Lord is he that walks in the midst of the golden candlesticks and searches the reins and the hearts, and will by his fearful frown make all the churches know his hatred of all false charity and fellowshiping of the doctrines and practices of all false and merely deistical worships.

A FARMER'S PAPER that we can endorse as an agricultural journal is the American Farmer's Advocate, the organ of the National Agricultural Congress, formerly published at Nashville, Tenn., but now at Indianapolis, Ind.; monthly, $1.00 a year, or 75 cts. in clubs of four. This journal contains much valuable information about crops not published West, and is true to the farmer's interests on the grange question. Other farmer's journals which have come under our observation are faithful only to the pockets of their publishers; will cry up the grange or the railroad, whichever will best conserve that interest. Send ten cents for the May number of the paper and satisfy yourselves. This is its creed:

"Will demand the abolition of secrecy in whatever effects our commercial or political interests, whether as contributing to the creed of monopolists or favoring the schemes of the politicians, as utterly antagonistic to American principles. Although earnestly advocating open co-operative associations. it will give no countenance to the secret grange, nor to other secret industrial societies. Its motto is free speech and full discussion, believing that the education of the people is by that means most effectively promoted."

NOTES.

—The report of the Ohio State meeting came too late for this issue. Six delegates were appointed to Syracuse. The next meeting is to be held at Darby Chapel, Union Co., Aug. 4th, next. Rev. Michael Long was chairman.

—The venerable Dr. Mc Laren of the United Presbyterian church, Geneva, N. Y., has sent an expression of his views, called out by the remarks of the Evangelical Repository of last month. The letter, on the twelfth page of this paper, will be read with interest.

—In addition to the names of eminent speakers who will probably attend the National Anniversary must be mentioned Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, Rev. C. C. Creegon, of Oberlin, and Rev. D. McAllister, Secretary of the National Reform Association to secure the Religious Amendment.

—R. T. Cross, well known to our readers as former principal of the Academic department at Oberlin, sends the following incident to the New York witness: "About two years ago I met a 'high' Mason, who was editor of a Masonic paper and also a temperance lecturer. He told me that in a certain lodge in New York city he had had a long struggle before liquor could be banished from the lodge-room."

—Indiana Odd-fellows were in Grand Lodge assembled last week. Its treasury had an interesting exhibit of economical charity. The reports show an effective total number of contributing members of 23,190, an increase of 520. Resources of the lodges, $919,858.73. Expended for relief and charity, $35,558.76. There was the sum of $2,337.63 on hand in the Treasury of the Grand Lodge, with assets amounting to $7,225.43. The Grand Lodge Hall fund amounts to $240,660. Now putting together the resources of the different lodges and of the Grand Lodge and we have over $1,170,000; on which sum poor Charity—blushing at the mention of her name—gets THREE PER CENT. Those who are compelled to beneficence by the usages of society and to keep up social standing should join the Indiana Odd-fellows and be no more troubled with the approaches of impecunious benevolence.

—The medi ation of the General Agent has secured considerable space in the correspondence department for Bro. Samuel Hale, who thinks the Cynosure differs somewhat from his principles. The judgment of our readers can quickly decide how great is the variation in the first four propositions; it is not enough to mention, if we accept that Bro. Hale has some tenderness for the temperance "orders," and perhaps the granges. As for the fifth, the reason mentioned by Bro. Hale is enough to condemn any Christian if he did not as God gave opportunity speak against the known evil habits of Pres. Grant. If we believed the "millions" had a fair chance for improvement by "worshiping" him there might be less said. We seldom look for relief to the waste basket unless overworked by correspondents who do not trouble themselves to know whether their manuscript is legible or not. This is a general remark, and will probably answer the queries of others as to the non-appearance of their contributions. Very long or illegible articles have little welcome in any newspaper, most editors reject them without reading. But the Cynosure possesses largely the virtue of patience, and every one who has a word for the cause and puts it in understandable language will receive thanks and due attention.

Masonry in Scotland.

Read the following clipped from a Glasgow paper, and see how the lodge is everywhere defeating and destroying civil government. See how a Scotch sheriff winces and dodges the question of the impudent claim that lodge-law is paramount to the law of the State, even in those old governments. ED. CYN.

IMPORTANT TO FREEMASONS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.—In the Sheriff Court on Monday (Sheriff Murray's Chambers,) an action was tried at the instance of John Dorman against Peter Campbell, for damages on the ground of slander; and during the proof a question arose of paramount importance to the Freemason fraternity. It would appear that both litigants are Freemasons, and that the alleged slander took place in the Masonic Lodge Neptune, Glasgow. The defender, while under examination as a witness, was asked whether or not in open lodge he had made certain slanderous statements against pursuer, whereupon he declined to answer, and gave as a reason for so doing that in respect all Masons were bound by an oath never to disclose what was said or done in a tyled lodge, he was not bound to answer the question, and protested against being called upon to answer it. Mr. Wm B. Patterson, who acted as procurator for the pursuer, replied that such an objection was wholly futile, because, in certain matters, no such obligation existed in Masonic lodges; that the subject matter of this dispute did not fall within the category of Freemasonry; and that every person was bound to give evidence in a court of justice for the ends of justice, notwithstanding the principles of Freemason societies, and that were the objection to be sustained, the result would be a perversion of justice, and even did such oath and obligation exist it was an immoral contract, and in a question of evidence with a court of justice it was pactum illicitum. After some discussion, the Sheriff ordained defender to answer the question, reserving for a future stage the effect of the objection.—Wm. B. Patterson, procurator for the pursuer. Thomas Brown, procurator for defender.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE GALAXY for June has interesting articles on the world renowned French Academy, a continuation of Gen. Custer's sketches of army life on the plains, and of Petersen's Scandinavia. Richard Grant White has departed from his accustomed linguistic criticism and gives his views of Wagner and his music. The number has a good scientific department but is weakened by an unusual number of stories.

THE SANITARIAN presents the cremation question in probably its best arguments in a paper from Dr. Bayles, of New York, and oddly, another on "Prospect Park, Brooklyn" is largely given to the same subject. Sanitary drainage and school ventilation have contributions. The editor's table works with an edition of "political" arithmetic; thus: Chicago with an estimated population of 360,000 and 111 deaths per week is given a death rate of 32 per 1000, while Baltimore with a population of 284,000 and 132 deaths per week is put down with a rate of 21.20.

The Home Circle.

The Morning Cometh.

Ho! watchman, standing on thy tower,
As years sweep onward in their flight,
What signs in heaven attract thy sight,
Predictive of the coming hour,
When earth shall see the reign of Right?
What of the night? What of the night?
And pointing to the dim gray light
Just struggling up the Eastern sky,
A promise and a prophecy
That day shall chase the dark that gloometh
O'er heaven to hide it from our eye,
The watchman saith, "The morning cometh!"
And angels sing, "The morning cometh!"
And earth repeats, "The morning cometh!"
And "God be thanked!" our heart's reply.

"I am Now Ready."

How morally grand Paul appears, as he uttered these words. He was in a Roman prison, looking through the grated window at the morning sun, that would light his steps to martyrdom, with these words of triumph and exultation upon his lips. The apostle old in years and worn with toils in the service of Jesus, with no regrets for the past and no fears for the future, now looks calmly in the face of coming judgment, and hails with transport the crown of martyrdom.

It is a great thing, in the presence of death, and at the gate of eternity, for a poor, sinful, mortal man to feel and to say, as Paul—I am ready! And no man can say it honestly who is not standing on the Rock of Ages, and who has not Christ in him, the hope of glory. It was because Paul could say—"To me to live is Christ," that he could add," and to die is gain;" it was because he was in Christ and had kept the faith, that he could exclaim with such an air of triumph, "I am now ready to be offered."

See how different it is with men who enter the shadow of death without Jesus. How sad and melancholy the confession of the great poet of Germany, as the lights of time were going out—"I have scarcely tasted twenty-four hours of happiness during my long and unhappy life." How unutterably sad in the gathering shadows of the last night was that sigh of the great poet, for light! Listen again to England's most gifted bard, whose poetry has charmed the world; listen to the sad music of his gloomy and desolate soul, in these memorial lines which sound like the plaintive moans of a broken heart:

"Ay, bnt to die, and go alas!
Where all have gone, and all must go;
To be the nothing that I was
Ere born to life and living woe—
Count o'er the woes these hours have seen,
Count o'er the days from angnish free,
And know, whatever thou hast been,
'Tis something better not to be."

How mournful such utterances in the last great hour of trial! How fearful then, like Mirabeau, the French infidel, to plead for opium to deaden conscience, and drive away the terrible phantoms that haunted the visions of coming doom.

What a contrast to such scenes and utterances is Paul, old, toil-worn, and alone in his Roman prison, in the gathering twilight, reviewing the past, catching glimpses of the future, and with a serene hope and quiet exultation, exclaiming—"I am now ready!" And then Paul was no sentimentalist or mystic dreamer, but the most sober and practical of men; no mere theorist sending out his thoughts from that gloomy seclusion into fine speculations and poetical fancies about the future life. No, he was the most sober and philosophical of men, and what he says is but the outgushing of his real experience and honest convictions. He was there in prison, and knew that his departure was at hand, and in the light of mercy and of hope, he felt that,

"Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal."

It was the life, spent in faith and service of Jesus, and the life to come; the light of memory and hope, meeting and commingling in that parting hour, that gave such a joy and triumph to his words—I am ready.

It is easy to talk and speculate about even great events, when afar off, even the fearful enjoy the sig htof a thunderstorm, when in the distant sky. But when the storm-cloud is over us, and opens, and the hot, withering bolt rives the air, and the very heavens seem to recoil and stagger back at the awful explosion, the stoutest heart trembles. So persons, when young, or in robust health, may speculate and even speak lightly of death, as some undefined, remote event of the future; but when the shadows of the last night are falling, and the solemn hour of departure is at hand, O, then, how different will the final hour appear! Who does not feel what a great and blessed thing it will be then, to say like Paul —I am now ready!

Let us seek to follow Paul, as he followed Christ, and then our end will be like his. We must fight the good fight of faith. We must run the race set before us, and finish our course; it may not run through the wild desert, over the stormy seas, and through gloomy prisons. No, our course may lie along the places of business, through these noisy streets or quiet homes, through wearisome days and sleepless nights of affliction; but whatever in the Divine appointment it may be, it is the race set before us and we must run it, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. Then, like Paul, we shall meet our departing hour, with his calm, sublime utterance, I am now ready!

Who can look at the end of such a noble Christian life, without some quickening of the soul, some kindling aspiration to be like Paul in our devotion to Christ; like him, in that calm, peaceful assurance expressed in those parting and immortal words—I am now ready!

"Awake my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on,
A heavenly race demands thy zeal,
And an immortal crown."

Half-Veiled Blasphemies.

What have been very appropriately termed "half-veiled blasphemies" are very common in social circles, which would be shocked beyond measure by blasphemies unveiled. They serve not only as the tutors to our boys in the street, who learn to swear these seemingly fangless oaths before they give forth the full-venomed ones. They are also common in refined society, and find even in Christians apologists and defenders.

Yet there is scarcely one that cannot be traced directly back to the full oath as its progenitor. They are descendants of oaths, the outlet of minds too timid, too cultured, or too conscientious to swear big oaths; 'twere a pity they were not sufficiently timid, cultured, or conscientious not to swear at all.

The young lady who exclaims in a shrill tone of amazement, "Mercy on me!" is probably entirely unconscious of the fact that she is swearing. But if she were to round out her sentence to its full, she would find it to be, "May God have mercy on me," the common form of appeal to God in the ancient and solemn form of oath. The father who pinches his finger in the door, and cries, "Confound it!" is probably equally unconscious of his oath. But his completed objurgation would be, "May God confound it," a circumlocution for a form of oath common enough, but one which he would be unspeakably shocked to hear uttered in his household. The good old grandmother, who would never forgive us if we accused her of swearing, utters many times a week the exclamation, "La sakes!" never once thinking that the meaning of the words is, "For the Lord's sake."

We are aware these utterers of half-veiled blasphemies do not mean what they say. Neither do the more overt swearers. If this excuse will avail for the one, it will also exculpate the other. But both disregard, if not the Third Commandment, certainly the precept of Him who bids us "Swear not at all;" but let our conversation be yea, yea; since whatsoever is more than this, "cometh of evil."—Am. Messenger.

Calico as a Religious Element.

"I can't go to church because I have nothing fit to wear." How often is this remark made, and how often is it true? In the city one may slip into back pews or sit unnoticed in the gallery if their attire be poor, but in villages and in the country, where everybody knows everybody, dress becomes a matter of prime importance. For many a woman the entire service is spoiled because she is conscious that her bonnet is old-fashioned, or her frock is out of vogue, or her cloak worn, and while she remembers what an element is dress in the summing up of character among her sex, she forgets that all souls are alike naked before God. For such an one doubtless "closet" worship is far more profitable than sanctuary devotion; and yet it should be so in our churches that the humblest and highest could feel equal freedom in worshiping with the great congregation.

Sometimes the sermon grows dull or we grow tired of following the clue; we study the dress of the congregation and are sad at evidences of pitiful contrivance to keep up a "genteel appearance" on the part of many whom we know to be poor. A flimsy fabric showily trimmed; the remains of one good dress eked out with ruffles or folds from another; a hat "done over" in the latest fashion; these are multiplied evidences of ingenuity and industry at every point in getting up a church toilet, have led us to believe that plainness of dress on the part of the rich would be genuine Christian charity to the poor.

There are those in every church who, by reason of their wealth or position, exercise a commanding influence upon all that come in immediate or indirect contact with them. Plainness of apparel at church and simplicity of manner in such individuals will prove an efficient aid to an earnest and zealous minister who cares for souls. We have read of a certain metropolitan church, the female members of which held a meeting and resolved to wear only calico at the Sunday services. Perhaps no movement would be more effective than this in bringing to the sanctuary vast numbers of careworn faces and bent forms now rarely seen within the sacred portals. Almost every woman can afford a new calico dress, and if this were deemed good enough to wear at meeting how many pinched lives would be gladdened, how many hearts repressed by "chill penury" would be rejoiced, how many empty seats in our churches would be filled. We commend to our readers who can afford silks and satins reflections upon the subject of calico as a religious element.—N. Y. Tribune.

Consequences.

In a country town many years ago, some children were met for a social evening at an old farm house, and while the sport was at its height, a little boy thought it would be "funny" to draw a chair from under a little girl and let her sit down on the floor.

He watched his opportunity and made the attempt, but the little girl seeing what he was doing, jumped back into the chair, and striking her spine upon one of its projections, broke her back. For seven years, from fourteen to twenty-one, she lay upon her bed and during all that time was carried from her chamber to the parlor but once. Thirty years have passed. I have just returned from a visit to her sick chamber. Thirty years of disability and pain as the consequence of a thoughtless deed by a little boy. A few strangers minister to her daily wants, without whose aid she would be sent to the "poor house" or home for the wretched and homeless poor. Terrible consequences to follow a thoughtless act. Let boys be careful. Let all remember that consequences walk hand in hand with every deed, and that "for all our deeds God will bring us into judgment."—Christian Era.

About Idleness.

Many young people think an idle life must be pleasant; but there are none who enjoy life so little, and are such burdens to themselves, as those who have nothing to do. Those who are obliged to work hard all day, enjoy their short periods of rest and recreation so much that they are apt to think if their whole lives were spent in rest and recreation, it would be the most pleasant of all. But this is a sad mistake, as they would soon find out if they made a trial of the life they think so agreeable. One who is never busy never enjoys rest. for rest implies a relief from previous labors; and if our whole time were spent in amusing ourselves, we should find it more wearisome than the hardest day's work. Recreation is only valuable as it unbends us; the idle can know nothing of it. Many people leave off business and settle down to a life of enjoyment; but they generally find that they are not nearly so happy as they were before, and they are often glad to return to their old occupations to escape the miseries of indolence.—Herald of Health.

A Sweet Heart-sin.—Let me step into your heart, sir, and peep upon its furnature. My hands are pretty honest, you may trust me; and nothing will be found, I fear, to tempt a man to be a thief. Well, to be sure, what a filthy closet is here! Never swept, for certain, since you were christened. And what a fat idol stands skulking in the corner! A sweet heart-sin, I warrant it. How it simpers, and seems as pleasant as a right eye. Can you find a will to part with it, or strength to pluck it out? And supposing you a match for this self-denial, can you so command your heart as to hate the sin you do forsake? This is certainly required. Truth is called for in the inward parts. God will have sin not only cast aside, but cast away with abhorrence. So he speaks, "Ye that love the Lord hate evil."—John Berridge.

Faithful unto the End.—Richard Baxter, after he had spent many years in the advancement of the glory of God, by laborious and constant preaching, unceasing pastoral labors, and numerous publications from the press, was yet unwilling to give himself ease, even amidst the infirmities of disease and age. An old gentleman who heard him preach related that when he ascended the pulpit, with a man following him to prevent his falling backwards, and to support him if needful in the pulpit, many persons would be ready to say he was more fit for a coffin than for labor; but all this he would soon forget, and manifest the fervor and energy of youth in his labors. It was feared, the last time he preached, that he would have died in the pulpit. And yet such was his humility, that when reminded of his labors on his death-bed, he replied, "I was but a pen in God's hand, and what praise is due to a pen?"

Asking the Blessing.—When the late Admiral Foote was in Siam, he invited the royal dignitaries to a dinner on his vessel. As they sat down to the meal, the Admiral, as was his custom, asked a blessing. The king in surprise, said that he thought that only missionaries did that. "True," was the brave hero's reply, "but every Christian is a missionary."

Dr. Chalmers had just seen an unconverted guest to his room and returned to his family, when a fall was heard in the bed-room; he returned and found his guest a corpse. In the presence of his family he explained how differently his conversation would have been that evening had he known how near his friend was to eternity.

English Children.

The new born English aristocrat receives, as soon as born, a little bed with a hard mattrass. From its earliest age it is taken, warmly wrapt, into the fresh air. After the first year its meals are reduced to three, and this rule is so unchangeable that no child thinks of requiring anything more; and from this time its food is of rich milk, and bread and butter, and good meat. After breakfast, it remains several hours in the open air, and then sleeps. The whole afternoon is passed outside. From earliest childhood the children of the aristocracy wear short sleeves, and often the knee is left bare, though the extremities are clothed in the warmest manner. At five years of age they begin to dance. Never are English children entrusted to the care of a young nursery-maid, but to an elderly experienced person, under whose direction they constantly are. As soon as the young girl goes to school, the carriage of the head and shoulders becomes an object of attention, and under no circumstances is she permitted to sit otherwise than upright. "My child grows but once," says the English mother, "and therefore nothing is so important as her physical developement. Everything else can be acquired later.

An English child rises at seven, breakfasts at eight, dines at one, sups at seven, and at nine o'clock goes to bed. Until twelve years of age they pass the greater part of the day in the open air, with only about four hours' mental work, fresh and blooming as a rose, with light step, and eyes beaming with pleasure and life. London possesses noble museums,, galleries of art, and treasures of architecture, but one of the most charming of its sights may be seen on fine afternoons in Hyde Park—crowds of children merrily playing, earthly angels of incomparable beauty. A sight equally interesting may be witnessed after service on Sunday at the Foundling Hospital—several hundred children, ranging from five to thirteen years of age, of the most noble physique, and absolutely bewildering beauty. Two of the most wonderful sights of Europe are the children of England and the flowers of Paris. Both appear to have descended from Paradise, and scarcely to belong to earth. Nowhere else are to be seen such blooming maidens and children as in England. One sees in Great Britain ladies of sixty with complexions fairer than those of our youngest maidens, and whose hair, though slightly silvered, is yet abundant and handsome. Just as by the Greeks, every trouble was taken to reach the highest beauty, so too, with the English aristocracy. Many artists assure us that the daughters of Albion surpasses all others in the perfection of physique. Even in Europe, the women of the best classes are not so healthy as the men, except perhaps in England.

Dr. Bock, Professor of Pathological Anatomy at the University of Leipsic, says: "A healthy man is a rarity; a healthy woman apparently does not exist." Yet it is possible that women may be and are, when they have the same training, as strong as men. I take this position boldly. In England, even with the disadvantages of female dress, and where their physical education, though superior to that of any other country, is still inferior to that of the males, the women of the best classes appear to be as strong as the men of the same rank, for we must not compare the women of one class with men of another. Who doubts this, let him station himself at the fashionable hours in Hyde Park, and see, on horseback or promenading, these incomparable women.—Galaxy.

Lessons in Punctation.

CAPITAL LETTERS.

The manuscripts of the ancients were all written in capital letters, with no spacing between the words, and without marks of punctuation. Small letters were not invented till about the seventeenth century, and their introduction was gradual. At the present day, however, the great bulk of printed and written matter is formed with small letters; but capitals have their uses, and should be employed according to the following rules:

The first work of every book, pamphlet, essay, or any written document, should begin with a capital letter.

Every chapter and section should commence with a capital letter.

The first word of every sentence should commence with a capital letter.

All proper nouns, titles of office, honor and respect, should begin with capitals; as, America, Mr. President, Dr. Hall, Gen. Hooker.

The days of the week and the names of the months must commence with capitals; as, Sunday, April, July.

Some newspapers begin with capitals the names of the seasons; as, Winter, Spring, Summer, Fall, Autumn. Many others use small letters.

When the words east, west, north and south refer to particular sections of the country, or the people inhabiting them, they should begin with capitals; as, the West is a great country. But they should commence with small letters when referring to the points of the compass; as, The wind blows from the north.

Adjectives formed from proper nouns should begin with capitals; as, Mexican, Roman, Prussian.

The names of religious sects and political parties should begin with capitals; as, Methodist, Baptist, Spiritualist, Republican, Democratic, Whig.

Commence every line of poetry with a capital.

All appellations of the Deity and the personal pronouns standing for his name should begin with capitals; [where the nominative would not be understood] as, The Supreme Being, the Eternal One, the Great I Am, the Lord, he is God.

The first word of every direct quotation should commence with a capital; as, He said in solemn tones, "This is the end of earth."

If the quotation is introduced by the word that, it should not commence with a capital; as, He said in solemn tones that "this is the end of earth." It is an old saying that "brevity is the soul of wit."

The first word of a direct question should begin with a capital; as, The question is, How shall we make home beautiful?

The first word of a direct vocative sentence or clause should begin with a capital; as "It is fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?"

When a sentence or clause given as an example is introduced by the word as, it should commence with a capital; as, The love of truth. See the different examples in this lesson for further illustrations of this rule.

If the example is a single word or a series of words, it is not necessary to begin with a capital: as, dog, cat, hen, cow. Some authors, however, invariably commence with a capital, whether the example be a single word or not; as, Dog, cat, hen, cow.

Every noun, pronoun, verb. adjective, and adverb, in the titles of books and headings of articles, should begin with capitals; as, "Youman's Hand-Book of Household Science." What to Do and How to Do it in Case of Accident."

Words denoting well known events, historical eras, noted written instruments, and the like, should begin with capitals; as, The American Revolution, the Dark Ages, the Declaration of Independence.

The pronoun I and the interjection O should always be written with capitals.

Rules and examples might be extended still further; but the principal use of capital letters is covered by those already given. Usage is somewhat divided on this subject. Some use fewer capitals than others, according to their individual tastes. But there are certain rules laid down, a violation of which shows the writer to be grossly ignorant, and often subjects him to ridicule.

One line drawn under a word indicates that the writer wishes it set in italics; two lines, in SMALL CAPITALS; and three lines, in CAPITALS. Italics are less used than formerly; consequently writers should be very sparing in the underscoring of words.

In connection with this article, it may be well to make a few remarks on the abreviation of words.

The names of the States and months, all titles of office or honor, and the word county, when used by themselves as the principal words, should not be abreviated; as, Illinois (not Ill.) is a large State; or, January (not Jan.) is the first month; or, the General (not Gen.) issued his command; or, the Doctor (not Dr.) was called. When, however, these words are used in connection with dates, places, etc., it is often advisable to abreviate them; as, The letter was dated at Detroit, Wayne Co., Mich., Feb. 18, 1862; or, Gen. (not General) Grant was elected President of the United States; or, Dr. (not Doctor) Kane wrote a book on the Arctic regions.—Young Folks' Rural.

A Letter from Dr. McLaren.

It was some days after the Evangelical Repository came to hand, that I noticed, with restless surprise, the position and indiscriminate censure cast, as I think unjustly, on your valuable "periodical," which I have read with entire approval for several years; then, "in all its force," on "those prominently connected with the National Association opposed to Secret Societies;" and lastly on "its prominent lecturers," who are exhorted to "learn to speak the truth in love." It is the positive earnestness of this wide-spread censure, and the trivial subject of it at its start, in comparison with what it is where it stops, that leads me to a doubt, as to the authorship, or the friendly authorship of this criticism. Any one may see that it would require not only an impartial and close, but also a very extensive observance, to justify this censure of all in the extensive sphere to which it is applied. But leaving this criticism entirely out of view, I must subjoin my own assured conviction, from what I know of my ministerial brethren who were the able editors of the old periodical, now extinct, that they will remain stedfast and immovable in their Christian hostility to all the profanely oath-bound communities, and especially to the mother and mistress of them all, in her hostility to the religion of Christ, and her secret adverse sway, within our civil government, tending to its degradation.

There were in the United Presbyterian church in A. D. 1873, 591 ministers, of whom 433 were pastors. I do not suspect, and have no reason to think that there is one Mason among the ministers. At that time there were twelve ministers in the U. P. Presbytory of Philadelphia, and under their official oversight 3,485 communicants. The account given of an utter failure of an earnest attempt made to form an association for the defence and furtherance of what so many ministers and communicants profess, is a symptom of indifference, and it may be no more, though that itself is liable to be a forerunner of a mental dissent from what every one of them has publicly confessed to God, to be a heinous sin, committed solely and directly against God. This is not the sin forbidden in the ninth commandment, for that belongs to the second table of the moral law, which commands every one of the human race personally in all his relations, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This law is the holy just and good law of Jehovah, suitable and sufficient for every human being, in all possible relations one to another. No man can modify, limit or annul it. And with that design, or result desired, to swear an oath for its attainment, naming the name of the living and true God, the Law-giver, is, in the sacriligious act itself a blasphemous violation of the whole second table of the moral law; but this is not all, or the main and the darkest iniquity that centers in and encompasses this profane oath. For it is a formal, direct voluntary avowal to God from the man who makes it, that he will live and act as long as he lives, in a way and for an end and with a motive, in fellowship with those who hear him and others like them, according to an old law of which he knows nothing, and will never divulge, with an accepted liability to death if he should; and more than this, if he divulges the precious secrets he gets in the third degree he loses his immortality. Now what is the third commandment? "Thou shalt not take the name of Jehovah thy God, in vain, for Jehovah will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain." No other command has this awful appendix affixed to it. It is at least a judicial fore-warning. The command is a prominent constituent part of what our Saviour calls the first commandment: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. Mark xii. 30. Who is there, though he may not be a minister of the Gospel, or a member of the church, who may not with clearness of vision see, with the eyes of his understanding, that the blinding bandage, ancient and elegant as it may be, that makes useless the eyes in the head of every Masonic convert, is an appropriate and significant symbol of the blindness of his understanding, of his "soul," of his "heart," and of his "mind," in taking the name of the Lord of all upon his lips, as he repeats in his voluntary utterance directly and exclusively to the Lord, an oath, to be binding on himself under all circumstances as long as he lives—an oath, binding himself to obligations of which, except secrecy, he knows nothing in his oath, making himself liable to the penalty of death from his Masonic associates for his divulgence of the secrets which he swears to keep. Voluntary consent in an oath to God, is suicide, in such a case, as it is in the execution of it murder. The last clause in this third command of God distinguishes it fearfully from the others, "For Jehovah will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

I hope my brethren in Philadelphia and throughout Pennsylvania, in the spiritual mindedness which I know they have, will be stirred up to do what they can, by the truth as it is in the law of God, and by the truth as it is in Jesus, who magnified that law and made it honorable, to keep their fellow-men from being guilty of that heinous and baleful sin against Jehovah which has drowned so many in destruction and perdition. The circulation and influence of the Christian Cynosure would, in the dissemination of that truth, be suited to bring men to a higher and more lasting glory, than any of the inhabitants of Philadelphia will ever get in the heathen temple, the satanic palace-prison of enslaved Masonry, whence the glory men may get there "will not descend after them," where "they will never see the light:" and this is no secret. Ps. xlix. 17, 19.

It is my deliberate judgment, that there is no church in the country, against which the Masons are as hostile, and united and bitter in their enmity, as they are against the United Presbyterian church. I could give proof of it, without going outside of western New York. I will further add, founded on what I have read weekly in the Washington County Post for a few years past, that I do not think there is a county in this State, where the militant, zealous missionaries of the prince of darkness have been as active and imperial, as they have been for a few years past in that old county, where, after the Masonic murder of Morgan, there was for years in the election of county and State officers, an overwhelming Anti-masonic majority, that distinguished it from all other eastern counties. How is it now with the old churches in that county? Even in old Cambridge the secret conclave, in the lodge, or under the arch, had the choice of public lecturers for a winter or more. As to labor, and truth for good, what a benefit it would be for that town and county to have the zealous services of that devoted and faithful servant of our Lord, the Rev. J. L. Barlow, now residing at Bemis Heights in Saratoga county, N. Y. He is the President, and the Rev. J. L. Demsey, of Blodgett Mills, N.Y., is the Cor. Secretary of the New York State Association opposed to Secret Societies, auxiliary to the National Association; the latter Association will on the 2d of June meet in Syracuse. I became connected with it at a meeting held there about four years ago. They were then all strangers to me. I found it to be a meeting of men who feared God,—indeed a prayer meeting, as it has been since. I have seen and heard at these meetings some of "the prominent lecturers," and some earnest speakers not prominent, and, I must add from a sense of duty, that I have not yet heard from any one at these meetings what I thought was said for show, or from ill-will to his fellow-man. I have felt it to be my duty to my God and to my fellow-men to write the foregoing.

Religious Intelligence.

—Germany has now 50,000 old Catholics, organized into ninety-two societies, which are ministered to by thirty-one priests.

—The General Association of the Congregational churches of Illinois, meets this week in Kewanee from Thursday to Saturday. Prof. Boardman of the Theological Seminary will present a paper on the "True Basis of Fellowship in Congregational churches."

—The Baptists of Chicago propose to hold a convention in Chicago, about July 1, to make some arrangements for an active canvass in favor of the centennial fund. The meeting will be held in connection with the commencement of the University of Chicago. All Baptists interested in denominational educational matters are invited to attend.

—The Sixteenth General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church commenced its sittings at Monmouth, Ill., yesterday, the 27th. Preparations have been made for the entertainment of large delegations, most of the railroads of Central Illinois allowing reduced fare; and one includes in this favor the wives of delegates.

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian (reunited) church opened in St. Louis on Thursday last. Dr. Howard Crosby of New York, the retiring moderator, preached the opening sermon in the morning; in the afternoon Dr. Wilson of the Western Theological Seminary was chosen to preside. This Assembly numbers over 800 delegates, most of whom are present. The consolidation of the various mission and benevolent Boards will probably be effected, reducing their number to four: Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Education and Relief, and Publication.

—Rev. Joseph Haven, D.D., died at his home in Chicago early on Saturday morning. He came west from Amherst College, where he had gained reputation as a teacher and author, his works on mental and moral philosophy having been widely adopted as college text books. For a number of years after removing to this city he was professor in the Chicago Theological Seminary, which position he held to within three or four years. His death will be widely lamented in the Congregational church.

—The work of the Bible revision is going forward rapidly in England, but will occupy some six years longer. The translators are adopting as nearly as possible the same arrangements as those enforced by James I. during the making of the first translations, in the years 1607–1611. One of the most indefatigable of the translators is Dr. Guisburg, a Church of England clergyman, not now, however, discharging his clerical duty. He is of German extraction, and a most accomplished scholar, with the advantage of a valuable library containing some rare and priceless Bibles. Dr. Guisburg discharges the preliminary work of revision; it is then submitted to the other members of the company. The fullest harmony prevails among the translators and revisers.

—The American Board has 19 missions, with 70 stations and 466 out-stations, 145 ordained missionaries, and a total of 347 laborers sent from this country; 914 native pastors, teachers, and helpers; 197 churches, 9,435 communicants, 12 theological and training schools, 21 boarding schools for girls, and 496 common schools, and a total of 18,644 pupils. Twenty-four more churches are reported, 9 more native pastors, nearly 800 communicants were added to the churches, 66 more young men to the theological and training schools, 86 more girls in boarding schools, and 1,600 more children gathered into mission schools last year than the previous year.

—Rev. A. M. Milligan, of Allegheny City, Pa., writes to Our Banner his late remarkable personal experience as an instance of answer to prayer. During March last while in otherwise comparative good health his bowels became strangely closed. His physicians pronounced the cause to be an internal tumor or hard cartilaginous substance. The best physicians of New York and Pittsburgh concurred in the opinion and declared it impossible for life to be a great while prolonged, and the difficulty was beyond the reach of surgery, except to make an artificial opening, a dangerous operation, but finally decided to be performed April 8th. Meantime, Mr. Milligan's congregation in Allegheny met every evening to pray for his restoration. On Monday evening, April 6th, one of the elders said he could not bear that their pastor should endure so dangerous an operation away from his family and people, and proposed that he be brought home and the additional expense be met. All favored the suggestion and Prof. Sloane and a physician went to New York, arriving within an hour of the time set for the operation. Arrangements for the transfer were quickly made, and Mr. Milligan arrived at home on Thursday. The next morning, without any human instrumentality whatever, the tumor was removed downward so as to give relief, and the praying flock rejoice in the answer to their prayers, in beholding their pastor returning to health and strength from the grip of death.

News of the Week.

The City.

—The great reunion of old Abolitionists is to take place in Chicago, June 9th, to continue three days, morning, afternoon, and evening. The first meeting beginning at 1 o'clock P. M. of the 9th, will be addressed by Governor Beveridge. The Editor of the Cynosure will speak during the convention.

The Capitol.

The Civil Rights Bill (Sumner's favorite) was before the Senate Friday and an all night session was held. Early Saturday morning the Bill passed by a vote of 29 to 16.

—The marriage of Miss Grant to Mr. Sartoris of England was the great event of last week. The ceremony took place in the splendidly decorated East room of the White House, and although largely attended was not a State occasion. The party started on Saturday for England where Mr. and Mrs. Sartores will reside.

—Since the reduction of the price of registering letters to eight cents, that branch of the postal business has increased over 100 per cent. Why cannot our legislators be wise enough to reduce letter postage as well, and have a like result?

The Country.

—Reports from Southwestern Minnesota represent that the ground is literally covered with young grasshoppers, which have already commenced eating the vegetables.

—The Finance Committee of the Centennial Celebration report that $3,000,000 more will be sufficient to guarantee all the expenses of the Exposition; and they expect this will be forthcoming from the people and the government.

—Three great cattle sales took place last week in the vicinity of Chicago. At Waukegan, Ill., on the 20th, the Glen Flora herd, seventy-eight head, sold for $55,000, the average on fifty-five cows being over $900. On the 21st, a sale of Lyndale herd, eighty-eight in number, realized $128,000. Fifty-nine cows and heifers averaged over $1,730 each, and one bull was bid off to parties from England at $14,000. On the 22d at Cambridge City, Ind., a sale of fifty head realized $25,000.

—Gov. Taylor, of Wisconsin, is pushing the railroads under the new law of that State with extreme measures. Three suits have been brought against the Northwestern and the St. Paul companies and their officers are under arrest.

—Of the fifty-three parishes in Louisiana, thirty-one are partially or entirely covered by the terrible overflow of the rivers intersecting them. These parishes contain over a quarter of a million of people. The loss to the crops has been calculated as follows: Cotton, 300,000 bales, sugar, 40,000 hogheads; and almost a total destruction of the tobacco and rice crops, the last one of the most promising industries of Louisiana. The mayor of New Orleans has written that $1,000,000 are needed to relieve the sufferers, and many must perish unless help is soon given.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

CHAPTER IV.—(CONTINUED)

In a most able, as well as moderate article upon secret societies (The Congregationalist, 1871, vol. 23, No. 16,) President Crosby states very decidedly that his adverse opinions are based in a great measure upon his experience as secretary of a college faculty; another college president has averted to the "babyishness of secret societies," while a third denounces them as an "unmitigated nuisance." Former associations render it difficult for many college officers to express their later views, but it is known that few regard them as wholly beneficial. In conclusion, I charge secret organizations with tending to encourage plots and machinations against law, order and society; with fostering the lowest of politicians' arts; with exciting unreasonable jealousies; with exacting time and attention needed for study; with involving an expenditure which many can ill afford, and which all could apply to better advantage; with encouraging deceit of parents; with furnishing a partial and unfair aspect of persons and things; with being childish in principle and more or less vicious in practice; and finally, with doing all this in the pretended effort to accomplish certain good purposes which could be equally well accomplished without the element of secrecy.

THE REMEDY.

When the evil of secret organizations is once admitted to outweigh the good they accomplish, the remedy should be radical in its nature, although its effects may be slowly manifested.

(1.) Let the members of secret organizations be at once looked upon as only "partial men;" a happy phrase employed by Haeckel to indicate the undeniable fact that only one-half, and that the poorer, belongs to humanity—the better is a slave of a clique.

(2.) Let us deny their elegibility to any position of honor and trust involving discrimination between individuals.

(3.) Let no woman marry until her suitor takes a solemn pledge never to remain in or join a secret organization of any kind, except for the protection of life, health or property during war or other exceptional circumstances.

(4.) Let colleges prohibit the formation or continuance of secret societies; exact a pledge from every entering student; and, if necessary, make unhesitating expulsion the penalty of membership.

(5.) Let the reasons for this action be embodied in a printed pamphlet to be placed in the hands of all who are or seek to become students, and sent likewise to their parents or guardians. Ten times the expense which this would involve would be saved to the colleges in time and trouble.

If for no other reason, we hail the admission of women as a means of sifting the secret society curse; they may thoughtlessly wear the badges of their friends' societies or adopt their modes of thought; but as long as they are excluded from, or decline to enter the organizations they must be ranked as opponents of the system; and where they are in the majority they may even outvote the scheming politicians of the other sex.

Let the students seriously inquire whether social enjoyments, literary pursuits, or scientific investigations cannot be attained without recourse to a means at once so offensive, cumbersome and futile as secret meetings. Let them see that in the only desirable sense a family circle is a secret, that is, a private society; that a party for any purpose need embrace only invited and congenial guests. And let them resolutely deny themselves all such privileges as can only be enjoyed under lock and key, in the dark, or in a windowless monstrosity like a certain hall at New Haven. It has been urged upon me to confine these animadversions to college societies, in order to gain the support of the Masons, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, Farmers' granges, and other extra-collegiate secret organizations. This might be expedient, especially if anything like a decision by ballot were aimed at. But as my only object at present is to awaken public attention, I prefer to state my honest conviction that, however benevolent may have been the original purposes of these combinations, all their paraphernalia and mystic rights are just as much tomfoolery as those of any students' society. If, however, the Masons, etc., can prove themselves superior to college societies, so much the worse for the latter; if not, then so much the worse for them both.

I am well aware that some of the opinions here advanced are too radical to be agreeable, and that a certain amount of odium must follow their public expression. But, on the other hand, I am assured that they are shared by some in whose judgment I have great confidence, and that the great public outside of secret organizations will uphold them in great measure. But I am less desirous of establishing my own opinions (which, however, are not confined to myself) than of stimulating an untrammeled discussion. I only regret to be called out of my legitimate sphere, because those who should lead in the matter are too often compromised by past or present affiliations. As "incomplete individuals" they have my complete sympathy and good wishes for an early reconstruction.

Very respectfully yours,

BURT G. WILDER.

Ithaca, N. Y., October 20, 1873.

Immediately upon the issue of the above letter Professor Wilder had the satisfaction of knowing that his bravely expressed sentiments had awakened a response throughout the country. From the multitude of able editorial opinions, the following sufficiently represent

THE VOICE OF THE AMERICAN PRESS ON COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Oct. 23.

It would be strange if the sad death of young Leggett at Cornell should be passed over without some discussion of the principle of secret societies, and now it has been opened in a masterly way by Burt G. Wilder, the well-known professor of anatomy at Cornell. · · ·

Of course, it doesn't follow that because Leggett died in the process of initiation, the Kappa Alpha is not a benificent institution, for people have been known to die in the process of baptism; but this is a good time to reflect whether there are not more general considerations that condemn the existence of secret societies in college and in the world. Secrecy adds a certain power to association. Earlier in civilization, when force and intrigue were essential to the advancement of even the best causes, secret organizations were an economical device in the prosecution of any purpose. To-day and here they have no such excuse for their existence. There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. Secrecy may succeed in springing an issue upon the people and carrying a single campaign, but its gains are temporary and hardly worth the pains. The Know-Nothing and P. L. L. organizations have really accomplished nothing by their secrecy, except to familiarize young people with the frangibility of oaths and to fill their minds with silly ambitions. The older social organizations are largely charitable in their purpose, but probably if the per cent. of revenue that goes to charity were displayed by the the side of that which goes to fuss and feathers the comparison would not be flattering. The annual dues exacted would pay the premium on a very fair life insurance.

In college, and to a large extent elsewhere, the secrecy is the sole charm of the matter. There is a range of minds to whom secrecy is a consuming pleasure. Little children display it with their triumphant "I know something you don't." Most people outgrow it, but some never do. It is a foible that belongs to the juvenile mind and the juvenile state of civilization. It is the meat of petty rather than large minds, and we fear we must say of the feminine rather than of the masculine cast of thought. Secret societies, therefore, thrive among vealy youth in colleges, and among a class of ordinary people who are just below politics, so to speak, and who are satisfied with a mighty small honor, if it is expressed mighty big. In certain cases, like the Phi Beta Kappa, a literary weight attaches to membership, but the secrecy of the order has contributed nothing to this end. The mystic letters are equal in effect to D. D., or D. C. L. The English universities, we believe, have nothing corresponding to the secret societies of American colleges. · · · We shall get over secret societies, as we are getting over a good many other childish things. It used to be proper among gentlemen to take snuff, to 'treat' in grog shops, to fight duels, to refuse to exchange pulpits between different sects, to pronounce negro with two g's and eke to wallup the same, to mulct custom-house clerks five per cent. for party purposes, etc., but now we order things in a more manly way. We do not propose any restrictions by any authority upon the right of secret organization. In fact we should insist upon the sacred preservation of all man's rights to make a fool of himself, but we say at the same time, "Don't."

The Chicago Evening Journal, Oct. 25.

Undoubted evils that have long been permitted to exist undisturbed are frequently brought into prominence and exposed in their worst forms by some lamentable accident or tragedy incident to their operations. Ten days ago a young and promising son of General Leggett, Commissioner of Patents, was killed near Ithaca, N. Y., by falling from a cliff, while about to be initiated into a secret society of Cornell University. · · · So shocking an affair may be beneficial, we trust, in suggesting the expediency of a general discouraging of secret societies among our institutions of learning. Despite their pretenses there is little that can be said in their favor. As a rule, they have no benevolent purposes in view, are not designed for literary or social culture, and eek to attain no moral or religious ends. Physical development and healthful diversion are least of their objects. On the contrary, they almost invariably breed rowdyism, hazing, drinking, debauchery, extravagance and a disinclination for duty. Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed, and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious. Students require relaxation and diversion, but to secure these, secret organizations, that speedily become schools of vice, are by no means necessary. Every college society should be kept under healthful supervision, and the dangerous and ridiculous follies that are now common, under the designation of "initiatory ceremonies," should be totally prohibited.

From time immemorial the secret societies of certain universities in Europe have been noted for the drunkenness of their members, for brawls and dueling, and for many other equally debasing absurdities.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

The verdict appears to be satisfactory to the family of the deceased and to the members of the fraternity. Perhaps it ought to be to all others. I have taken sufficient interest in the case to examine the scene of the accident, to attend the more important portion of the inquest, and to study the whole evidence, together with the method of its elucidation. I know nothing of legal discriminations, but the verdict of a coroner's jury is presumably intelligible to the common mind. Leggett voluntarily put himself in charge of these young men. From the moment of his blindfolding he was as helpless and irresponsible for his own safety as an infant; more so than is a passenger who enters a railway train; and it was the duty of those assuming this charge to protect him from all avoidable harm. The only cause of death which they could not avoid would be an earthquake, a lightning stroke, the fall of a tree, or a missile from an unseen source. But to lead him toward a ravine, to place him against, or allow him to stand near, a tree upon its very brink, even at the equal risk of their own safety, was as little justifiable as if they had laid him across a railroad whose existence they had not observed, or had seated him upon a keg of gunpowder whose contents were unknown to them, but, under all the circumstances, presumably doubtful in their nature. With all the candor and impartiality at my command, I have supposed my dog in the circumstances of the young man who was killed, and to my great regret find it impossible to accept the verdict as satisfactory. A fortiori, as a possible relative of a human being who might hereafter meet his death under similar circumstances, I must regard the verdict as insufficient. I hold that blame attaches to all in greater or less degree, and that this blame should be indicated in the verdict, not in any way as punishment to the present parties to the occurrence, but as a solemn warning to others hereafter so engaged.

It was important to learn all the circumstances in order to convince the public that no dangerous ceremonies were taking place at the time and place of the tragedy: and as this is proved, we may look upon the errors in it as individual only. But there is another feature of the case which is in part apparent in the evidence, but most obvious to a spectator of the inquest; and this is perfectly characteristic of secret society proceedings. The witnesses were charged with no crime; the public merely wished to know all the circumstances, and they were the only sources of information. The fast-spreading rumors arising from the haste and secrecy of the arrangements for sending off the body, would naturally, so it seems to me, incline the witnesses to let the truth be known as soon as possible. Whereas it is notorious that certain interested persons, all of them members of this or of other secret societies, objected to an inquest, urged that it inquire merely as to the direct cause of death, and advised the avoidance of all questions tending to show the nature of the performances, actual or intended. And finally, as the evidence shows, some of the witnesses could not have been more reluctant to give information if they had been under charge of murder; especially was this noticeable in regard to the blindfolding of Leggett.

As a result of this unfortunate policy, the jury became suspicious (that is, those members thereof who were not themselves members of secret societies), and the press echoed the dreadful reports concerning the "killing" of Leggett. In spite of this, the re-examination of the first witness, five days later, was a repetition of questions and answers, the latter as brief and as little to the point as possible; and the first satisfactory testimony was that of Lee and Wason, who, being only Freshmen, and recently infected by the cacoethes celandi, told in ten minutes, and but for their weakness could have told in five, what Sophomores, and Juniors, and Seniors, not to mention others, had been striving to conceal for nearly a week. And to this delay, and not in any sense to the inquest itself or to the facts evoked, we must ascribe the general misapprehension respecting secret society ceremonies, and the obloquy which has fallen upon all our societies, and indirectly upon the institution to which they belong.

As a citizen of Ithaca and a member of Cornell University, I claim the right to form and to express publicly my sorrow and indignation at the manner in which most of the evidence was given and received; and at the same time my deep sympathy for Lee and Wason, and my admiration of their moral courage and straightforwardness. Their testimony was to the rest as the flight of an arrow to that of a boomerang.

Leaving, now, this particular occurrence, I beg leave to offer some general considerations upon secret societies, the presentation of which has been delayed for an occasion when the subject is already under discussion. And I can think of no better medium than the ever impartial Tribune, which is always open to both sides. Before doing so, I ought to say I am not conscious of personal hostility to secret fraternities. During my student connection with the scientific and medical schools of Harvard University I lived at home, and knew nothing of them except through a fellow-student, whose intimate friend was a member of one. The impression received was not favorable, but when, six years later, I became connected with the Cornell University, I think that no strong prejudice remained. My acquaintance with members of secret societies, while never very intimate, has not been injuriously affected by the mere fact of their membership, nor have I ever knowingly done them injustice or suffered it at their hands. I claim, therefore, to be capable of a fair and impartial consideration of the matter, upon general principles.

I do not know whether secret organizations exist in the scientific or medical schools; at any rate, I never joined one, and have, therefore, no direct information respecting their purposes or their operations. Nevertheless, I decline to be bullied into silence by the favorite argument that "if you are not a member, you know nothing about them." Must we assist at an auto da fe in order to qualify for expressing an opinion upon the horrors of the Inquisition?

An institution is to be judged in part from its theory, and in part from its practice; and, while the latter is the easier way, it is not always the most trustworthy; for the nature of practice depends largely upon special conditions of individuals; and a final judgment requires a vast collection of cases, in order to prove that they are not exceptional. But if the principles of an institution can be shown to antagonize "higher laws" of moral or civil order, it may fairly be regarded as cruel in its effects. It is not denied that, during war or great political crises, or under other exceptional conditions, secret organization may be needed for self-protection; but history shows that all such hidden associations which persist after the occasion which called them into being is passed, tend to degenerate into instruments of harm to society, to the State, and to their members.

That there are natural degrees of secrecy is evident to all. Into the inmost soul of man God alone can enter; and the attempt of mortal, whether, as "confessor" or not, is an effort toward the "unpardonable sin." The married pair are, in theory at least, in each other's confidence to a degree which the higher animals respect among themselves, and which only the most depraved of human beings seek to violate. There are family secrets which result from the nature of blood-relationship; for the family is in certain aspects a unit, like the married pair. So, too, the associations of church, of politics, of mutual aims and tastes of all kinds, are in varying degrees natural and harmless; but only in so far as they do not conflict with the fellowship of man—with the recognition of the higher law. "Above all nations in humanity."

Not that all are to associate together or upon the same level; human nature forbids, and reason shows the physical impossibility; but the unbiased mind will readily see that any bond which incapacitates him, however little, for an impartial recognition of virtue and worth in all mankind, or which leads him, however slightly, to uphold certain individuals or organizations against his inner convictions of right and wrong, must be injurious to his mental and moral freedom and progress. Do wise men form intimate business connections with acquaintances of a few week's standing? Would not a merchant justly suspect the motives of such a comparative stranger who asked admission to his commercial confidence? Yet here is a matter of mere dollars and cents, and the terms of co-partnership are openly announced. Is, then, a youth justified in forming an alliance, defensive at least, with others whom he has known for a few months at the most, upon a basis of mutual agreement which virtually binds him to be intimate with them only and forever, and to stand by them under nearly all circumstances? And ought he not rather to infer that their early solicitation is founded at the best upon his supposed social position of means, rather than upon their conviction that he is one calculated above all others to help them in the hard work of life in and out of college? No assertion is here made, but the question is a fair one. And does he realize that in a few years he will be a man, a member of society, and a citizen of the State, placed, perhaps, in a position requiring absolute freedom of thought and act? that he may be a husband and father, the center of a family circle and the repository of all the secrets which his family relation involves? Can he fairly and honorably keep up an intimate relation with a large body of individuals whose corporate proceedings are kept from his wife and children, for no reason which one can comprehend, or which he could explain, even if he would? And ought he to complain when they, in turn, have secrets from him? when his wife has friends which are not his, and when his sons form attachments which may be well enough in themselves, but whose clandestine nature, in imitation of the parent, tends almost inevitably to render them pernicious?

Yet this is what may be, and too often is, exacted from every member of a secret organization, whether in or out of college, as the terribly dear price of the social, political, or theological advantages which his membership confers. I purposely enumerate these three, for there are cliques in society, cabals in politics, and sects in religion, and it would be very easy to show that in these departments do secret organizations find most congenial soil. Science, thank Heaven, is generally incompatible with petty concealment; God's truth is free to all, and the naturalist, at least, has too much earnest work upon his hands to admit of learning grips and passwords and the non-significance of Greek initials.

The most powerful and the most mischievous of all secret organizations, the ablest and most unscrupulous opponent of religious freedom and of scientific progress, is that of the "Jesuits;" and no one can deny that in so far as concerns their secrecy and their social and political tendencies, all secret societies are Jesuitical. It is claimed that members of secret organizations are bound to render aid, pecuniary or otherwise, under all circumstances. It is difficult to see why the same kindly relations cannot be maintained without the secrecy; and it is a slur upon both Providence and human nature to hold that the door of charity can be opened only by a peculiar twist of the handle, which, in point of fact, is no secret to "outside barbarians." Nor are all such givers of aid immaculate; a near relative, who had been a Mason from early youth, and had traveled extensively over all sections of the country, once told me that whenever a man gave him the Masonic grip, he avoided his society; and I know members of this and of other secret organizations with whom I would not trust the integrity of my dog's tail. Not that there are not rascals just as black outside the pale; no such question is raised, or need to be. What I urge is, that he who joins a secret fraternity of any kind whatsoever runs the risk of "warming a viper," or of being "taken in" by a rogue, whose only claim upon an acquaintance is a secret sign which they know in common, and which any one can find out who takes sufficient pains. In short, for the slender chance of benefit from fellows of the order under conditions little likely to arise, we are asked to link ourselves socially, and more or less fully in morals and in business, with persons who may prove utterly uncongenial in tastes and mode of life.

Moreover, whatever may have been the case in past years, it is certain that now the annual expenditures of an 'actual member" for society purposes, which he justifies to his family on the ground of looked-for aid in misfortune, would enable him to make a certain provision for them by life insurance, and to insure himself while traveling. Deny this who can. But one other advantage has ever been claimed for secret organizations over open ones, namely, that in war life or liberty may be preserved through the recognition of the "secret bond." Now I am satisfied that the artificial animosities and unjust decisions resulting from secret affiliations far outnumber the cases above mentioned; and it must be remembered that all these cases, except only those where common humanity would not otherwise have been exercised, involves a direct betrayal of the party or nation with which the benefactor is acting.

Both reason and experience indicate that when concealment is practiced without good cause, a bad cause is pretty sure to be devised. Yet, strange as this may seem, this fact is a good sign; for where evil predominated in the world, fear, not modesty, would warrant the good deeds done in secret; but so long as virtue is the standard, ideal at least, so long sin hides its face for shame; "they love darkness better than light, because their deeds are evil." Hence, that which is secret for no apparent good cause, is justly and inevitably suspected to be wrong; and by a natural consequence darkness, mystery and concealment become synonyms of moral shadow and obliquity. This being the case in general, is it strange that when, for no good reason which they themselves have ever pretended to assign, young men bind themselves to hide all their proceedings from the world, they are irresistibly impelled to justify this mystery by actions more or less deserving of the concealment which they practice? Herein lies at least one of the occasions of immorality in secret organizations—the steps being gradual from innocent, and, perhaps, earnest effort at mutual improvement, through harmless mischief, malice, plotting, slander, actual violence to others, dissipation and debauchery among themselves. Not that in all cases these depths are reached, but that they do in some is easily proved, and that they may in all is as easily demonstrated from the conditions involved.

Without pretending to more than ordinary acquaintance with the arrangements in the other world, I am willing to hazard my position therein upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven; but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust. Young men are specified, and not people in general. It is not the least of woman's many wrongs that the stronger sex has excluded her from secret organizations. Whether upon the general principle "omne ignotum pro magnifico" or from the assumption of woman's inability to keep a secret, it is hardly worth while to inquire; the fact remains that secret societies are exclusively masculine. Two bad results are liable to follow. (1.) As above remarked, the exclusion is a bar to the confidence which should be absolute between husband and wife, and nearly so between mother and sons, brothers and sister. (2.) Male thoughts and feelings tend downward. Being a man, I assert this as a rule so general that the exception can hardly be found. The army, the medical school, the boarding school, the dormitory, all bear witness to the fact that when, for any time, men are placed in social relations from which women are excluded, demoralization ensues—slowly, perhaps, but surely; and that the college society is no exception, let Dr. Crosby show from his own experience: "Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and, while I had upright fellow-members, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice. The promise of secrecy prevented all disclosure to parents, and the seclusion was thus perfect. We met in a back room of a hotel; liquor was brought from the bar-room for the company, and, as in all such styles of association, the conversation gravitated to the obscene and sensual. · · · I do not charge all or any of our college secret societies with such excess at the present day. · · · But still they all offer a remarkable opportunity for sins in which publicity would not allow their members to indulge for a moment."

Granting that in some societies the customs are better than those above described, I know others for which our picture is not overdrawn. And I would ask the members whether the language habitually employed, or the subjects discussed at their meetings, when these are merely social, are as pure as they would be in the presence of their mothers and sisters? Any admitted difference for the worse is to be ascribed, in part at least, to the secrecy of their arrangements. Admitting that the ostensible objects of secret societies are innocent, elevating and benevolent, we may fairly ask whether all of these could not be just as well accomplished without the element of secrecy; and, on the other hand, it may as fairly be claimed that this same mystery is the direct occasion of most of the trouble of every kind in colleges. To state the case in another way, it is probable that, except under extraordinary conditions, all good ends are attainable by open and direct means, while it is certain that covert and mysterious methods of acting are a constant characteristic of evil deeds.

It is perhaps true that large numbers of eminent men in all branches are, or have been, connected with secret societies; to be conclusive we should know what equally eminent men have not been so connected; and it is probable that, at the most, it might be shown that membership was not incompatible with future advancement, and that this was made in spite of the association, rather than through its aid. It ought also to be shown what proportion exists between the eminent and the good and those who are not so, or were the reverse, in and out of the organizations. It might be difficult to obtain evidence upon this point, but every college officer may ascertain from the faculty records, if not from his general recollections, that of those whose conduct or method of study call for interference, a large majority are secret society men. When I have seen and heard during five years warrants me in affirming that nine-tenths of the mischief and immorality of the earlier years of the Cornell University was directly due to the presence and influence of secret society men who came here from other institutions for the avowed purpose of engrafting branches of their parent trees upon our young and otherwise perfectly healthy organization. And further, speaking not as a Professor, but as a citizen and member of the University, I feel no hesitation in adding that the larger proportion of all the disturbances which have in any way affected the comfort of students, of faculty and of citizens, have been either originated or carried out—or both—by means of secret organizations.

The correctness of the following statements may easily be ascertained from those who were here at the time the cases occurred. A young student was induced to join a secret fraternity; naturally boyish and inconsiderate, he speedily fell behind in his studies; he purchased an expensive badge; he felt bound to contribute his share to the frequent festivities which rendered Gasvadilla notorious; and for these and other society objects expended the funds sent him for tuition and board; his difficulties became at last too great for further concealment from his father, and he left the institution under not very creditable circumstances. Another student, in most respects the opposite of the one just mentioned—young, it is true, but unusually mature, conscientious, and independent—was induced to join a society which enjoyed a very high reputation for scholarship, conduct and social position. Some of his former friends perceived a change, but respected him too much to complain. Suddenly he severed his connection. No reason was ever made public; but it is generally understood that a member committed an offense against justice and college law. True to their pledge, his fellows refused to condemn his action. Finding remonstrance in vain, the new member dared do that which few have ever done, and freed himself from an association in which he found the sense of right and wrong overpowered by an oath of mutual support. Whatever may have been the exact cause, the fact remains that one of our most brilliant students and excellent young men, who was, in fact, too good to live, found the secret bonds of one of the best societies too galling for endurance. That he retained the respect and good will of his late associates is still more conclusive evidence of the fact that he left them for conscience's sake, and was not asked the sign.

The granges no doubt had, and perhaps still have, a good object in view, but in this, like in all other things, there are extremes. The railroad monopolists, in some cases, have run to extremes in oppressing the producer, but is there not an equal danger of the granges running into the other extreme, and thus paralyzing the progress and enterprise of the nation? Railroads accomplish more for the producers than any other one thing that has ever been invented, and from the benefits resulting therefrom, millions of producers now count their wealth by thousands. Aside then from the religious aspect of the move, we are inclined to doubt the plausibility of their claims fearing that an extreme on the part of the granges may be more fatal to the prosperity of the nation than the one against which they are protesting.—Weekly Pilgrim.

OUR SUBSCRIPTIOM LIST.

May twenty-sixth our mail list was again counted. On May ninth it numbered 4,384, now we count 4,607. A gain of 223, or an average increase of 13.93, nearly fourteen subscribers daily. For the twenty-two days preceding, the average rate of increase per day was 22.6. We think that in consideration of the fact that business in almost every field of action is now unusually pressing, this is keeping up the rate well, although it is far lower than our necessities require and our hopes allowed us to look for.

There are hundreds of workers for the Cynosure that we have not heard from for a long time. Are you still extending the circulation of the paper? With what success?

Although we cannot report a mail list of six thousand subscribers at Syracuse, we can report very efficient and successful labor on the part of many engaged in the work of putting down secret societies. We have just received a club containing the names of thirty-nine ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church comprising all of the Colorado Conference and the Missionaries of New Mexico.

This club is sent, we quote from the letter containing it, as the "cheerful, earnest donation of two women of the Methodist Episcopal church, and may God accept and bless this offering."

Two women away in New Mexico feel the importance of the Cynosure and its work so much that they have thus sent it for three months to the shepherds of all these flocks scattered over the plains and among the hills of the West.

Similar indications of general effort from other parts of the Union strengthen us to press on the battle. Let all of us, for it is our work in a general sense, wake up fully to the fact that the Cynosure must have a positive enlargement in its subscription list. Let us feel that there is no alternative. Not even in death.

The battle is joined and we, all of us, engaged in it, call with all the authority which a just cause commands for one hundred thousand fresh recruits. Let them be volunteers.

ANTI-MASONIC LITERATURE.

At the Oberlin Convention two years ago a committee was appointed on "cheap publications." This committee reported in favor of the immediate publication of "Finney on Masonry" in paper covers, and the republication of the old Morgan revelation of Masonry, and subscriptions were taken for these works. The price of Finney on Masonry was reduced to just one-fifth of the retail price in cloth. The Morgan book was published in very attractive form, with the signs, grips, due guards, etc., illustrated by engravings, and the first edition was sold to those who subscribed at Oberlin at 8 cents each, the bare cost. This was the first of our Anti-masonic books, but others were added in quick succession till now we have eight, all of them deserving and receiving a liberal sale. Two more, Odd-fellowship Illustrated, and College Secret Societies, are now in press, the latter just being completed, and the former to be completed at an early day, but possibly not earlier than Sept. 1st. Many earnest friends of the cause have expressed great surprise as well as pleasure that the price of all of our books has been put so low to all, in lots of 25 or more. From thirty to forty per cent. discount on retail prices to regular dealers is considered liberal, but to sell books in as amall lots as 25 at from sixty to sixty five per cent. discount when no necessity existed for such liberal terms seemed remarkable. Our answer has been: We care far more for the sale and circulation of the books than we do for the profits on them. Had our chief or even prominent object in life, been to make money we would never have been so foolish as to have published the Cynosure or anything else on the secret society question, since very heavy pecuniary loss was certain, and positive ruin was much more than possible.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

The readers of the Cynosure have doubtless been interested in the articles which have been prepared with some care on College Secret Societies. We have already been to considerable expense having sent out our circulars at two different times to about two hundred and fifty different colleges for the purpose of collecting information on the subject, besides expending much time in correspondence and research on the subject.

These articles are to be issued in pamplet form early in June. Orders have already been received for several hundred copies. The price will not exceed $15.00 per hundred, two dollars per dozen, postage or express charges extra. This work supplies a want which has long been felt by persons opposed to secret societies in colleges.

Nothing, we believe, tends more to confuse the ideas of equal justice and prevent an honest recognition of real merit in the minds of men educated in schools which allow secret societies than a four year drill in concealment and favoritism of their college societies.

The alumni of one institution, which has ordered two hundred copies of this book, have combined together to aid the faculty in the total extermination of these pestilent parasites from their "alma mater." Send on orders.

PETITIONS.

If any of our readers have not circulated the protest against the corner stone laying of the United States Custom House by the Masons on the twenty-sixth of next June, let them do so still. Can you not sacrifice business and pleasure somewhat in order to do yonr part toward preventing this national disaster and disgrace.

If your petition should not arrive in time to be sent to Washington, send it before the fifteenth of June it will then come in time to be counted and its moral force will be brought to bear against such a proceeding through the public press.

After the 30th of May send all protests to the office of the Christian Cynosure, 13 Wabash ave., Chicago.

CYNOSURE SUBSCRIPTION CARDS

Have been prepared for use at the Syracuse Convention, not only for convenience in taking the subscriptions of all friends who are not taking the paper, but there is a blank pledge on the back where each is asked to state how many subscribers they will promise to secure before Sept. 1st, and how many during the year. We would be very glad to secure such pledges from those who are not able to attend the Syracuse Convention. Such promises will greatly encourage us while they will, we believe, help those who make them, by giving them a definite aim.

Some of our subscribers whose subscriptions expire in June have renewed already and a few whose subscriptions expire in May have not yet been heard from. It is pleasant to have June commence to settle her accounts so early. And it will be pleasant if we can have a full, liberal settlement with May before she leaves us. "Better late than never."

Topics of the Time.

PILGRIMAGES.—The fantastical troops of religious pleasure-seekers which filled all France and drew in part of England last year, are again in motion for the shrines of Lowrdes and Paray-le-Morrial. Some two weeks ago a party of a hundred American Paptists sailed on such a mission for France and Rome, bearing banners and inscriptions. And at length we have an American shrine about twenty-five miles from Washington in Prince George's county, Maryland. Some two thousand Catholics from Washington and Baltimore visited this place of pretended sanctity with all the solemnities of that priestly worship not long since. In Paris a procession of several thousand young girls has been seen in the performance of such rites, robed in white and bearing torches. The multitudes look on in idle wonder while these thousands are seeking rest from sin in the falsehoods of priests, while none point to the Only Way.

THE TRANSIT OF VENUS.—Betwen the hours of 9 o'olock P. M. and 2 o'clock A. M. in December 8 next, the plannet Venus will pass between the earth and the sun, and will furnish an opportunity long looked for by astronomers to establish within a near approximation the distance of the earth from the sun by the application on a magnificent scale of the problem; "Given two sides of a triangle to find the third." With all the labor of astronomers for twenty centuries, since Aristachees of Lamos and Ptolemy, we do not know this distance within 300,000 miles. The accuacy in determining this distance is regarded with so much interest by scientific man that several governments are sending or aiding expeditions for observation to those countries where the phenomenon will be visible. England will send to several stations in the South Pacific, and the United States to eight in Liberia, Japan, China and the region of New Zealand. The expeditions will be on their way before the middle of June.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE is a question fairly before the people of Michigan and will be voted on in September. The Methodist Conference held at Jackson endorses this movement as a step towards a "higher and purer administration of government." In settling domestic relations the Bible utters itself distinctly. The husband rules. The wife is in subjection. But should a Christian man suppose that because the wife which he duty bound to reverence and obey him that other women not in any way connected with his family are to accord to him any peculir privileges in the legislative and judicial walks of life? Is or is not Scripture perverted when the husband is generalized away into the sex to which he belongs, and the theory is educed that in civil affairs all women are to be ruled over by all mem? The point to be settled by Christians in deciding this question seems to us to be this: Is it in harmony with the Revealed Will of the Ruler of Nations that sisters should exercise civil rights, that their views should carry equal weight with the opinions of their brothers?

WORSHIPERS OF THE GRAND ARCHITECT.—Cornerstone gossip is still kept up in the Chicago press. The Times is the only daily of spirit and independence on the question. The Tribune since its editorial, lately published in the Cynosure, has kept a cowardly silence and refused to publish letters on the subject; the Inter-Ocean has gone over to the lodge, and lays out what little energy it has left after the inflation veto in flattering the Masons. To human foresight there will be no interposition from Government to save its honor. The Masons are in high feather and report 25,000 visiting members of the order will be present. They issue their orders as lords of the situation, thus: "The committee on carriages have been directed to procure 100 carriages for the use of the Grand Lodges and invited guests. The railroads have all agreed on reduced prices and the Government is expected to appreciate the vast trouble and expense undertaken for the public benefit and for the Herculean task of putting down a single stone in the wrong place. The managers, we are told, feel that if they can secure an appropriation of two or three million dollars by expending ten thousand, they had better do it.

WHO IS TO JUDGE.—One side of the question of admission to church membership is quite often overlooked by minds too little enlightened to perceive that their assumed independence is nothing but low conceit. For these iconoclasts the Christian Intelligencer has a word of wisdom: "No church that we know of admits any person to its communion table as a member upon his own opinion "that he has been converted." He must give 'a reason for the hope that is in him,' and especially the evidence of the new life. 'Show me thy faith by thy works.' The church to which the candidate applies is the sole judge of what is requisite for admission to its communion table. If he 'thinks he has been baptized but the church thinks he has not been baptized,' he must either submit to its rules or go elsewhere."

LIBERAL THEOLOGY AND LIBERAL MORALITY.—That this world is longing to "Be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease," that men desire to make the "narrow way" broad; that they desire to believe that in this world Christians shall not have tribulation; seems to be a new idea to many who write for the public press. They affirm that the world is in need of a more liberal theology.

Such writers, as innocently as though they could see no connection between the two conditions of things, mourn over the dishonesty of officials. Tell us that the employees of railroad trains should carry firearms and recount grim stories about drunken judges, and murders and suicides committed by drunken men. Has not this liberal theology anything to do with this liberal morality or more properly speaking, with this general demorilization, which sickens or terrifies even the amiable theorizer who asks for peace outside of Our Hope.

BY P. J. B.

Mankind is slow, but God is swift,
And they who give Him oar
On truth's blue billows are adrift,
Ere others launch from shore.

But through the mist the canvas gleams,
The song floats o'er the wave,
Till laggards break from idle dreams,
And join their brothers brave.

When John Brown struck the upas branch
Above our orange bloom,
Columbia's wrath, in avalanche,
Scooped out his lowly tomb.

But now on every spicy breeze
The notes he wakened roll;
And we behold, o'er vales and seas,
The grand march of his soul.

When Fremont freed on western plains,
A few from servile thrall,
The right hand fused those broken chains
Which after broke them all.

And as our Sumner lay in state,
Though garlands fell in showers,
We saw the ghost of buried hate
Peer at us from the flowers.

Ho, brethren on the crystal tide!
At no far distant time
The masses shall be at your side,
In sympathy sumblime.

The Fox who may in future pen,
For ages yet to bloom,
The honored names of martyred men,
Must make for Morgan room.

Freemasons in Heaven.

BY A. T. RILEY.

I met an old friend on the street a short time since who inquired why I left the M. E. church. I told him because of Masonry. He replied, "I'm afraid you'll have to withdraw from heaven then, for there'll be a good many good Masons there."

Now is this true? Will there be "good Masons" in heaven? What does the Bible teach? "Thou shalt not foreswear thyself; but shall perform unto the Lord thy vows." The first step a man takes in order to become a "good Mason," he foreswears himself. He promises and afterward swears to do things of the nature of which he is in total ignorance. A part of which is "to obey all regular signs and summonses" of the lodge. What does he know of the nature of these summonses? He may be summoned to assist in executing Masonic vengeance on some man, as was done at Morenci, Mich., a short time since, by cutting his throat from "ear to ear;" tearing his "tongue out by the roots:" tearing open his left breast, and taking his heart from thence; severing his body in twain; taking out his bowels; taking off his skull, etc. All this he may be "summoned" to do: and must do it or his own life is the forfeit! Such a man fit for heaven! He may be just the kind of a man for "the Grand Lodge" beneath—which is presided over by the Grand Arch-fiend of the infernal pit!—but he is not the kind of a man who "will sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," at the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

He "furthermore promises and swears to assist all worthy Masons," in preference to all others. Here is

Two men come along looking for work. One is a devoted follower and lover of the Lord Jesus Christ; the other a devoted follower of the Masonic god—a worthy Mason, but an infidel and a hater of Christ. The Christian tells his story; is in great need; is a good workman: and Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." But the infidel, Christ-hating, worthy Mason tells his story: appeals to his Masonic god: "O Lord my God, is there no help for the widow's son?" and his prayer availeth much, because the "good Mason," professing Christian, fears and worships the Masonic god more than he does "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Isn't he like the man who prayed. "Good Lord and good devil, for he didn't know which hands he would fall into"? The infidel obtains work, while the friend of that Jesus who is shut out of the true Masonic lodge, is rejected by the "good Mason." Jesus says, "He that rejecteth you rejecteth me." Between the Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers, etc., it is fast becoming so that no man can buy or sell unless he has "the mark of the beast" upon him; especially if he dares to say anything against them.

He "furthermore promises and swears" that he "will not speak evil of a Master Mason, either behind his back or before his face," that he "will keep all the secrets of a Master Mason delivered to him as such, murder and treason excepted: and then left to his own discression." (In the Royal Arch degree without any exception.) This prevents his giving testimony in court against a criminal who is a Mason. And if he knows that a brother Mason is intending to rob or kill another who is not a Mason he must keep his jewel of a "silent tongue." He dares not tell it, for in so doing he would speak evil of a brother Mason; and his own life would be forfeited! "When thou sawest a thief, thou consentedst with him, and hast been a partaker with adulterers."

But the oaths and penalties of the Masonic lodge, are so well known to your readers that I will not pursue the sickening details farther. I don't wonder that one in this State who had taken eighteen degrees, says he has gone about as far as he can stand it. Nor do I wonder that honest men are becoming disgusted with and are leaving the lodge, all over the land. I am thankful to find a few such in Minnesota; though most of them do not dare to say anything openly against it. I have met with one man who was a Mason at the time of Morgan's murder; and his wife overheard him and another Mason talking about it. He attended the lodge in New York city at the time they were beginning to change the work, to keep out "book Masons;" but has had nothing to do with them since.

A "good Mason" in heaven! Why, a heaven made up of "good Masons" would be a hell to the Christian. I attended a lodge one night, the Worshipful Master of which spent a good share of his time at a saloon. The treasurer was a lover of strong drink, and has since, I fear, gone to the "grand lodge,"—beneath! doubtless buried with Masonic honors, and lauded to the skies. The Junior Deacon pro tem was a brewer! The Junior Warden pro tem, as one member expressed it, an irreligious libertine. The Tyler, one of the worst men in the country. I think myself safe in saying that the most of the members of that lodge care more for whisky and cards than for the Bible. Yet they were "good Masons"! Ah, no! I am strangely inclined to think that a "good Mason" never will get to the heaven where Jesus dwells. They won't admit Jesus to their lodge on earth, and if they get to heaven's gate, and find him there they won't go in, but will fit up a part of Satan's dominion for a "grand lodge," where they can keep out Christ, all cowans, eaves-droppers, traitors, etc., especially those whom they have murdered for revealing Masonic secrets. Such can never have a seat in that grand lodge. Satan will be the Grand Master, and the lodge will elect the other officers from among those who have assisted in killing traitors, and did the most to draw members into the lodge on earth, and fit them for the grand lodge—beneath!

Yes, I have no doubt there will be a good many "good Masons" in this Masonic heaven! and from such a heaven (?) I would withdraw, and go to be with Jesus.

> "O that with yonder sacred throng,
> I at His feet may fall:
> I'll join the everlasting song,
> And crown Him Lord of all."

Glory be to Jesus! I feel his love burning in my heart to-night.

Testimony and Renunciation.

Mr. Editor:—If there was ever a time in the history of our country when Christian people should come boldly to the defense of the religion of Jesus Christ, it is now. Every sort of evil and temptation is abroad in the land, and advancing with rapid strides upon the church and Christian institutions; and we have to admit, though it be with reluctance, that many professed disciples of the blessed Jesus are aiding this advance of wickedness, not by active participation, but by a lofty conservatism, which is too self-satisfied to come down to the level of humanity, and there by precept and example and a firm faith in the power of a divine Saviour, repudiate the evil of the land and drive it off the face of the earth.

But we may thank God that there are many earnest workers in Christ's vineyard, who are willing and ready to act a part in the suppression of wickedness. And we may rejoice that many are acting, and through the medium of the Cynosure are being made known to the world. I am thankful that there is one paper published in our country that works earnestly on the side of right, and it is with interest that I peruse the columns of the Cynosure as it makes its welcome weekly visit to my table; for I am in full sympathy with its cause of waging war upon one of the greatest evils of our land, that is, the secret societies and rings. The country, the community and the church are debased by their rule. I do not say this from an outside stand-point, but by actual observation and participation. I am sorry to say that I have been a member of three secret societies, one of which is Masonry, the mother of them all.

I became a member of the Congregational church and also of the Masonic lodge in this place about the same time, in 1865. The former I have never regretted; but of the latter, I hope that God has forgiven me for being led away by Satan, who, in the garb of Christianity, enticed me into such a deceptive institution. Many times since I was "hoodwinked" and led into that tesselated chamber by a "cable-tow twice around my body," I have tried to convince myself and others that Masonry was a "handmaid" to religion. But woe is me! the truth would always come back upon me that I spoke that I knew not of. Yes, it is a "handmaid," but of the "Prince of the power of the air," the fruit of the "Son of perdition."

Becoming convinced at last of my sin in belonging to such a dark institution, I have left it forever, and God helping me I shall try to do all in my power to enlighten the people on the falsity and iniquity of the cursed secret empire.

Many may ask if I can break my Masonic oath or obligation with a clear conscience? I answer decidedly, yes! I should consider that if I kept it, I should break my obligation to my God and my country, for the laws and oaths of Masonry are distinctly antagonistic to Christianity. Let any Mason who may read this open his Bible to Lev. v. 4–5, and he will find these words: "Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it, then he shall bo guilty in one of these. And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing."

Now I ask any Master Mason if that will accord with his oath? Every truthful and candid Mason will say no, or be silent. Therefore, taking the law of God into consideration, how can I be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus and adhere to the oath or obligation of a Mason. My conscience cannot reconcile the two laws. I could not then with justice to myself and my God, remain in the lodge, and at the same time be a member of Christ's church. And for this reason I renounce Masonry before the world that I might act consistently with the teachings of Jesus Christ; and for the same reason I sent the following communication to the Masonic lodge of which I have been a member:—

Brandon, Vt., Feb. 25th, 1874.

To the W. M. and Wardens of St. Paul's Lodge No. 25, F. A. M., State of Vermont:—

About one year ago I sent a communication to the lodge requesting a demit, stating as my reasons that Masonry was not consistent with my religious belief. Upon consultation with a committee appointed to confer with me, I withdrew the request for further investigation of the subject. And since then I have consulted Masonic writers of high standing, and also my own mind, and I am more than ever convinced of the inconsistency of Masonry with my interpretation of religion. But I find according to Masonic law I am not entitled to a demit, as it is Masonry and not the lodge only from which I wish to withdraw; and therefore, as I became a Mason of "my own free will and accord," I herewith withdraw from the institution of Masonry upon the same principle. I do this in accordance with the teachings of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, and under the jurisdiction of the laws and Constitution of the United States. As I said in my former communication, I have no personal pique or predjudice against any member of the order; but it is the conviction of an unworthy professor of the religion of Jesus Christ who is trying to do right. It is not within the scope of this letter to give my reasons in full for my action in the matter; but if the W. M. sees fit to appoint a conference committee, I would most happily give my reasons in detail. Very respectfully yours,

W. H Sanderson.

What course the lodge will pursue in my case I know not; but according to Masonic law, they can only expel me from the order, and that would certainly be acceptable, for I deem it an honor to have done with the hypocrisy of Masonry. I believe that I am the only Mason with one or two exceptions, in this vicinty, who has boldly left the institution in like manner. I do not say this boastingly, but because you may know what a seceding Mason has to contend with in this hot-bed of secrecy. For we have here Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers, Good Templars, Grand Army comrades, and "rings" of political wire-pullers, and all classed under the head of Christian. May the good Lord deliver us from such conglomerate Christianity. But we have one strong advocate of anti-secrecy and temperance, the Rev. Franklin Tuxbury, pastor of the Congregational church in this village. On a late Sabbath evening he addressed a good audience in his church on the enforcement of law essential to the public welfare" with special reference to the Prohibitory law. It was an able and telling discourse. He preaches the truth boldly at all times, and I have no doubt but there will be good fruit from his labors. I have extended this letter much longer than I intended; but I wish to enter my testimony on the side of truth and right, and I choose the Cynosure as the best medium, and the best exponent my views of right and wrong, and I hope to extend its circulation in this vicinity. More anon.

Yours in Christ, W. H. Sanderson.

European Morals in America.

Whether the irreligious habits of modern Europe shall ever be wholly adopted in this country is a question which the drift of American thought and practice is fast answering. The United Presbyterian has a good word on the subject in the following:

It is the effect of German morals on our people that is most deserving of thought. We find that the tendency of their teaching is nearly all, more or less, in the direction of that which is, to state it mildly, not strictly evangelical. It is hard for one of their scholars to get through a theological discussion even, without displaying somewhere, a looseness with respect to the doctrines of faith. They run inevitably towards intellectualism, and thence in the direction, with grea er or smaller divergence, of rationalism and materialism. Able, critical, indefatigable, they make men hear and read them, but they rarely fail to offend by insisting that some German dogma is right, and then that it is right because it is German.

After these are the working populations who swarm on our shores and settle in our cities and rural places They are usually industrious. They have come here, not to make a living, but to get rich, and they set themselves to that object with all their might. In plodding industry and rigid economy they would be valuable, were it not that they run the one so often into mere drudgery, and the other into meanness. Farms and shops, rather than houses and homes, are their object, and in the materialistic spirit of their countrymen, they devote themselves to a life from which all consideration of intellect and soul are sedulously excluded. It is animal life they lead. And thus ignoring all moral thought and the claims of the mind and its refinements, their practices must be such as to interrupt rather than assist our civilization. It is out of this education and spirit that the war against the American Sabbath and temperance laws is evolved, and it will be impossible to stop the war without changing the spirit.

This brings us to the lesson insisted on so often, yet so poorly learned—that the American people must make themselves so strong in their faith, and influential in their practice, that they will assimilate this influence of German thought and teaching to the genius of our institutions. It will be a shame if we permit those who come from across the sea to absorb our vitality, while they establish and confirm their own—their own being a living hostility to the faith of our fathers.

The Church and Amusements.

The Rev. Dr. Porteous, lately of London, who is now engaged in organizing a broad Episcopal church in Brooklyn, has, on the platform and through the press, been freely telling the American churches what attitude to assume towards theatres and amusements. Before giving his reasons, such as they are, why Christians should frequent the opera and theatre to participate in amusements which please the world, he takes occasion to have a fling at the Puritans of New England and the Covenanters of Scotland for the exacting discipline they exercise in their families. Without shame he introduces strangers to scenes in his father's house in Glasgow, which the misguided gentleman, unlike all other cultured gentlemen, seems to think is in good taste. It is a bad bird that fouls its own nest. We are told that paternal Porteous found it necessary on one occasion to tie fil Porteous to the bedstead, strip and whip him—a process followed by a diet of bread and water for three weeks. The act of disobedience, we are told by the son, was quite insignificant, which reminds us of the reply Sidney Smith made to an acquaintance who was tediously dwelling upon an encounter he had had with a bulldog: "I should like to hear," said the witty Dean, "the dog's story."

The Huguenots, the Covenanters, the Puritans: here we have three roots, from which have ascended a trunk and a foliage which have steadied and refreshed the last three centuries beyond any other combination of influences. Behold the wonders they have wrought. There are a few men here and there who are indebted to these for whatever masculinity they possess, ready to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage, and utter exaggerated stories against their parents and ancestors. These habits are entirely too broad and deep for our taste.

The doctor's panacea for ills and burdens of life consists in sanctifying and regulating the dance, the theatre, billards and cards, so that every disciple of the Lord Jesus who is earnestly employed in leading men heavenword, can in these pastimes find consistent recreation. Let us picture to ourselves the Apostles, Wesley, Edwards, McCheyne, Payson, Chalmers, Griffin, Nettleton, Alexander, McIlvaine, cheering their souls in this way. Who ever heard of such a thing, and yet were they not all men of vigor and joyfulness? Old Lyman Beecher was what might be called a gladsome Christian, and in him body and soul grew strong without any of the quack medicine which is offered by this Angelican for the contentment and elevation of the human family.

Some years ago, the Young Men's Christian Association of this country at one of its annual gatherings, recommended billard rooms as an agency to be employed in pruning and preserving young men for life's real work. A few years sufficed to show the fallacy of this method, and haste was made to recall the license which had been given, for the discovery was made that increased gambling and frivolity were the result. This has been tried and found wanting. As a general thing recreation should be found on the line of duty. Obedience, where the mind has been nurtured aright, is much more pleasurable than irksome. Disobedience, as in the Proteous family, always deserves sharp discipline. The joyful spirit, obeying and excelling in tasks, like Ellihu Burritt, is seldom comfortable with a game at cards. Wholesome exercise, cheerful conversation, combined with reading, lectures and music, are mines to be worked, in connection with spiritual things, if we would be happy ourseves, and lift the world to a higher plane.

Austria Enfranchised.

In an age of changes and revolution, in the overthrow of dynasties hoary with age, in the substitution of constitutional governments recognizing the will of the people and guaranteeing their rights, for the irresponsible, autocratic rule of a monarch claiming his throne by divine right, there has perhaps been none more amazing or entire than that which has taken place in the empire of Austria. A generation ago there was no power in Europe more subservient to the Vatican, or under more complete subjection to priests. They dominated all ranks, from the emperor to the beggar, from prince to peasant. So thoroughly did the rulers submit to their way and executes all the arrogant and intolerant decrees of the papal hierarchy, that its very name became a synonym of tyranny and oppression. The famous Concordat between the Pope and the Emperor, concluded in 1855, handed over by solemn treaty the dearest and best interests of the people to the absolute control of a bigotted priesthood. It provided that they should have exclusive control of all marriages and of the education of the children; that books should be under their censorship; that their priests should be independent of civil courts, and their churches free from taxation, and that they should receive largesses from the state revenues.

The Jesuits exulted in the success of their deep-laid scheme, which had thus constrained this proud and powerful empire to be their abject and willing vassal. The spirit of the age was, however, in direct opposition to their bigoted and illiberal policy. The Emperor, prejudiced and creed-bound though he was, the absolute head of one of the most powerful military despotisms of Europe, was taught by the bitter experience of successive and ignominious defeats, that if he would maintain his power he must enlarge, rather than restrain the liberties of his subjects; must permit them to follow the dictates of conscience, rather than compel them to assent to dogmas against which enlightened reason revolted. After endeavoring in vain to persuade the Pope to modify the Concordat, which was obnoxious to a large portion of his subjects, he bravely dared to take his position as a Constitutional, instead of an absolute ruler. He placed an eminent Protestant statesman at the head of affairs, and the Empire at once began to take a new position among the enlightened nations of Europe. Reform after reform was inaugurated; the provisions of the Concordat were quietly ignored or overthrown by vote of the national legislature; and though far from becoming a Protestant nation, it entered on a new period of progress and prosperity such as it had never enjoyed under the crushing incubus of priestly supremacy.

Another step in advance has now been taken by the Austrian government. In January last the Cabinet prepared a series of ecclesiastical bills to be presented to the Reichsrath, in which they formerly declared that the Concordat, with its obnoxious usurpations, is entirely abolished, and in which they provide for the supply and support of the church officials, bringing them, like all other citizens, under the control of the civil law, and also provide for the legal recognition and protection of any form of religion whose doctrines are not opposed to law and public morals.

Such a revolt from the domination of the church of of an empire so reliable as had been Austria, and by an emperor as faithful as had been Francis Joseph, created intense consternation at the Vatican. The Pope issued an Encyclical protesting against the passage of the bills, and calling upon the bishops to resist them by every means in their power. He complains that the proposed measures will place the church in "ruinous servitude," which is just the position in which it has held every people over whom it has exercised its oppressive power. He raises the cry of "persecution," that comes with such ill-grace from a hierarchy that has never brooked opposition, and justifies the keen rebuke of Prince Bismark to the Ultra-Romanists in the Prussian Parliament; "Unfortunately you are accustomed to complain of oppression whenever not permitted to lord it over others." The Pope also wrote a private letter to the Emperor, pleading with him to protect the church in his dominion.

When the question came up to be decided, Herr Stremeyer, Minister of Worship, declared that the bills were not designed to oppress the Catholic church, but to protect the state from intrigues against it, and to prevent the ministers of God from becoming the missionaries of an organized opposition to the laws of the country, and that the government wished the church to freely exercise her holy mission without encroaching on the inviolable rights of the state. Although the Roman Catholics had an immense majority in the Parliament, the government was sustained by a vote of more than three to one. The bishops at once withdrew from the Assembly, and are now endeavoring to organize resistance and opposition to the bills. That their efforts to roll back the tide of progress and enlightenment will avail we cannot believe. The spirit of the Dark Ages still lingers in the Vatican, and its blind dependents would continue to reenact its oppressive and restrictive mandates. But the sunlight cannot be shut out by Papal edicts, and a free Bible and a free press are proving more powerful than bulls and threats. The days of priestcraft and ignorance have passed, and the church that now claims supremacy must submit its arrogant claims to enlightened scrutiny and investigation. The Bible is now the supreme test. If the Papacy can stand that infallible test, well; if not, it must yield to that which shows that it has the life and spirit, as well as the name of the Master.—Am. Messenger.

A fight is always to be excused if it knocks down a sinner with conviction, stops a thoughtless crowd to consider, and closes with the benediction of repentance and forgiveness. How much would Spain prize a conflict of ideas! According to her last census, out of her 16,000,000 population 12,000,000 could not read and write. Miasmatic stagnation! Church senile and rheumatic, hibernating in the cave of the Middle Ages. Oh for a discussion!—a religious turmoil. These troubles subsidize for a time the secular press to religious discussion, and arouse the masses to religious thought. It wakes up fossil preachers, who scour off the rust and oil up for a fresh, direct shot. It breaks the monotony of that lazy, shambling prayer of the soporific saint until it begins to snap and crack like a plank walk on a frosty morning. It enables the church to rediscuss and settle her proprieties of polity and doctrine. It excites a wholesome nostalgia for the inner sanctuary of the household of faith. It sloughs a skin of the old snake, and though he looks handsomer, he has one less year to live.—Advance.

The following persons were then elected officers of the Association for one year: Joseph R. Bennett, President; Rev. Isaac Weeks, Thomas Baldwin, Sr., Jeremiah Howell, Vice-presidents ; Enoch Beals, Esq., Treas.; William Hall, Sec'y.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

We your committee on resolutions would respectfully submit the following report:—Whereas, Secretism is exerting a wide-spread and most potent influence for evil through our land and nation, an influence detrimental alike to the church and the state; and,

Whereas, the secret fraternity is in our midst are so thoroughly organized and thereby so fully prepared to counteract all the healthy influences which are the legitimate effects of the church and state, but for these militating influences that we deem it the indispensable duty of every law abiding citizen and Christian to use every laudable effort to oppose and overthrow these iniquitous organizations and thereby perpetuate the blessings of the Christian church and the sacredness of the civil government based upon Christian principles, untarnished by the hand of murderous, secret plotting, to our generation and our children who are to follow us. Therefore Resolved: 1st. That it is the sense of this Convention that every true friend of this reform movement should use their utmost endeavors to meet this common enemy of God and man, by the use of all laudable means.

2. That in order to meet suceessfully this entrenched and well-fortified foe, it is of the utmost importance that we seek to effect anti-secret organizations all over our State.

3. That we especially urge all our friends to give their hearty co-operation in effecting at as early a period as posticable the organization of this State, this we deem to be of paramount importance in order to give tone to our movement.

4th. That we will give our State Agent our sympathy and hearty co-operation in effecting county and township organizations and will lend him our unreserved aid in securing for him a comfortable support for himself and family in his labor among our people.

5th. That we heartily indorse the action of the Executive Committee in appointing Rev. D. S. Caldwell as our State Agent and Lecturer; and that we will devoutely pray for the blessing of God upon his labors in this department of God's Zion.

6th. That we recommend the appointment by this Convention of delegates to the National Convention to meet at Syracuse, N. Y., on the 2d of June next.

LOCKPORT, Ill., May 25, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

Our good friend, Rev. H. H. Hinman, called about two weeks ago on his way to Wisconsin and gave us a lecture on Sunday evening; subject: "The Relations of Secret Societies to Christianity and their Influence on Christian Religion." The day and evening were rainy, and the evening very dark and the audience was small, but we had an excellent lecture.

He returned last Saturday and gave us another lecture on "The Character of Masonry and the Forms of Initiation." The lecture was duly advertised during the day to be held in the Baptist church. But at the hour for meeting it was found that the bell could not be rung, the rope being broken, and the sexton could not at the time repair it. The consequence was our friends even did not suppose the lecturer had come, and we had another small meeting, only some twenty-five to forty. But Mr. H. gave us another good lecture; one that recommended itself to all unbiased minds.

The lecturer at the close invited reply or remarks which drew out one gentleman, a Mason and Knight Templar, but he was so much excited as hardly to talk intelligently; but said a few rather severe personal things.

On the whole we fell that we are making progress even in Lockport. For, five years ago, when young Mr. Blanchard came here to lecture, we could not obtain one of the seven or eight churches to meet in, and not a clergyman in the place would read a notice from his desk for us. Now the different clergymen cheerfully and respectfully read our notices for meetings, and the doors of the churches are flung open to us, and we have already held meetings in two of them. For these favors our clergy and church authorities have our thanks, and we will hope for a continuation of them until the truth and these great questions shall reach the heads and hearts of all the people. Fraternally yours,

ISAAC PRESTON.

DEER LICK, O., May 23, 1874.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard:

DEAR BRO:—The cause is prospering here. The Presbyterian church is coming nobly to our aid, the Evangelicals (Albrights) are with us to a man, and I have just heard of a Campbellite minister in this county who has spoken out against the lodge. Bro. Joseph Neil, our (Winebrennerian) minister, informed me recently that he does not know of one Masonic minister in this eldership. Their eldership meets in West Unity next fall, at which time it is hoped an anti-secrecy resolution will be introduced. I wish you could attend that eldership (Winebrennerian for Conference) as it is expected that a great many ministers will be there. I shall write you again of this matter as I cannot give the exact time just now. It is a significant fact that since our movement here, a great many Masons deny their identity with the craft and don't seem to know anything more of Masonry than Peter at one time seemed to know of the Master. Some of them are ready to deny with an oath and even curse and swear. One of my nearest neighbors, who heard you and Bro. Kiggins speak, said recently that Odd-fellowship as far as he had been, had cost him just thirty-seven dollars in money, besides time; had never benefitted him any; and, said he, "I shall never visit the lodge again." The Pioneer lodge is evidently losing ground very fast, especially in regard to respectability. The better class of men care not ounting much on lodge influence for popularity. But the most potent influence, the hope of our cause, is the favor of Jehovah and the labor of the true ministers of Christ.

There is here a great commotion in the M. E. church in regard to secret societies. Many of their best members, devout men and women, seriously object to Masonic ministers. Some of their very best paying members positively refuse to pay quarterage to the false prophets who deny Christ. I have now in mind two who are falling behind in salary from this cause, and one M. E. minister who keeps the faith opposes Satan and his lodges is winning souls to Christ and being well supported. Yours for the war,

H. S. KIRK.

From Bartholomew County, Ind.

HARTSVILLE, Ind., May 27, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The Bartholomew County Christian Association opposed to secret societies met in semi-annual meeting in the Chapel of Hartsville University, May 15, 1874, at 6 o'clock, P. M.; opened by singing and prayer, by Rev. D. Shuck, after which the Rev. Wm. M. Givens, of Clay county, Ind., was introduced to the audience, and gave a short but forcible lecture on the principles and religion of Odd-fellowship: After which the Association adjourned to meet at 10 A. M.

MAY 16.—Met pursuant to adjournment. Opened by singing and prayer by Dr. Wray, followed by a season of devotion. After which Rev. Wm. M. Givens gave a very able lecture on the antiquity and religion of Masonry, clinching every proposition by uncontrovertable testimony, to the satisfaction of all, Masons and "jacks" excepted.

The afternoon session convened at 6 P. M. Prayer by Dr. Wray. On motion the Association appointed S. B. Irwin a delegate to the National Convention. On motion there were three delegates elected to attend the State Association, namely: H. Wray, J. W. Bline and A. H. K. Beam.

Next proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: Rev. Daniel Shuck, President, (re-elected.) J. S. Funkhouser, David Huffer and A. H. K. Beam, Vice-presidents; Recording Secretary, J. W. Bline; Corresponding Secretary, Hardy Wray. On motion it was agreed to raise a collection to defray the expenses of Bro. Givens. After which Bro. Givens proceeded to open the lodge to the amusement and entertainment of the large audience; leading the candidate up to the third degree. After which the Association adjourned.

Suffer me by way of closing remarks to say that Brother Givens did honor to himself and the cause which he has espoused, both in his lectures, and also two sermons which he preached in the chapel on Sabbath. The Lord bless Bro. Givens, and he be in the hand of God a power in pulling down the strongholds of the devil.

HARDY WRAY, Sec'y.

What it Was. The Devil's Legion of Honor on Dress Parade.

FROM THE INDIANA AGENT.

Oh! look! look! Just see! exclaimed the passengers who sat next to the windows, as the train entered the Union Depot; while those who sat further away from that medium of occular communication with the outside world tried in vain to get a "look." Being so fortunate as to occupy a seat alone, I had the benefit of a whole window.

Upon looking out, I found that the depot was literally filled with a living mass of humanity of both sexes and every age and color. As the train moved in the crowd divided and swayed back like a wave, and now appeared to our view the cause of the vast gathering and the intense sensation that manifestly prevailed. A few men, not exceeding a hundred in all, divided into companies, under control of persons who seemed from their movements to be "captains over fifties" and "captains over tens," were drawn up in military array. They wore three-cornered hats, each trimmed with a fine, costly feather fastened in front, and extending over the top to the back part. These hats were of black silk plush, or beaver; the brims were fastened up at each side, and adorned with a silver cross. In addition to this each had on a silken sash of pure white, the edges trimmed with red, which extended over the right shoulder and under the left arm, connecting with a red belt which fastened in front with a handsome silver buckle. To this was suspended a sword incased in a scabbard of plated silver, which was decorated with chains of the same rich looking material. Then each one had on white gloves with long cuffs ornamented with silver crosses, and black boots, the tops of which were similarly marked. On the left breast was a broad ribbon of silk, six inches long, marked with various mysterious devices, such as crosses, skulls and crossed-bones, etc., etc.

Verily, from the display of crosses one might have supposed them to be the Pope's body-guard. Upon stepping off the train I approached one who seemed from his stately figure to be a "centurion," and meekly asked him the occasion of all this array. He informed me with dignity that savored both of whisky and tobacco, that it was the anniversary of "Commandery No. 1, of Knights Templar" of this city, and that these were Knights from different parts of the country, some from Louisville, some from Cincinnati, etc., come to join in celebrating the day.

The Centurion manifested great satisfaction in seeing me eye his equipage, and turned himself round, that I might see it all, much as a child shows its "new shoes." He seemed pleased with my inquisitiveness, until I asked him if "the Knights anticipated war?" Upon his answering in the negative, I asked, "Why then, do you all carry swords?" Perceiving at once that I was a "barbarian," with "dignified silence" he turned upon his heel and walked away.

I was informed that six hundred Sir Knights were in the city, so I thought I would go and "see them march." There were some ten or a dozen companies, each representing a commandery, each carrying its own banners, and each headed by a band of music; all the companies marching down Washington street, all the banners waving, all the bands playing, and all the fools gaping. Vast crowds moved along the sidewalks, and each side of the street; some drove carriages along in the rear. Thus with gay pageantry and ignorant admiration the throng moved along Washington street to Deleware, then north, and so on to the Fair Grounds, where they are to enjoy the presence and the eloquence of their orators, whose speeches are as stereotyped as the landmarks of the order, which, like the "laws of the Medes and Persians, change not." After counting the "Knights" as nearly as I could, I found them to be about five hundred strong.

How awful to see five hundred strong men, all armed and drilled in the most approved military style, some infidels, some ministers, some bloated with dissipation; all having sworn to keep the secrets of each, murder and treason not excepted; all having drank wine from the cavity of a human skull, and with the horrid draught imprecated a twofold, eternal damnation on their souls, in case they should not keep their wicked oaths!! To think of it is to shudder!

Remember too that these are only a few of the armed Knights under the absolute sway of nine men, known as sovereigns; that they own many buildings in different cities of the Union which are closed effectually against the authorities of the government, and may be turned into arsenals, in which to store arms and munitions for the subjugation of the nation to the universal empire of Masonry! Is such a power to be looked upon lightly? Do you say the number of men controlled is not sufficient? Bear you in mind that every member of the order, from the Fellow Craft up, is sworn to OBEY HIS MASTERS; thus the army of Knights, and Royal Arch Masons, are backed up in whatever they may contemplate by a strong groundwork of "hewers of wood and drawers of water" who are constantly being recruited. And the success of a conspiracy to revolutionize governments does not depend so much upon the number of conspirators, as upon the cunning disposal and use of a comparatively small number. The history of the world shows that the few have been enabled to enslave the many, by means of deep laid and well organized secret plots; none of which have ever been more admirably adopted to such an end than the Masonic conspiracy in the United States. In the evening our Knights repaired to the "Hotel Bates," where a banquet of the most superb character was prepared at an enormous expense, after which those of the Knights who love to "trip the light fantastic toe" engaged in "chasing the glowing hours with flying feet."

The money expended in this one display and festival, amounted to more, vastly more, than the whole fraternity has given for charitable purposes within the last year! Masonic invalids may become public charges; those who are poor be suspended for non-payment of dues; widows and orphans be rejected; but, mark you, a Masonic festival must be celebrated, without regard to expense.

Hon. P——, who has been a member of the order, but like many others becoming disgusted with it, has left it, said to me of this procession of Knights, "When I first saw them, I thought they were Catholics, they were so profusely ornamented with the cross." In speaking of their religious character he said, "Masonry is a blending together of some of the doctrines of Christianity, some of Judaism, and much of paganism, in such a manner that they can never be separated; and it stands directly in the way of the church."

May God open the eyes of the American people, that they may behold the conspiracy of this crafty order, as it operates under the mask of benevolence and honor.

Yours for a Christianity and a government free from lodge rule,

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

OUR MAIL.

T. W. J. Logan, Nashville, Ill., writes: "C. M. Livesay and myself with a few friends have undertaken the organization of an anti-secret society."

He says that about twenty persons met in their school house, the appointment having been given out previously, and after opening remarks the address on "Grand Lodge Masonry" was read. Mr. Livesay read a paper entitled "Thoughts by the Wayside," and after other remarks the announcement was made that they would meet again the first Monday evening in June, and that some anti-secret literature would be distributed, and a preamble and constitution would be presented and members received. He adds, "We opened our meeting with the song, 'Battling for the Lord,' and prayer."

"The orders are very strong in our county, but we have been reading the Cynosure for three years or more and we know just about what we have undertaken. We are the first in our county to organize, and our task is great. But our cause is greater and we are determined by the help of God to do our duty. . . . We are going to do all we can to circulate the Cynosure and advance the anti-secret movement."

We hope others will follow this example and organize societies wherever possible and organize them for active service.

J. W. Margrave, Salem, Neb., writes: "I am trying to get a few subscribers for you. . . . Times are hard and the influence of the crafts, harder. I was recently called to sit on a jury of six on a civil case, all were Masons except myself, and they were all a unit for acquital, the law and the testimony plainly to the contrary, the accused was a Mason of course. The result was the jury was hung and finally discharged without a verdict. I trust you may go on in exposing the abominations of secrecy till the public mind may be brought to see it in its true deformity."

Geo. Johnson, Raymond, Ia., wrtes: "I cannot think of parting with the paper. I am taking several papers, weekly and monthly, and I would part with the whole sooner than give up the Cynosure. You may set me down a life subscriber, though that may not be long, as I am seventy-two. From the days of the Morgan tragedy, hatred to secret societies, especially Masonry, has grown with my years, to say I hate the whole generation of vipers feebly expresses my feelings. By all means let us have a (political) organization. I voted for James G. Birney in 1840, did not vote for Grant last election, never expected to vote with any of the old parties again. I want men tried and true. I want men, God-fearing men, hating covetousness; we have them. They are not for sale. O how I would like to be at Syracuse to see and hear that noble body of men that will be there on that occasion; but cannot, and there are many that feel as I do but we will send up prayer to God to guide in all your deliberations. This work has God for its author and will succeed."

Moses Gallup, Wassioga, Minn., writes, that for him, the only sure way to obtain subscribers is, by giving papers and lending books beforehand. He sends five more obtained where he had previously sown such seed.

Wm. Davis, E. Trumbull, O., who has read the Cynosure from its earliest existence, writes:

"The Cynosure is just what is necessary to throw light upon the works of darkness. Secrecy hates it as the owl hates the noonday sun; and as the owl commits her depredations in the absence of the light of day, so secrecy seeks the cover of night to lay its anti-republican and unchristian-like plots by which it seeks to benefit itself at the expense of the honest and unsuspecting. But unlike the owl it assumes glitter and show, and makes professions of charity with windy titles of place and honor. So that if it were possible it would deceive the very elect. The anti-secret principle is gaining ground in our community, yet men are afraid to have it known that they are taking a paper that exposes the lodge."

Jacob Rasor, Lockington, O., writes:

"I do not say with some in the Cynosure, you are in a good work. We are in a good work, by the help of God let us go on."

Oliver Macy, W. Milton, O., writes:

"I am doing something in the way of agitating the cause by talking and by distributing tracts. An expelled Mason told me not long since that Masonry led to infidelity; and a seceder of nine degrees told me yesterday, when I handed him two tracts, that the devil sits at the head of the meeting, meaning the lodge. Not long since I had a discussion on the cars with an old Methodist preacher, which caused considerable interest on the part of others and a call for tracts. I want more tracts for distribution. I would like to have them by return mail as I contemplate attending the Bible School Conference of Indiana."

We hope others will not fail to be provided with tracts, Cynosures and subscription papers at these meetings.

D. R. Miller, Pleasant Home, O., writes:

"I am very well pleased with it (the Cynosure) and have been trying to get subscribers. . . . I am determined to do all I can. Though I am young I feel that the Lord is on my side. Bro. Stoddard was through here about a year ago and waked up the Masons in West Salem, a town of about four or five hundred inhabitants out of which above one hundred are Freemasons, and quite a number are Odd-fellows. We wish he would pass this way again."

Thos. Johnston, Petrolia, Pa , sends us twenty-five three months subscribers, and writes:

"Some of them say they are going to join the lodge; others are members and starting a grange. I hope the Cynosure will open their eyes and do much good, as I know it to have done in preventing some of our friends from joining in the past."

John H. Frazee, Milton, Ind., writes:

"I like the paper much. The first I read out of six different ones I am taking. Expect to be a life subscriber."

E. Gould, Pillar Point, N. Y., sends for tracts and writes, "I like your paper very much."

E. L. Dilley, Spencerville, Ind, writes of a Masonic address in which he understood the speaker to represent Christ a Freemason. It seems strange that a man could have wickedness enough to do such an impious act. When even intelligent Masonic authority represent Freemasonry as less than two hundred years old.

Mrs. Rev. J. T. Kiggins, Ligonier, Ind., writes:

"We think so much of the dear Cynosure it does not seem to me that I could keep house without it."

Jas. Burge, Crown Point, Ind., writes:

"Having taken the Cynosure for several years I can say that I am well pleased with the paper, and more so since its enlargement. I am pleased with the reform movement and its outspoken principles. I will try to do what I can to give your paper a circulation. I have got four here in town to take it."

J. P. Shattuck, East Deering, Me., writes:

"I think I can get a number of subscribers for your paper. There is already quite an aversion gaining ground in this vicinity against the society of Masons. And their influence is rather deprecated.

"A large mass of the people do not understand the influence which they (that is the Masons) have upon our politics, our courts, our lawyers, and even our ministers and churches. They simply want enlightenment on the question to take the right course in regard to it. I will assure you I shall spare no pains to disseminate the good seed which I am sure I shall receive in your paper. I am an earnest opposer of all secret societies, thinking them pernicious to the general welfare of the public. The brotherhood of mankind is or should be man, not Masons."

We are all glad to welcome another worker-in this important and glorious field, from the State of Maine. Three weeks ago we had only six subscribers in this State, now we have eighteen. Do not such results incite to greater effort? We hope our friends in Maine will not let the increase of subscribers in their State fall short of six per week all through the summer.

W. J. Dallas, Salineville, O., writes:

"I am very much pleased with it, the Cynosure, as to its form and substance. It is better worth the price than any paper I read. But Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, are so prevalent here in this place, that the masses would think that mill stones would come from above if they would become subscribers for the Anti-masonic papers; but follow your course, and God will speed you. I hope to hear a good report from the Syracuse Convention, such as will sound gloriously through the length and breadth of the land.

Forty Years Ago.

In connection with the National Anniversary the following from the report of the National Convention of 1831 will be of interest:

National Anti-masonic Convention.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 26, 1821.

At 12 o'clock, M. the delegates to the National Convention assembled in the saloon of the Athanaeum, and were called to order by the Hon. Judge Burt, of N. Y., when the Hon. Judge Rutherford was called to the chair, and the following officers being nominated were unanimously chosen.

John C. Spencer, N. Y. President; John Rutherford, N. Y., 1st. Vice-president; Jonathan Sloane, Ohio, 2d Vice-president; Thomas Elder, Penn. 3d. Vice-president, John Bailey, Mass., 4th Vice-president.

Benj. F. Hallett, R. I. }
E. D. Barber, Vt. } Secretaries.
J. C Levitt, Conn. }
Caleb Emery, N. H. }

On taking the chair, Mr. Spencer addressed the Convention as follows:

Gentlemen,—I return you my thanks for the distinguished honor you have conferred in calling upon me to preside over your deliberations. While I distrust my ability to the duties of the chair, I have yet learned in the school of Anti-masonry to decline no duty to which I may be called in the promotion of our great and growing cause. But my reliance, gentlemen, will be in your patriotism and urbanity to render the duties of the station light and easy. I ask your indulgence for any errors that may be committed, assuring you that nothing offensive to any member shall proceed from the chair, or be permitted in the deliberations of the Convention.

On motion of Mr. Morris, of N. Y., voted that a committee of three be appointed to invite the Hon. Chas. Carroll, of Carrolton, to take a seat in this Convention. Messrs. Rutherford, of N. J , Burt of N. Y., and Elder, of Penn., were appointed said committee.

On motion of Judge Hopkins, of N. Y., voted that Messrs. Hopkins, of N. Y., Jones, of Pa., and Walker of Mass., be a committee to wait on his Hon. Chief Justice Marshall, now in this city, and request his attendence on the sittings of this body.

Mr. Ward, from the committee, at the call of the Convention, submitted a report which was read and laid upon the table. The President of the Convention announced the appointment of the following committees: On Masonic Penalties—Hallet, of R. I., Larned, of Maine, Morris, of N. Y., Grimshaw, of Pa., and Warner, of Ohio. On Judicial Proceedings in the case of Morgan—J. C. Spencer, of N. Y., Ogle, of Pa., Walker, of Mass., Gibbons, of Del., and Russell, of N. Y. On the address to the people—Holly, of N. Y., Denny, of Pa., Levitt, of Conn. On publishing the proceedings—Phelps, of Mass., Hopkins, of N. Y., and Foote, of N. Y. On Finance.—Irwin, of Pa., Boynton, of Conn., Beckman, of N. Y., Jenins, of Ohio., Shriver, of Md.

The committee appointed to wait on Judge Marshall, reported by their chairman that they had seen that gentlemen, and that in reply to their invitation, his Honor politely stated that he should leave the city at 6 o'clock to-morrow morning, and therefore be unable to attend, although it would afford him great pleasure to do so. [His journey eastward having been delayed unexpectedly, he attended the Convention next morning.] . . . .

Tuesday, Sept. 27.

Chief Justice Marshall, Mr. Wirt, and other distinguished citizens, appeared in the hall and took seats assigned them on the right of the President.

The President announced that the reports upon the Masonic Penalties and upon the Judicial Proceedings in the case of Wm. Morgan, were in order for consideration. Mr. Foote, of N. Y., took the floor and spoke in favor of the reports. Mr. Hallett, of R. I., addressed the Convention upon the reports under consideration. Mr. Ward, of N. Y., Mr. Morris, of N. Y., Mr. Seward, of N. Y., Mr. Walker, of Mass., and Mr. Harvey, of Pa , followed on the same subject. The speakers respectively displayed much persuasive and fervid eloquence during the discussion, and were listened to with great attention by a numerous and highly respectable audience; and among them were many of the Masonic fraternity, who both in and out of the Convention, and to their praise be it spoken, have exibited a courteous, mild, and gentlemanly deportment.

Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1831.

The National Anti-masonic Convention this day proceeded to the nomination of candidates for the office of President and Vice-president of the United States. The vote by ballott was taken about 12 o'clock. The result was as follows:—

For President, Wm. Wirt, of Maryland, received 108 out of 111 votes, and for Vice-president, Amos Ellmaker, of Pa., received 108 votes. A vote was then taken declaring these gentlemen to be the unanimous choice of the Convention. Messrs. Rutherford, of N. J., Elder, of Pa., and Sloane, of Ohio, were appointed a committee to wait on Mr. Wirt to announce to him the nomination. The committee reported that he would give an answer in writing at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Messrs. Bailey, of Mass., Lyman, of N. Y., and Shriver, of Maryland, were appointed a committee to wait on Mr. Ellmaker to inform him of the nomination. The committee reported that Mr. Ellmaker, who is now in the city, will reply in writing early this afternoon.

LESSON XXVI.—JUNE 14, 1874.—THE TRUE PROPHET.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—Deut. xviii. 9-16. Commit 9-16 ; Primary Verse, 15.

9. When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

10 There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch.

11 Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.

12 For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee.

13 Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God.

14 For these nations, which thou shalt possess, hearkened unto observers of times, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the Lord thy God hath not suffered thee so to do.

15 The Lord thy God will raise up unto the a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken;

16 According to all that thou desiredst of the Lord thy God in Horeb in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the Lord my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

The fifth book of Moses is called Deuteronomy, from two Greek words meaning the law repeated. It may be called the book of experience. It is the message of God to Israel as his people. They are to be blessed or punished, as they obey or disobey. We left Israel on the march around Edom ; they are now in the plains of Moab, opposite Jericho.

What is the first topic? Who occupied the land before Israel. (Jos. xii., xiii.) They were worshipers of idols. Baal was the principal deity. What is their idolatry called in this lesson? How did God regard them? (verse 12.)

What is the second topic? What names are given to them in our lesson? Which commandment forbids such teachers? What punishment was visited upon them? (verse 12.) What instance is given of the destruction of the priests of Baal? (1 Kings xviii. 40.) Had Israel ever worshiped idols? (Ex. xxxii.)

What is the third topic? The word prophet means one who speaks from God, —one who is inspired. Who was the new prophet to be like? (verse 15.) What prophets can you name? How did the Jews treat God's prophets? (Matt. xxiii. 34–37; Heb. xi. 32–40.) How did the prophets receive the persecution? (James v. 10.)

What is the fourth topic? How do we know that Jesus is the prophet Moses spoke of? (Acts iii. 20–26; Acts vii. 37.) What was the first promise referring to Christ? (Gen. iii. 15.) What was the prophesy of Jacob? (Gen. xlix. 10.) How was Moses like Christ? What is said in our lesson of his works? What is said Matt. xvii. 7? What is said Heb. i. 1–7? What Heb. xii. 25? What do you say?

Lessons. Jesus must be our teacher. He only knows the way, he only can guide us aright. He is willing to teach me. I must listen to him or be lost.

The Consecration of Teachers.

BY GEO. H. COCHRAN.

While theologians are gravely discussing the question: "Shall we permit laymen to preach?" and insisting upon seven long years of hard study and a faultless knowledge of nice distinctions of the schools as pre-requisites to clerical privileges, a perfect army of lay preachers, bearing aloft the spotless banner of a pure gospel, gleaming with the words "Jesus only," is enthusiastically obeying the order of the Great Captain: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go FORWARD."

That army of lay-preachers is found every Sabbath in our Sabbath-schools. Their audiences are young souls—so young that the hand which deftly guides the juicy tendril is master of its future destiny. It is growing whither it is turned. It is taken from the sunlight it will live a dwarfed, etiolated thing which death will quickly conquer. That army of lay-preachers possesses a power antecedent to that of the ordained minister, who generally comes after and talks above the children. Those very wee brains dare not try to climb theological pyramids or follow some "original thinker" to

> "Bottomless vales and boundless floods,
> And chasms and caves and Titan woods,
> With forms that no man can discover
> For the dews that drip all over;
> Mountains toppling evermore
> Into seas without a shore."

Our Sabbath-school teachers may be defined as the first books which children read outside of their homes. Father, mother, brother, sister are read first. This is as it should be; this is instinctive. It is, also, quite frequently fatal to the child. Home pictures are, alas, too often inglorious pictures which a little one had better never see. I remember once seeing a package of pictures on small cards, all of which, as you looked at them in your hand, revealed some sweet domestic scene; but when they were held up to the light were full of horrors. For instance: a peaceful family scene of father, mother, children, and friends, held up before a lamp, showed hideous demon forms, black as night, curled up under the chairs or perched behind the father or mother, or fighting in a corner.

The little ones see these demons very quickly and draw their own conclusions. So they are repelled from these first sources of impressions. Alas! in these days many professedly Christian families have so effectually destroyed the realization of a "home" that the Sabbath-school is, in thousands of instances, the place of first religious impression upon the children of professing Christians. Then, of necessity, the Sabbath-school teachers occupy a most solemn and responsible position. Think of it! They give to thousands of children (especially those teachers engaged in the mission work) the first invitation to Jesus. I cannot conceive of a more solemn office.

If this is true and we fully comprehend its seriousness, we are ready, of course, to ask the question, Are these Sabbath-school teachers all proper persons to train the young vine to clime a heaven-reaching trellis? Are they living epistles for the little ones to read, mark and inwardly digest. Do they go to these learners from the feet of Jesus where they have been learners themselves?

Do they go to them redolent with the sweet incense of prayer and consecration? Ah! that is the word—CONSECRATION. Teacher of young souls! Preacher of Christ's Gospel to the most impressible of audiences! It is easy, so easy to say "Come to Jesus," but can you tell the little ones just how to come to him? Can you picture the blessedness of "coming," from your own brimming experience? Can you show them "the King in his beauty in the land which is very far off?"

You can do all this if your soul and body have been offered a living sacrifice to God. If you have not made this offering you may be the murderer of souls. We may trifle with souls but we do so at our peril. Are you consecrated to this preaching of Christ's tender love and sympathy? That is the vital question which we must answer in the affirmative, or else in honor we are bound to relinquish the work until we can look into the loving face of Christ and say: "I give up all for thee, my Jesus!" There is, moreover, no greater peril for man or woman's soul than to engage in the work merely to pass away the time or because others do it. Out of neither of these reasons can be woven a wedding garment. The glaring obstacle is, that you cannot lead these souls a single inch upon a way where you have never set your words and never examined the chart thereof. Shall death find you murmuring nursery rhymes and drawling platitudes to the half dozen or more impressible souls who, it may be, were once ready to hear and accept the first earnest entreaty and invitation to come to Christ? No! dear teachers, realize that the moment you took your place before your class, you placed yourself in the number of the ambassadors for Christ, in a lesser sphere it may be, than the pastor of a church, but having a commission to make that sphere ring with willing adoration of the Name whose utterance brings the angels to their knees.—Natl. S. S. Teacher.

Home and Health Hints.

Give Them Sunshine.—My sister, if you have daughters growing up, don't be afraid of the sunshine. Let it come freely into your house—it will bring with it neither malaria, contagion, nor death. On the other hand it will bring only cheerfulness on its laughing pinions—you can't be sad in a beautiful room all ablaze with sunlight. True, it may kick a tint out of your unstably colored carpet, now and then, but let them go—they are as nothing compared to the blessings which sunlight alone can bring to the household. Take away your dark curtains and pass the invigorator in. Move the vines off the window—a window is made for the admission of light and not to fill the office of a trellis for vines. If you must have a carpet with gay colors, buy one that will stand the test—there are plenty such. If they cost a little extra don't mind it—a sickly daughter will eventually cost you, or somebody else more than the extras on a dozen fadeless carpets would amount to. Yes, mothers, give your children the sunshine. You could not give them a gift which would cost you less, nor yet one qualified to profit them more. It will make them what we call in the country tough and hardy. They require sunshine just as much as plants do. All scientific persons are now united in this decision. The world is full of delicate and weakly women, and my word for it, more of the cause lies in an effort on our part to make "fair ladies" of our daughters than anything else.—Mrs. Mary C. West, in Mobile Register.

A house should be so placed that the direct rays of the sun shall have free admission into the living apartments, because the sun's rays impart a healthy and invigorating quality to the air, and stimulate the vitality of human beings as they do that of plants, and without sunlight human beings, as well as plants, would sicken and die. The aspect therefore, should be south-east.

Hanging Baskets.—Rustic hanging baskets can be made thus: Take a small wooden bowl and nail small pieces of grapevine neatly around it; this makes a neat and useful basket, and when filled with some pretty plant, looks as well as a more expensive basket.

To Clean Silver.—Dr. Elsner says that hot water poured off potato parings or boiled potatoes is admirably adapted to clean silver. The object can be easily rubbed by the fingers with the settlings of potato meal, and they become as bright as they usually do when rubbed with tripoli. The process is particularly advantageous for engraved and raised objects, where the powder is liable to collect in the cavaties. German silver and plated ware can be cleaned in the same way. Potato water which has become sour by long standing can be substituted for acids to clean copper vessels.

Cookies.—One cup sugar, one-half cup lard, one-half cup sour milk, half teaspoon soda, season to taste, roll thin, bake quick.

Farm and Garden.

A Convenient Way to Measure Land.

It is frequently desirable to measure a given plot of ground or a portion of a field, and a simple method, such as the following, for which we are indebted to an exchange, will be of use to many of our readers. Surveyors are not always at a convenient distance to attend to such little jobs, and even when they do reside in the immediate vicinity one does not always care to incur the expense incident to such a small job. If the lines are already established, the plot can be measured with sufficient accuracy for all practical purposes by means of a neat rod pole, made as follows: Procure a stick of pine, white-wood, bass-wood, or almost any other timber, one and a half inches square and sixteen and a half feet long. Dress each end, tapering from the middle, so that the pole will be one and a half inches square at the middle and about half an inch square at each end. Such a pole will be light and quite stiff. Now graduate one side with the marks representing feet and inches, and graduate another side to indicate a surveyor's links. A pole one rod in length must be equal to twenty-five links. To divide one side correctly, let a mechanic's compass be adjusted so that the points will divide the distance into twenty-five equal spaces or links. A line can be measured with such a pole nearly as accurately as with a surveyor's chain.

Now, then, if a person does not understand how to multiply chains and links, let him compute the measurement by square feet. In one acre there are 43,560 square feet. Any intelligent school-boy can measure the length and breadth of a square plot, multiply one by the other, and divide the product by 43,560 which will give the number of acres, and the number of square feet representing the fraction of an acre. If it is desirable to measure a triangular plot, two sides of which lie at right angles, measure these two sides, multiply the distance in feet one by the other, and divide that product by two, which will indicate the number of square feet, by 43,560, and the quotient will represent the number of acres.—Phrenological Journal.

Pruning.—Do not prune after the sap has commenced to circulate, and not until midsummer when the wounds heal over readily. If prune you must and will, cover all wounds with grafting wax, paint or some other preparation to exclude the air, otherwise decay will necessarily follow.

Canker Worms.—Watch the inroads of this pest of the fruit garden. Different methods have been contrived for circumventing this "varment." The simplest of which is a band of tarred paper (sticky,) tied around the trees in February or March, and the tarring renewed every week or so.

Tent Caterpillars.—Keep an eye on this scourge of the orchard and as soon as he prepares his foundation, go for him mith a brush or broom, dipped in coal oil; a solution of carbolic soap also has a demoralizing effect on the scamp. Delay is dangerous—action imperative.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, June 4, 1874.

CONGREGATIONALISTS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

The Illinois State Congregational Association has just held its annual session at Kewanee.

This body, along with those of Wisconsin, Iowa, Ohio, and two local associations in Michigan, has passed strong resolutions condemning the lodge; and also their Tri-ennial Convention which met April, 1873, in Chicago, which body represented the Congregationalists in eight States, passed an order desiring the Western Education Society not to aid students in the Theological Seminary who are Freemasons.

But the local churches, which are independent, are being honey-combed by the lodges; and hence in practice the religion of those churches is steadily giving way before the idolatry of the secret orders. Year before last the Illinois State Association had a prominent Odd-fellow for their Moderator, and within a year a Freemason of twenty-one degrees has become pastor of the Springfield church, where the Grand Lodge of Illinois has its seat. The lodge is now giving its profound attention to the Congregational churches of the State, and it has now a secret combination of Freemasons in the pulpits and churches of the denomination. I offered a resolution suggesting a series of articles in the Advance to enlighten the churches, and Gen. Howard, the publisher, assured them that such a resolution would have been received courteously and treated with respect. But the State Association rejected that resolution by a close vote! Thus refusing to ask the Advance to discuss these orders which are eating out the vitals of their churches in the ignorance and silence of their ministry.

This shows that our only hope is the Cynosure, under God, to save even Congregational churches; as nothing but full Christian discipline either can or will save them from destruction.

The proposition that the lodge is nearly and essentially a pagan Christless religion, is believed by thousands, and is met on the other side by silence, which is a confession of its truth. Excluding the discussion from the Advance, or admitting mere current notices of the discussion will soon split the churches as the slavery issue split them, mission boards and all. Let us hope for wiser and better things.

REFLECTIONS ON WITNESSING A MASONIC FUNERAL, MAY 21st, 1874.

Hark! the inspiring clangor of a brass band reverberates and echoes through the streets. It is a march they are playing. The notes become more distinct. The volume of the music swells louder and louder. They are coming this way. Oh, yes! see that tumultuous crowd of boys and men rushing along the side-walk. How the clarion blasts inspire them! Why, here are old men and ladies, church members, deacons, class leaders and stewards, confusedly crowding the side-walks, hurrying to keep along side of the band; gazing sideways, and occasionally glancing backward as if there was some object of interest behind it. "Hurrah!" says A. to B. "What 's up? What gala day is this?"

B.—"It is no gala day. I think it must be the funeral of an aged member of the Methodist church, who died suddenly day before yesterday."

A.—"Is that a dead march they are playing?"

B.—"I think not. I should say it is an ordinary and rather inspiriting sort of march. I detect no minor chords; and see how the crowd rush with heads up except when they stumble upon each other from looking back upon the procession. And note the pompous air with which the leader marches!"

A.—"And yet it is really a funeral, for there comes a coffin."

B.—"Yes, it is the funeral of the devout old Mr. G., which Masonry seizes upon to advertise itself by this most unseemly display. It is believed to be done without any request of his. The church, you see, has no part or lot in the matter. In this scattered route of outside spectators are nearly all its leading members. None of them, except perhaps two or three who wear the white apron, are permitted to have any part in burying this revered brother. What is Christian brotherhood compared to the Masonic? Yes, and what is natural brotherhood in this presence? Stand back, ye bigots of the church! Stand back, ye neighbors, brothers, children, wives! Make room for these who boast a nearer relation, a more sacred right to pay the last honors, and to show how much superior the love and friendship of their man-devised and artificial relation is to anything which pertains to the relations of nature or grace which God has ordained. Yes, and let Christian worship stand aside unless the worshipers are willing to acknowledge "Masonry divine," and accept the position of very humble, reverent appendages to the royal magnificence of this grand imperial order. Stand back! Vacate your seat, at least the places of honor, for the ancient and honorable lodge; outside seats may be condescendingly allowed to the mourners, and should any remain unoccupied, ladies and perhaps a few male cowans may be suffered to be seated in the agust presence. The Christian minister, if he is willing to degrade himself and his religion to a sort of third or fourth rate position of subserviency in a Masonic pageant, may have a space for his gospel and his prayer at the expense of having his sanctuary polluted with the abominations of pagan forms and emblems, his ritual of worship superceded by a ritual intensely and intentionally deistical, in the last supreme religious act of committing the departed church member to God and pronouncing the benediction of salvation. Father G. trusted, it is believed, in Christ, and regarded His church and its divinely appointed services as the means, and the only means of grace and salvation. But Masonry has the fiendish audacity to assume the closing religious act in reference to him on earth, in which Christ and his church are wholly set aside and absolutely insulted. The natural inference from which is, that whatever Masonry may personally profess or believe, yet Masonry is more holy, more saving, more needful, in the home and article of death, than Christianity. What mean ye, O ye professed disciples of the one ONLY Saviour, that ye suffer the rights and duties of the sacred Christian brotherhood to be thus insultingly wrested from you and your sanctuary trodden thus under foot of the gentiles? What mean ye, O ye ordained defenders of the faith and order of the church, that ye suffer yourselves to be paraded at the tail of the procession of the hosts of Baal; and the burial service of your church to give place to a ritual designedly adapted to the spiritual tastes of the worshipers of all the false gods of this revolted world? Do you mean that your sanctuaries shall be utterly polluted? That faith in the gospel you preach as the only saving religion, shall be utterly extinguished? Do you mean that your church shall become in all things wholly conformed to the world and come to esteem their religion as no better than that of the deist? That Christianity shall first be utterly paganized and then more utterly condemned than paganism itself, as salt that has lost its savor, is denied a place even in a dung hill? Believe me, whatever you intend, such is the tendency of this base truckling to the satanic impudence of the dark orders. You suffer deceivers, the children of Satan, to vaunt themselves in your holy places, and in your most sacred solemnities, and in hypocrisy to trample them both under their unhellowed feet. Whatever you intend, in such conduct there is treason to Christ and the cause of true Godliness. If you wake not to a realization of this terrible fact and to repentance concerning it, rest assured Christ will awake to judgment, and will vindicate his honor against those who so impiously disgrace him, and those who so tamely and weakly give place to the devil.

IS BISHOP STEVENS A FANATIC?

The nineteenth annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, Pennsylvania diocese, met in Philadelphia week before last. Bishop Stevens in his annual address made no secret of his episcopal transactions, even though they may be a rank offense to hundreds of so-called pastors who are graceless enough to be outfaced by the devil when the lodge wants admission to the church. The report of the meeting says:

"Referring to certain secret organizations within the church, the Bishop said he had refused to receive at the Holy Communion young men who belonged to secret societies existing within the church, and his reason for so doing was that the machinery of these organizations was used to advance the interests of Ritualism and Romanism. The church need no help from secret bodies. The Bishop said that he had no objection to guiles and benevolent societies where there is no pledge of secrecy."

Temperance and Good Templarism.

SANDOVAL, Ill.

Editor Cynosure:

In the 2d column on 1st page of April 2d, the writer says that Good Templarism and Masonry hindered the temperance reform in Massachusetts for years. That Good Templarism ever hindered the temperance causeis disputed. I wish to have you tell us how itwas hindered in Massachusetts by Good Templarism.

Yours very truly, SUBSCRIBER.

Another inquiry has been sent of like import. Dr. Charles Jewett, now retired from public life by age was for many years the leading temperance reformer of this country. His opinions on the subject are second to none other. Since leaving the lecture field he has published a volume of reminiscences "Forty Years Fight with the Drink Demon." He acknowledges being connected with the secret temperance order, but says their influence is just as described in the Cynosure of April 2d. Extracts from the work were published May 2d, 1872. But any who are doubtful about the charge against the Good Templars should get and read Dr. Jewett's book. His statements have been often substantiated in the experience of our correspondents.

Masonic Institutions.

LETTSVILLE, Iowa.

I have been an opposer of secrecy for years, but I have never seen so much of its corruption as of late. They boast of their benevolence and public spirit; will you please inform your readers if they ever built or owned an institution of learning, or a home for the poor and destitute, or if you know of them ever giving aid as an order outside of their order.

R. W. KEMPMAN.

There are several institutions in the South which bear a Masonic title and are presumably supported in whole or part by the fraternity. They are: Carroll Masonic Institute, Carrolton, Ga.; St. John's College, Little Rock, Ark.; Furlow Masonic Female College, Americus, Ga.; Southern Masonic Female College, Covington, Ga.; Lumpkin Masonic Female College, Lumpkin, Ga. As for other charitable institutions founded by secret orders we have no positive information. An Odd-fellow's orphan asylum was projected in Michigan two or three years ago. Perhaps some correspondent in that State can tell whether it is built.

The Custom-House Corner-Stone.

The Chicago papers continue to print letters against devoting the new Custom-House to the Masonic order. The following appeared in the Time sa few days since:

Will you please publish the following protest, which will explain itself, now being circulated for signatures? Allow me to say that the question involved is one of public and national interest, and is securing a wide consideration by American citizens at the present time, and it would seem that, since the attention of our Masonic friends has been called to this subject, that common courtesy would suggest the propriety of their uniting with citizens generally in requesting some representative person, say one of the judges of the United States courts, to perform this ceremony, in which all classes could unite with self-respect.

Respectfully, PHILO CARPENTER.

The protest (the same published last in the Cynosure) is published in connection. The following letters also appeared in late papers:

From the Chicago Times.

THAT CORNER-STONE—SHALL IT BE LAID BY THE MASONS?

Having read your very sound articles in opposition to the laying of the corner-stone of a government building by a secret and non-political society, I have been waiting daily with the hope that the hint would be taken and the absurd and hurtful project be abandoned, and I trust before it is too late that wiser counsels will prevail.

What streak of lunacy could have compelled Secretary Richardson to make such a request of the head of a body of private citizens, who are banded together the world over for simply a grand effort to fraternize that world, and widen the too narrow skirts of human charity, I am at a loss to comprehend, unless, indeed, "there was method in the madness," which had its birth, more than likely, very far west of the city of Washington, amongst some ex-militaires, who like to parade themselves in uniform and display their horsemanship. The excuse is made that the government has no printed ceremonial for such a work as laying a corner-stone. The "thinness" of this is very apparent, as you have not a reporter in your establishment to-day who could not in an hour's time concoct something suitable for the occasion. The corner-stone should be laid by a member of our national or state government, and not by any head of a secret organization, as such. A large portion of tax-payers object to its being laid under the auspices of the Masonic body, and have a right to call that body a political one when one of the highest government officials in Washington writes to the highest government official in Chicago, asking the Grand Master of Masons in Illinois to lay the foundation stone of a government building. If the Masons are in the corner-stone business, doing the job per contract, why, let the public know, and if there is any money saved by the transaction to the national purse, perhaps all classes might feel content to let the cheapest bidder do the work; but in view of the fact that Masons have always and justly publicly stated that they were not a political institution, and defied proof of the charge, pointing to their published principles and statements of honorable gentlemen who would scorn a falsehood, I ask, then, what answer they can make in future if they follow out the proposed course for the 24th of June.

If Chicago wants to have the day a gala one, (and I think it should be such,) a day that will be another mile-stone to mark the march of her prosperity, let every society, Masons, Odd-fellows, Pythians, temperance and military organizations turn out and render homage to the new monument of our national greatness, but do not let us soil the pure robe of Masonry by dipping it in the puddle of politics. In the eyes of a few who want to air themselves, it may be an honor, but to the lovers of the order, a disgrace.

A SECRET SOCIETY MAN.

From the Chicago Evening Journal.

THE NEW POST-OFFICE.—A PROTEST.

I have before me, in a paper printed in this city, an article complaining because the Government has granted permission to the Masonic fraternity to lay the corner-stone of the new post-office here with their peculiar rites and ceremonies, and has made no arrangement to let any other class of citizens, heathen or religious, participate in a work that ought to be purely national and disinterested so far as the claims of any sect or society are concerned. For one, it does seem strange to me that Masonry should have the preference in a matter of such interest to the public at large. All men are not Masons, and especially are women and children debarred from becoming such, and yet the poorest navvy, the humblest sewing-girl and the weakest orphan have an interest in the building of the magnificent receptacle of letters and papers over which these occult ceremonies are to be performed. There will be something so clanish about the whole performance that the republican idea of Federal Union is in danger of being lost sight of. I am not a Mason, and what interest can I, a citizen for twelve years, and proud of Chicago, take in a ceremony that to me would be a jargon and glitter without meaning, except as it has been explained to me outside of the lodge? Under such circumstances, Mr. Editor, I and all citizens, of every nation and color, who are not Masons, have a right to protest against anything so un-American in the dedication of a national public work.

FAIR PLAY.

WHO WILL LAY THE CORNER-STONE?

From the Times.

From the published accounts appearing from day to day in The Times it is evident the foundation-stone committee are making preparation of some sort at least to have the various lodges in this city and (for aught I know) in the State at large make a grand 'turn-out' on the 24th of June next. Now I would like to ask what right have the Freemasons of Chicago to monopolize the entire city on that day, and arrogate to themselves alone the privilege of laying the corner-stone of a public building for the erection of which the public at large pay taxes? But it will be said by some apologist that they were invited to do so. But why should they be invited more than any other society? Who and what are Freemasons that they should enjoy certain privileges not accorded to the rest of the community? Why not invite the Orange society or the Odd-fellows, and Good Templars, or the Ancient Order of Druids? Why invite the Freemasons in particular more than any other society? And besides this, why should a society be invited that is obnoxious to more than four-fifths of the entire community? Why not call upon the large and influential Roman Catholic societies, either temperance or benevolent, to lay that corner-stone? No! it must be done by Freemasons; and, Mr. Editor, I will say right here, and I challenge any man in this State or in this country to successfully contradict my assertion, that there don't exist in the world a more useless, or a more good-for-nothing society than Freemasonry, or one that is built upon a more rotten foundation. It is neither benevolent nor charitable, nor religious, but is an asylum for dead heads, for scalawags, for hypocrites, and for bummers of every kind. What monument of art or industry has Freemasonry erected, either in this or any other country? What educational institution, school, or college has it supported, or even built? Where are its orphanages, its charitable institutions, its homes for widowed and aged and decrepit Masons? How many orphans has the Grand Lodge of Illinois educated and apprenticed during its existence of forty years? Not one. How far has this society publicly benefited the human race since its first inception at the London "Apple-Tree tavern" in 1717? Not in a single instance. Then, I would ask again, why should Rankin, McArthur & Co. invite this society in particular to lay the corner-stone of a public building, such as the Chicago custom-house and post-office? And in this connection, also, it may not be amiss to inquire which branch of the Masonic public is called upon to lay this stone? Is it the white branch, the nigger branch, or the bogus branch? For you must know that Masonry in Chicago is divided into these several sections. We have the "Illinois Grand Lodge," the "Nigger Grand Lodge," and the "Hawley Grand Lodge," and the taxpaying public may feel an interest in knowing which of these grands will have the honor of laying the corner-stone and of proclaiming to the gaping multitude that Freemasons have certain secrets which have never been divulged. I think it is high time this farce should be plaid out, and that Masonic so-called grand bodies dressed in mountebank uniforms should be let severely alone by government officials, at least, and not be supported and encouraged in their grand humbug at the expense of an overtaxed and outraged public. Hoping that The Times will wield its powerful influence against this gross piece of imposition, and that such an arrangement may yet be made as will enable all classes and all societies in this community to turn out and take an active and interesting part in the ceremony of laying that corner-stone, I am, sir,

A FREEMASON.

NOTES.

—The full report of the Ohio State meeting is given this week. Notice the appointment for next meeting, and let every auxiliary and friendly church be represented in it.

—The New York workers have been thus distributed during the week: J. P. Stoddard at Groton and Cazenovia; J. L. Barlow at Syracuse, Oneonta and Binghamton; C. A. Blanchard at Mexico and Hamilton.

—Those who wish extra copies of the Cynosure of next week containing the report of the National Convention at Syracuse should send orders without delay. The proceedings may be re-printed in pamphlet form this year. Those who send orders would do well to state if they wish pamphlets, if published.

—The Free Will Baptist Yearly Conference of Wisconsin discussed at their last meeting resolutions on Freemasonry. The subject was considered of so great importance that its consideration was thought incomplete, and so was continued to this year, when it will be resumed.

—The Carbondale (Pa.) Advance containing the report of the M. E. Pennsylvania Association is received too late for insertion this week. The meeting was held May 6th and 7th in Washington, Pa. Bro. Barlow was the speaker from abroad, and seven brethren and four sisters were appointed delegates to Syracuse.

—Who would expect to see from the city of Washington the following dispatch?: "The Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, southern jurisdiction,—the most august body of Masons in the world,—commenced its biennial session to-day, in Masonic Temple, the Sovereign Grand Council Commander Albert Pike, presiding."

—Telescope

Every body who knows the aspiration of the lodge for supremacy in church and state.

—Correspondents have inquired about a new secret society, "The Gentlemen of Honor," After Dinner. an Eastern journal publishes under date of May 12th, 1873, a description of this order. The whole thing is plainly a hoax. The only gentlemen of honor, properly so-called are those whose lives are given to Christ and his kingdom, and who shun the lodge.

—The Lake Shore Commercial, Saugatuck. Mich., has been the medium of a lively discussion on secret fraternaties between Prof. Lumry, of Wheaton, and a Dr. Wright. As to the result, "Whoever knew truth put to the words in a free and open encounter?"—especially if Prof. L. was her defender. But it is significant how a local paper will thus open its columns week after week on a subject lately tabooed by almost the entire press.

—Elder Baird is once more enduring all the bitter experience of persecution for leaving and denouncing the lodge. A suit was lately (May 8th) brought against him for some trifling matter. So eager were the Masons to get him in their clutches that he was arrested before proper papers were sworn out. He demanded and got a jury trial and rejected every Masonic juror, was acquitted but charged with the costs of the suit, which he justly refuses to pay, and has appealed the case. A few days before this transaction he attended a temperance meeting in Jamestown, Pa., was invited into the pulpit and took part in the exercises with the Methodist minister. This consideration on the part of the latter stirred up the cesspool of the lodge from the lowest bottom, and the Jamestown and Greenville papers pour out abuse and insult mixed with fiery brimstone. The Elder proposes, however, to show that he has yet some rights that even Masons may be made to respect, and will make them accountable before the law. What will come of it, time will show; but we pray that Bro. Baird may be upheld by grace in any right measures.

The Home Circle.

Abide in Him.

Cling to the Crucified!
  His death is life to thee,—
  Life for eternity?
  His pains thy pardon seal,
  His stripes thy bruises heal,
  His cross proclaims thy peace
  Bids every sorrow cease:
  His blood is all to thee,
    It purges thee from sin;
  It sets thy spirit free,
    It keeps thy conscience clean;
Cling to the crucified!

Cling to the crucified!
  His is a heart of love,
  Full as the hearts above;
  Its depths of sympathy
  Are all awake for thee;
  His countenance is light
  Even to the darkest night;
  That love shall never change—
    That light shall ne'er grow dim;
  Charge thou thy faithless heart
  To find its all in him;
Cling to the Crucified!

Pleasures which the Christian Must Forego.

1. Tim. iv. 4.

1. Those as to the propriety of which you are in doubt. Rom. xiv. 23.

2. Those in which you cannot indulge without danger that your example may lead others into sin. 1. Cor. viii. 9; Rom. xiv. 15.

3. Even those in which, if you engage, you will grieve weak Christians who disapprove them; much more those which Christians universally condemn. 1. Cor. viii. 12, 13; Rom. xiv. 15; Mark ix. 42.

4. Those which have the taint of sin upon them. Jude 23.

5. Those which, if indulged in, would place you in a false position (1. Thess. v. 22; 2. Cor. viii. 21,) and seem to identify you in taste and life with a sinful world, from which you should be separate. Rom. xii. 2; 2. Cor. vi. 14, 17.

6. Those which might gain the mastery over you, or which would interfere with anything of more importance. Eph. v. 18; Phil. iv. 5; 1. Cor. vii. 31.

7. Those into which you cannot carry your religion without incongruity (1. Cor. x. 31;) on which you can not ask God's blessing (Col. iii. 17); in which you cannot show forth the shining graces of a Christian character to the honor of God (Matt. v. 16); and in which you cannot breathe the atmosphere of Christ's presence (Col. iii 11).

In connection with this subject we quote below a few remarks, from the pen of the late Hannah More, an English lady, distinguished alike for her piety and intelligence:

"Are not good plays harmless, nay, improving?"

"There will still remain," she replies, "even in tragedies otherwise most exceptionable, provided they are sufficiently impassioned to produce a powerful effect on the feelings, and have spirit enough to deserve to become popular, an essential, radical defect. What I insist on is that there almost inevitably runs through the whole web of the tragic drama a prominent thread of false principle. It is generally the leading object of the poet to erect a standard of honor, in direct opposition to the standard of Christianity. Worldly honor is the very soul and spirit and life-giving principle of the drama. It is her moral and political law. Fear and shame are the capital crimes in her code. Love, jealousy, hatred, ambition, pride, revenge, are too often elevated into the rank of splendid virtues, and form a dazzling system of worldly morality in direct contradiction to the spirit of Christianity. The fruits of the Spirit and the fruits of the stage, if the parallel were followed up, would exhibit as pointed a contrast as human imagination could conceive."

What, must the merits of every play be tried by the Ten Commandments?

"We may at least venture to answer that they should contain nothing hostile to them. If harmless merriment be not expected to advance our moral improvement, we must take care that it does not oppose it; for if we concede that our amusements are not expected to make us better than we are, ought we not to be careful that they do not make us worse than they find us? Whatever pleasantry of idea or gayety of sentiment we admit, should we not jealously watch against any unsoundness in the general principle, or mischief in the prevailing tendency?"

But may not the stage become purified, so as to render it at least harmless and unobjectionable?

"What the stage might be under another and an imaginary state of things it is not very easy for us to know, and therefore not very important to inquire. Nor is it the soundest logic to argue on the possible goodness of a thing which, in the present circumstances of society, is doing positive evil, from the imagined good that thing might be conjectured to produce in a supposed state of unattainable improvement: for unfortunately nothing can be done until not only the stage itself had undergone complete purification, but until the audience shall be purified also. We must first suppose a state of society in which the spectators will be supposed to relish all that is pure, and to reprobate all that is corrupt, before the system of a pure and uncorrupt theater can be adopted with any reasonable hope of success; there must always be a harmony between the taste of the spectator and the nature of the spectacle, in order to produce pleasure; for people go to a play not to be instructed, but to be amused."

Let every thoughtful parent, doubting Christian, or tempted youth, read carefully and ponder seriously these positions. There is perhaps no question in Christian education more difficult to settle than what amusements are safe for our children, or what recreations our young Christian, away from the restraints and pastimes of home, may engage in with safety to himself and honor to his divine Master.

We would point the latter to those principles laid down to Wesley by his mother: "Whatever weaknesses your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things; in short, whatever increases the strength and authority of your body over your mind, that thing is sin to you, however innocent it may be in itself."

And yet you may be placed amid influences which for a time may blind your judgment and persuade you from your steadfastness; you find yourself overpowered by plausible reasoning, which you cannot readily meet, and because you cannot meet it you are tempted to yield. You are not unlikely to find yourself thus perplexed; what shall you do? Shall you yield without hearty conviction, in deference to the skill or the sneer of your companions?

What shall you do? Refer to the example of intelligent men and women, eminent for holiness: how have devoted servants of God viewed the subject? What has been the Christian apprehension of the church upon the matter? It is of no great consequence whether you understand or not the train of thought or course of argument by which their minds were made up and their conduct directed; you have no time, it may be, to examine them if you would; it is enough to know how they acted, and that it will be safe and wise to imitate their example.

Do not hesitate to lean upon argument like this, in harmony with the spirit of the word of God. It is no sign of weakness to take council of the matured judgments of Christian experience, and no sign of manliness to disregard them.—Selected.

"Bunyan's Dell."

Within a few hundred yards of Preston gates, and in the midst of a thick wood which borders the Castle meadows, is a green space called "Bunyan's Dell." In this hollow in the wilderness a thousand people would once assemble to listen to their Baptist—the inspired Tinker of Bedford. A Protestant may admire Ignatius Loyola, or the gentle St. Francis, and the most severe Churchman must give due honor to the memory of John Bunyan—the saint-errant of Dissent. Any one who reads his life may see that he lived through his own spiritual romance. Surrounded by the wild passions and blind bigotry of the seventeenth century, "his pure and powerful mind" fought a good fight with Apollyon, passed with trembling anguish through the Valley of the shadow of Death, and escaped serene and blameless from Vanity Fair. No doubt the "Meeters" who came to the Preston wood to hear Bunyan's rousing and searching sermons, understood very well that he was the Christian hero of his "Pilgrim's Progress."

Living in Hertfordshire, from sixteen to twenty miles from Bedford, they would probably know much of his history. A prisoner for Nonconformity and illegal preaching, Bunyan had spent twelve weary years in Bedford jail. Though not shut up in the Venetian pozzi, he must have suffered severely in his dull, dark, damp chamber, built over the river. There with only two books—the Bible and "Fox's Book of Martyrs"—he gave himself up to studies more absorbing than those which endeared the "Martin Tower" to the Wizard Earl of Northumberland. And there he resolved to remain "until the moss grew on his eye-brows" rather than promise not to preach. At length Dr. Barlowe, afterwards Bishop of Lincoln, is said to have obtained his unconditional release. All honor to the wise, kind Churchman! Wise and kind people, having read the "Pilgrim's Progress," felt that the writer had heart and intellect for a broad Catholic faith, and that nothing would narrow him into a mischievous sectarian.

So he left the dismal old jail on Bedford Bridge, and went out into the world as a preacher. It was probably some time after this release in 1671, that Bishop Bunyan, as he was popularly called, made Hertfordshire part of his diocese. Justices and constables paid tribute to his character by allowing him to preach in several counties. But as the times were full of danger, he was often obliged to travel in disguise and the people of his pastorate met during the night, and in places from which they might easily escape. One such place was found in Preston Wood, three miles from Hitchin. When we look at "Bunyan's Dell" we can see the midnight "Meeters," and their preacher. The dense thicket of trees around—the starry sky—the multitude of enthusiasts half buried in shadow—this is a scene to inspire John Bunyan with the best of "his powerful and piercing words," which drawn from the common language of tinker and peasant can work wonders. We feel that like Dante, Bunyan is able to produce a sublime effect and a strong sense of reality by a few bold, abrupt touches. He has come, like the great Florentine, from la valle d' abisso doloroso, but he tells of its horrors with the vivid brevity of intense feeling. Let me read a passage from his "Sermons on the Greatness of the Soul":

"Once I dreamed that I saw two persons whom I knew, in hell; and methought I saw a continual dropping, as of great drops of fire, lighting upon them in their sore distress. Oh, words are wanting—imagination and fancy are poor things here! Hell is another place than any alive can think."

This is truly Dantesque. But Bunyan devoted his Dantesque genius to the loving purpose of an Evangelist.

Prayer.—Do not think that it is necessary to pronounce many words. To pray, is to say, "Let thy will be done;" it is to form a good purpose; it is to raise your heart to God; it is to lament your weakness; it is to sigh at the recollection of your frequent disobedience. This prayer demands neither method, nor science, nor reasoning, it is not necessary to quit one's employment: it is a simple movement of the heart towards its Creator, and a desire that whatever you are doing, you may do it to his glory. The best of all prayers is to act with a pure intention, and with a continual reference to the will of God.—Fenelon.

—It is a terrible thing for one man to speak evil of another, and I think it worse to think it. If you speak it the man has time and opportunity to defend himself, but he cannot trace the thought. It is neither heroic nor manly to permit in yourself judgement which nobody can reverse.

Children's Corner.

The Timely Warning.

My father after an absence of three years returned to the house so dear to him. He had made made his last voyage, and rejoiced to have reached a haven of rest from the perils of the sea. During his absence I had grown from a child and baby of my mother's (for I was her youngest) into a rough, careless. and headstrong boy. Her gentle voice no longer restrained me. I was often willful and sometimes disobedient. I thought it indicated manly superiority to be independent of a woman's influence. My father's return was a fortunate circumstance for me. He soon perceived the spirit of insubordination stirring within me. I saw by his manner that it displeased him, although for a few days he said nothing to me about it.

It was an afternoon in October, bright and golden, that my father told me to get my hat and take a walk with him. We turned down a narrow lane into a fine open field—a favorite playground for the children in the neighborhood. After talking cheerfully on different topics for awhile, my father asked me if I observed that huge shadow thrown by a mass of rocks that stood in the middle of the field. I replied that I did.

"My father owned this land," said he. "It was my playground when a boy. That rock stood there then. To me it is a beacon, and whenever I look at it I recall a dark spot in my life—an event so painful to dwell upon that, if it were not as a warning to you, I should not speak of it. Listen, then, my dear boy, and learn wisdom from your father's errors.

"My father died when I was a mere child. I was the only son. My mother was a gentle, loving woman, devoted to her children and beloved by everybody. I remember her pale, beautiful face—her sweet, affectionate smile—her kind and tender voice. In my childhood I loved her intensely. I was never happy apart from her; and she, fearing that I was becoming too much of a baby, sent me to the high school in the village. After associating a time with rude, rough boys, I lost in a measure my fondness for home and my reverence for my mother; and it became more and more difficult for her to restrain my impetuous nature. I thought it indicated a want of manliness to yield to her authority or to appear penitent, although I knew that my conduct pained her. The epithet I most dreaded was girl-boy. I could not bear to hear it said by my companions that I was tied to my mother's apron-strings. From a quiet, home-loving child, I soon became a wild, roistering boy. My dear mother used every persuasion to induce me to seek happiness within the precincts of home. She exerted herself to make our fireside attractive, and my sister, following her self-sacrificing example, sought to entice me by planning games and diversions for my entertainment. I saw all this; but did not heed it.

"It was on an afternoon like this that, as I was about leaving the dining table, to spend the intermission between morning and evening school in the street, as usual, my mother laid her hand on my shoulder, and said mildly, but firmly: "My son, I wish you to come with me.' I would have rebelled, but something in her manner awed me. She put on her bonnet, and said to me: 'We will take a little walk together.' I followed her in silence; and, as I was passing out of the door, I observed one of my rude conpanions skulking about the house, and I knew he was waiting for me. He sneered as I went past him. My pride was wounded to the quick. He was a very bad boy; but, being some years older than myself, he exercised a great influence over me. I followed my mother sulkily, till we reached the spot where we now stand—beneath the shadow of this huge rock. Oh! my boy, could that hour be blotted from my memory, which has cast a dark shadow over my whole life, gladly would I exchange all that the world can offer me for the quiet peace of mind I should enjoy, But no! like this huge, unsightly pile stands the monument of my guilt forever.

"My mother, being feeble in health, sat down, and beckoned me to sit down beside her. Her look, so full of tender sorrow, is present to me now. I would not sit, but continued standing sullenly beside. 'Alfred, my dear son,' said she, 'have you lost all love for your mother?' I did not reply. 'I fear you have,' she continued; 'and may God help you to see your own heart, and me to do my duty!' She then talked to me of my misdeeds; of the dreadful consequences of the course I was pursuing. By tears and entreaties and prayers she tried to make an impression on me. She placed before me the lives and examples of great and good men, she sought to stimulate my ambition. I was moved; but too proud to show it, and remained standing in dogged silence beside her. I thought: 'What will my companions say, if, after all my boasting, I yield at last and submit to be led by a woman?'

"What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suffered failed to move me. She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till we reached our own door.

"'It is school-time now,' said she. 'Go, my son, and once more let me beseech you to think upon what I have said.'

"'I shan't go to school,' said I.

"She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied firmly: 'Certainly you will go, Alfred. I command you.'

"'I will not,' said I, with a tone of defiance.

"'One of the two things you must do, Alfred—either go to school this moment, or I will lock you in your room and keep you there till you are ready to promise implicit obedience to my wishes in future.'

"'I dare you to do it,' said I. 'You can't get me up-stairs.'

"'Alfred, choose now,' said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently and was deadly pale.

"'If you touch me, I will kick you,' said I, in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said.

"'Will you go, Alfred?'

"'No,' I replied, but quailed beneath her eyes.

"'Then follow me,' said she, as she grasped my arm firmly. I raised my foot—oh! my son, hear me!—I raised my foot and kicked her, my sainted mother. How my head reels as the torrent of memory rushes over me. I kicked my mother—a feeble woman—my mother. She staggered back a few steps and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. 'O Heavenly Father!' she cried, 'forgive him. He knows not what he does.' The gardener just then passed the door. and, seeing my mother pale and almost unable to support herself, he stopped. She beckoned him in. 'Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his own room,' said she, and turned from me. Looking back, as she was entering her room, she gave me such a look. It will forever follow me. It was a look of agony mingled with the intensest love. It was the last unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

"In a moment I found myself a prisoner in my own room. I thought for a moment I would fling myself from the window and dash my brains out; but I felt afraid to die. I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued, but my stubborn pride rose in an instant and bade me not to yield. The pale face of my mother haunted me. I flung myself on the bed and fell asleep. I woke at midnight, stiffened by the damp night air, terrfied with frightful dreams. I would have sought my mother at that moment, for I trembled with fear; but my door was fast. With the daylight my terrors were dissipated, and I became bold in resisting all good impulses. The servant brought my meals; but I did not taste them. I thought the day would never end. Just at twilight I heard a light footstep approach the door. It was my sister, who called me by name.

"'What may I tell mother from you?' she asked.

"'Nothing,' I replied.

"'Oh! Alfred, for my sake, for all our sakes, say that you are sorry. She longs to forgive you.'

"'I won't be driven to school against my will,' said I.

"'But, you will go if she wishes it, dear Alfred,' said my sister, pleadingly.

"'No, I won't, said I, 'and you needn't say a word more about it.'

"'Oh! brother, you will kill her! you will kill her! And then you can never have a happy moment.

"I made no reply to this. My feelings were touched, but I still resisted their influence. My sister called me; but I would not answer. I heard her footsteps slowly retreating, and again I flung myself on the bed, to pass another wretched and fearful night. Oh God! how wretched, how fearful I did not know.

"Another footstep, slower and feebler than my sister's, disturbed me. A voice called me by name. It was my mother's.

"'Alfred, my son, shall I come in? Are you sorry for what you have done? she asked.

"I cannot tell what influence operat- at that moment made me speak adverse to my feelings. The gentle voice of my mother, that thrilled through me, melted the ice from my obdurate heart, and I longed to throw myself on her neck; but I did not. No, my boy, I did not. But my words gave the lie to my heart when I said I was not sorry. I heard her withdraw. I heard her groan. I longed to call her back; but I did not.

"I was awakened from an uneasy slumber by hearing my name called loudly, and my sister stood by my bedside.

"'Get up, Alfred. Oh! don't wait a moment! Get up; come with me. Mother is dying!'

"I thought I was dreaming; but I got up, melancholy, and followed my sister. On the bed, pale and cold as marble, lay my mother. She had not undressed. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest. Arising, to go again to me, she was seized with a palpitation of the heart and borne senseless to her room.

"I cannot tell you my agony as I looked upon her. My remorse was tenfold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believed myself to be a murderer. I fell on the bed beside her. I could not weep. My heart burned in my bosom; my brain was all on fire. My sister threw her arms around me and wept in silence. Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand; her eyes unclosed. She had recovered consciousness, but not speech. She looked at me and moved her lips. I could not understand her words. 'Mother! Mother!' I shrieked, 'say only that you forgive me.' She could not say it with her lips; but her hands pressed mine. She smiled upon me, and, lifting her thin white hands, clasped my own within them and cast her eyes upward. She moved her lips in prayer; and thus she died. I remained still kneeling beside that dear form till my gentle sister removed me. She comforted me, for she knew the heavy load of sorrow at my heart—heavier than the grief for the loss of a mother, for it was a load of sorrow for sin. The joy of youth had left me forever.

"My son, the suffering such memories wake must continue as long as life. God is merciful; but remorse for past misdeeds is a canker-worm in the heart that preys upon it forever."

My father ceased speaking and buried his face in his hands. He saw and felt the bearing his narrative had upon my character and conduct. I have never forgotton it. Boys who spurn a mother's control, who are ashamed to own that they are wrong, who think it manly to resist her authority and unmanly to yield to her influence, beware! Lay not up for yourselves bitter memories for your future years.

Religious Intelligence.

—Over two thousand conversions are reported in the Methodist churches of Long Island during the past year.

—The First African Church of Richmond, Va., at a late business meeting, excluded seventeen members for dancing.

—Yale Theological Seminary graduated twenty-four ministers this year, and Union thirty-four, one of them a colored man.

—The Philadelphia Central Presbytery report the reception of 694 members on profession during the last year. The total membership is 9,417.

—Fifty-three New England Congregrational churches report the reception of 964 members of the May communion; 753 of them by profession.

—The Presbyterian church in the Canadian Dominion numbers 19 Presbyteries, 633 regular charges, and 51,397 communicants. The total of contributions during the year for congregational and benevolent purposes was $550,901, an average of $10.97 to each member.

—Jacob Wainwright, the black boy who accompanied Dr. Livingstone's remains to England, will, after further training, return to his native country, to be employed as a teacher in the Church Missionary Society's East Africau Mission.

—The First Congregational Church of Peru, Ill., have voted to discontinue the use of fermented wines at the communion table, as inconsistent with the spirit of Christ's teachings in their application to the needs and exigences of the present day; and that when it is impracticable to obtain unfermented wine, the deacons be instructed to furnish cold water instead.

—Deacon E. S. Albro of the Second Baptist Church of Chicago, has one of the largest adult Bible classes in the city. Its eighth anniversary was lately celebrated. The average attendance of the class during the year has been 132, and it has contributed $422.46 to meet current expenses, and to aid young men studying for the ministry.

—The Congregational Union which lately held its twenty-first anniversary in New York is engaged in aiding feeble churches to build their houses of worship. The contributions thus made last year amounted to $67,044.19. During the year aid has been given forty-six churches located in the various States and Territories of the Union.

—Since May, 1870, a young man engaged in colporteur work in London, has sold upwards of 750,000 good publications, besides obtaining subscribers for 400 magazines. His total sales have realized upwards of $2,500. In several streets he entirely supplanted the impious and defiling serials, by introducing sound, healthy periodicals, and on a Saturday night, with his book-stall in the street, he has frequently sold hundreds of temperance and religious books.

—If the following, which is reported in the papers, took place there must have been such a mingling of sacred and unhallowed associations as to shock every pious heart in Plymouth Church: "Mr. Beecher received into his church, Apri 26, more than a hundred new members. The occasion was celebrated by a multitude of floral decorations and a crown emblazoned "Victory." After the service Mr. Beecher distributed the roses among the members."

—A religious census has been completed by the Non-Conformists of England, with the following results: "For the whole of the 125 towns the Established Church provides 1,745 places of worship, with 1,204,877 sittings, or 40 per cent. of the whole. The non- established churches supply 3,845 places of worship and 1,805,911 sittings or 60 per cent. of the whole. In other words, the Church of England provides two-fifths and the Free Church three-fifths of the religious accommodation in these 125 towns."

—The Presbyterian General Assembly now meetting in St. Louis represents some 3,000,000 people in this country, and 4,800 congregations. The latter appear in the Assembly by about 600 ministers and elders, equally appointed, the representatives being sent according to a permanent rating from each of the 172 presbyteries, which bear to the 35 synods a relation similar to that of counties to States in the Union. The latest reported membership of the denomination (May, 1873) was 472,023, and a Sunday-school attendance of 482,762 children. The sum of $9,622,-030 was raised in 1872-73, of which $1,543.712 were benevolent funds.

—The London correspoudent of the Liverpool Post, writing on the 27th of April, says: "The so-called religious revival in Scotland has been quite a Godsend to some of the firms engaged in the publication of Bibles. The orders received from Scotland since January last are sufficient to give a copy of the Scriptures to one in every five of the population. There has been no such sale of the holy book since 1859 or 1860, when it seems that in Scotland and the North of England, men and women searched the Scriptures with an assiduity which had been unknown for some time before, and which till now has been unknown since. Indeed, for five years the trade in Bibles had been so bad, that one firm in Paternoster row gave it up and began publishing educational and other more popular works. If the itinerant Americans now preaching in Glasgow produce as much effect in Manchester and the English towns as they are reputed to have done in the Scotch ones, selling Bibles may again become a lucrative business."

—A naval correspondent of the London Times, writing from the West African mission, says:

There is no doubt that through missionary influence many of the barbarous customs have nearly ceased, such as the burial of a certain number of a great man's wives and slaves with his dead body, to serve him in the next world, and the sacrifice of maidens at the entrance of rivers to propitiate the god of the sea, lest he should slit them up and put a stop to navigation. Some, too, of the mission stations are an excellent example to the natives of neatness and order. The stations at old Calabar and Gaboon are beautiful with flowers and gardens full of useful and ornamental trees, shrubs, and vegetables. These the natives are taught to cultivate, and they are learning to appreciate their value. At Gaboon the Mpongwe language has been reduced to writing, and is taught grammatically in the schools of the American Mission, and the French Roman Catholic missionaries have also translated some of the Gospels into it.

News of the Week.

The City.

—Rochefort, the banished and escaped French communist, passed through Chicago on his way to Europe last week.

—Prof. Swing has sent a letter to the Chicago Presbytery asking for a letter of dismissal from the Presbyterian church. Next week he proposes to go to Colorado with H. W. Beecher and others for recreation.

The Capitol.

—A bill has been introduced into the House to prevent hazings at the Naval Academy.

—The District Investigation is becoming intensely interesting. Cluss, Chief Engineer and member of the Board of Public Works, gave in a most damaging testimony, plainly implicating Gov. Shepherd in the frauds charged. The District King could not endure such testimony, and persuaded Pres. Grant to remove Cluss and appoint Hoxie, a young man and tool of the ring.

—Commander Belknap, of the United States Navy, has submitted to the Department in Washington an interesting report of deep-sea soundings in the Pacific Ocean made by him for the purpose of ascertaining the most favorable route for an ocean-telegraph between Japan and San Francisco. The greatest depth reached was 3,287 fathoms. It is the opinion of scientific men concerned in the survey that a continuous range of submarine mountains extends from Japan to the Sandwich Islands. Six peaks, ranging from 7,000 to 12,600 feet in height, were measured.

The Country.

—Pres. Thompson, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, died last Thursday.

—One hundred students were expelled from Bowdoin College, Me., last week, for refusing to take part in the military drill.

—Independence, Iowa, was visited by a fearful conflagration last week, destroying almost the entire business portion of the town, and causing a loss of $587,-000.

—The Springfield Republican's final summing up of the number of lives lost by the Mill River disaster makes the total 140. The bodies of all but five have been recovered and identified.

—The machine shops of the St. Louis and Southeastern railroad at Mt. Vernon, Ill., took fire on the 27th, and the entire building and machinery are a total wreck. The loss is in the neighborhood of $100,000.

—St. Paul, May 27.—A dispatch from Gen. Stanley, dated Fort Sully, May 22, received at Fort Lincoln to-day, says 400 Sioux left there to-day, to be joined by more at the Grand River Agency and Cheyenne. They will try to intercept Custer's expedition when it starts. A hot time is expected.

—The dry weather in large sections of the West cause apprehensions for the crops. But short and severe storms are reported in several localities. A severe tornado passed over a part of Iowa and Wisconsin on Sunday night, May 24th. At Ripon, Wis., the Congregational church was demolished and much damage done to other buildings and fruit trees. At Oshkosh, Winneconne and at Davenport, Iowa, considerable damage was done. The storm lasted fifteen minutes. In Philadelphia the most severe rain-storm, accompanied by thunder and lightning witnessed for years, occurred May 25. The various mills and establishments in the city were flooded to a depth of two to three feet, and the streets littered with their contents. Business was entirely at a stand-still. It is thought the loss will be $500,000.

—The temperance women who have met with such disgraceful treatment in Pittsburgh are not likely to be beaten in the suit brought against them. Their arrest was probably more from hate than for any other reason, the real troubles of the peace and of business men being the crowd of roughs and saloonists who surrounded the party of ladies and filling the streets. A Pittsburgh paper says of the case: "To treat such women as common felons has been made the burning disgrace of our city. It was not enough to arrest them and lead them amid a ribald crowd to the Mayor's office, but when there, without other reason than to gratify a petty malignity, they must be thrust into the felons' cells until the acting Mayor found it convenient to give them a hearing. They made no resistance to the arrest, had no desire to avoid a hearing before the Mayor, but, on the contrary, were more anxious for it than he was; so that putting them inside of iron bars was simply a base act of official indecency. Although doubtless so intended, it put no disgrace on them; and, unless we are much mistaken, it will stir the hearts of all right-minded citizens to an indignation that will yet make itself felt in City Hall. The end is not yet. The Acting Mayor pronounced the prisoners guilty and exacted his fines; but the case has gone before the Court of Common Pleas of the county, where the influences that rule the Mayor's office have no potency, and where, we trust, the disgrace upon our community will be wiped out."

Foreign.

—Late reports from the famine-stricken regions of India are very unfavorable. It is said that 3,000,000 persons are now dependent upon the Government for subsistence, and the distress is daily increasing. English papers by the last steamer intimate that the stress of the famine will be most severely felt between the middle of May and the 1st of July, unless heavy rains should fall in the meantime.

CONTEMPORARY NOTES.

To Christians who have come under the power of the Gospel, it is inexpressibly prekious. They have felt its support in weakness, its refreshment in days of depression, its light in the darkness—its power for good in their necessities. Many a doctrine of the Gospel is particularly embodied in the Christian soul, not only because of its general efficacy in blessedness, but because it has afforded special help in some time of need. They who feel how delightfully the statutes of the Lord have been their songs in the house of their pilgrimage, holds them doubly dear to their hearts, and feel wounded when they are assailed by those who do not accept them. A certain cosmopolitan minister, who lives on his reputation for charity, is conspicuous for the contemptuous way in which he refers to doctrines that are dear to evangelical households. The charity that fights Christians by assaulting what they consider the foundation of their hopes, is not the kind that is taught us in the Bible.—United Presbyterian.

It is a doubtful question whether or not the Patrons will be able to successfully carry out their various schemes of co-operation. These all require capital, business capacity, mechanical skill, and often inventive genius. A large agricultural implement factory must have a business manager, a competent foreman, and a good accountant. Of course, these must be sufficiently remunerated, and it is contrary to all past experience that these men will take the same interest, as the servants of such an organization as the Patrons, as they would were they directly interested in the profits of the concern.—Correspondence Chicago Tribune.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

A more extended reply was received from Professor Thacher, of Yale College, through ex-Senator Gillette, of Connecticut. The following is a copy:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., March 7, 1874.

Hon. Francis Gillette, Dear Sir:

In reply to your favor of the fourth inst. I send you one of the students' annual publications, which will answer better than I could do, three of the five printed questions of the circular which you enclose.

I cannot answer the fourth question definitely, but I have no hesitation in saying that the expenses of the secret societies in Yale College are, on the whole, far greater than the resultant good would justify. In answer to the fifth question I would say, in the first place, that the secrecy of at least three-fourths of the so-called secret societies here has, in a great measure, passed away. This is owing, in part, to the fact that, as the students pass on from the secret societies of their Freshman year to the new ones of their Sophomore year, and so on through the successive years of their college life, they enter into new combinations and hold more loosely to the obligations of their earlier years. In part it is due to the difficulty of keeping secrets, especially when those secrets are of no intrinsic importance. In this connection it should be remembered as a circumstance of great importance that all secret societies in college are year by year, accumulating a constituency of educated men who, passing into the various walks of professional life, serve as a substitute to these societies for that public opinion, which controls men in general. Thus all the secret doings of those societies, if there are any, are subject to the approbation or disapprobation of a body of men whose average judgment of wrong or impropriety would be more severe than that of society at large. Thus the Brothers' and Linonian Societies, each of which flourished more than a hundred years here, and which, for a very long period, were more secret than three-quarters of the secret societies are which exist here now, came to have such a body of old members that no one believed ill of them, and their decease is most earnestly lamented.

I have no hesitation in saying that the whole system of organized petty associations which are handed down from class to class in this college are an evil, and it would be a good thing if they could all perish in a night, although, in such a revolution, a few good things would be lost. As they are, they cause a great waste of money and of time; stimulate petty intrigue; lead younger students to adapt their manners and, to some extent, their life to the approbation of those in higher classes, whom they look upon as likely to be influential in their behalf, instead of being governed by elevated principles and a high sense of honor; lead men into intimate relations, to the damage of a part of them, who would not otherwise have become particularly acquainted; give opportunity for slights in the bestowment of students' honors, which embitter the remainder of college life and, in some cases, of after years; and last, but not least, expose a few in every class to a great moral danger from the care of considerable sums of money, for which, from the nature of student life, they are not generally held as responsible as they should be. On the whole these evils are, in my opinion, more than enough to overbalance all the good which these societies do.

On the other hand, I do not think that, in this college, whatever may be true elsewhere, they foster or encourage vice; but I am confident that, on the whole, their tendency is in the other direction.

I have said above that I should be glad if the whole system of petty perpetuata societies in this college should perish. But I feel bound to add that it is not their secrecy which makes them an evil. Almost all the evil which they cause here, except the waste of time and money, would cease if every one of them should become really secret, if their places and times of meeting, the names of their members and even the names of the societies and their very existence were absolutely unknown except to the members. It is what is known about these societies, not their secrets nor their secret doings, which works evil among us.

With regard to the influence of these societies on the intellectual standing of those who compose them, I may say that about half of them promote intellectual activity, and would be a blessing to the college if they could be made truly secret and the rest could be destroyed without destroying them. But the other half are inert, existing mainly, so far as any results appear, for lounging, gossip and college politics, with scarcely enough of intellectual occupation to serve as a feeble apology for their existence.

You append a sixth question in pencil respecting the cost of the society buildings and the source of the money spent in erecting them. I know scarcely anything on this subject except from common fame. There is, however, hardly a doubt but that the buildings have, in every instance, been erected by the contributions of graduates of the college who were members of the societies while they were here. There are four such buildings. One of them is said to have cost more than $40,000.

I do not know whether what I have written will add any thing to the knowledge already possessed by the gentlemen in whose behalf you have written to me. As to my opinions respecting our secret societies, I have long held them and I make no secret of them.

I am, my dear sir, very truly yours,

THOMAS A. THACHER.

Other important testimony is found in the replies to a circular letter sent to college presidents, and other gentlemen of reputed experience and intelligence, by a committee of the National Christian Association. The letter solicited opinions on secret societies, especially Freemasonry. This accounts for the allusion to that order in the extracts below, which were taken from the columns of The Christian Cynosure, where the letters were originally published.

Oberlin College, Ohio.

We have views on the subject, but no secret societies and no experience. The early founders of the school were decidedly opposed to secret societies, and the principle was adopted at the beginning of excluding them. Consequently no secret society has ever been established among us. The views of our faculty on this question are just as decided as ever. There is but one opinion among us.

In behalf of the faculty, JOHN MORGAN,
JAMES DASCOMB,
JAS. H. FAIRCHILD.

Otterbein University, Ohio.

As to other secret orders, while we do not believe that they are all open to the same, or as grave objections as Freemasonry, we yet consider them all, from the very fact of their secrecy, peculiarly susceptible of abuse to evil ends, and therefore objectionable; and as the good they profess to seek may be secured by open methods, not so susceptible of abuse, it is our conviction that he who would best subserve the interests of society, the interests of the state, and the interests of the church, should stand aloof from them all.

H. A. THOMPSON, Pres., and other members of the Faculty.

Washington University, Washington Territory.

I have long regarded the secret conclaves as unnecessary to any good cause, and dangerous from their irresponsibility. Especially do I think that Freemasonry, from its nature, record and prevalence, is an enemy to the political purity and social morality of our country. E. K. HILL, Pres't.

Wheaton College, Illinois.

I need scarcely add that the Faculty of Wheaton College are a unit in favor of the rule adopted by the trustees prohibiting membership in secret societies, either in the college or outside. We object to the secret orders, not merely as societies which are secret, but to the secret, religious ceremonies which they all practice, more or less, from the largest to the least. Such rites, practiced by members of a body taken promiscuously from the community, professors of religion, and men making no profession, is nothing less than a moral and religious system in which personal piety is not required, nor general justice, but only fealty to a clan. We regard the whole system, therefore, as opposed to true religion and just government, and of course hostile to God and man.

J. BLANCHARD, President.

Maryville College, Tennessee.

I believe that secret societies, generally speaking, are fraught with mischief and should be discouraged, especially in our institutions of learning. We do not allow any such organizations in this college. Opposed to them as I was when a student, I will not countenance them while presiding over students. P. M. BARTLETT, President.

Lebanon Valley College, Pennsylvania.

My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that, religiously, it is a sumbling-block; and that, socially and politically, the benefaction it offers to one is a robbery of others. No secret society or so-called fraternity is permitted within this institution.

L. H. HAMMOND, President.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio,

"When sorrows come, they come not single spies, but in battalions." There are epidemics of accidents, and epidemics of crime, and epidemics of religion. There has been an illustration of these truths in recent developments in our colleges and universities in the matter of casualities attendant upon the annual eruption of nonsense that follows the entrance of a fresh class to the education course. · · · But the "boys" learn these things from their elders. If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would but be pronounced foolish boys of larger growth.

Harper's Weekly, New York.

The sad death of young Leggett may induce collegians to consider whether there is any real humor or pleasure in the coarse practical jokes of initiation, or any value in the secrecy of the society. But this is a question for all students in every university, not for Cornell alone. And it is quite time for sensible and honorable young men in every college to ask this question very seriously.

Ithaca Journal, N. Y.

Now, one word to the students. Is not this a fitting occasion to do away with all these secret society orgies? Are not these rude and unfeeling ceremonies as ridiculous and useless, and almost as barbarous as the cruel rites of the Hindoos? Consider these things, we beg of you, now while the terrible lesson of the untimely death of one of your brightest members gives mournful and fearful emphasis to our feeble admonitions.

The Watchman and Reflector, Boston.

Some few weeks since we published an article upon the subject of secret societies. A new illustration of their great evils has just been given us. · · · The dead boy and his bleeding, senseless companions, with the breaking of the morning, were borne back to town in sad procession. The parents were gathered to the place by telegraph. A coroner's jury began its investigation. The faculty of the college and the broken-hearted friends attended to listen to the awful story. But the members of this society were bound to secrecy. Here is one of the great evils to be found in these secret conclaves. It establishes a code of honor, to which its members sacrifice all true honor. For the sake of the society, to shield it or its membership from anything injurious, the oath-taker hesitates at nothing unmanly or untruthful. Other claims are held in subserviency to the one supreme claim which the society has upon the members.

We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within. Prof. Wilder adds another terrible count to the indictment which we bring against the societies. He shows that their direct effect is to take from their members personal freedom and that liberty of judgment and action which is necessary to the best growth of the individual and the happiness of society.

Christian Statesman, Philadelphia.

A secret society man has attempted a brief reply to Prof. Wilder's exhaustive indictment of secret societies in general, and college secret societies in particular. His only points are that the evil charged on these associations is inherent in man; that there are a hundred worse ways in which young men might pass their time; that a certain amount of extra blood and the recklessness of youth finds harmless outlet here; that the dissipation which some of them conceal might take another form, and perhaps worse; that all societies are not addicted to ridiculous or barbarous ceremonies of initiation; that he has heard many an old man say that all he was in life, he owed to the influence of his society upon him; and that they are a "necessary foolishness," and if we abolish them, we shall only have some worse evil to encounter. All which we are very glad to put beside Prof. Wilder's masterly argument as the best that can be said on the other side.

The Scientific American.

As one of these college fraternities has thus been the indirect means of causing this terrible calamity, we desire just here to express our opinion on the system of secret societies as generally practiced in our institutions of learning. These associations are bodies of students, organized in principle something after the orders of Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship. In many the members are numbered by hundreds, and chapters of a single society often exist in a score of colleges at once. The records are handed down from class to class; and out of each set of Freshmen a few individuals are selected for the privilege of membership.

Whe the plan was started (during, we believe, the year 1827) the idea was simply to form clubs of young men for mutual improvement in debate and such kindred studies as are better pursued by numbers than by single persons, and to keep alive, among alumni, pleasant associations of college life. In course of time the former innocent and laudible object has been lost sight of, or rather relegated to other associations now existing in many colleges and not included in the list of secret societies; while the cardinal principle of the younger chapters of the latter organizations seems to be nothing more nor less than simple mischief, rendered attractive by a little mystery and concealed under the cloak of such cognomens (symbolized by Greek letters) as "Union of Souls," "Circle of Stars," "Lovers of Wisdom," etc. If the boyish nonsense resulted in the usual student's pranks it might be passed over with a smile; but such is not the case. The influence exerted upon boys fresh from school and for the first time free from direct home influence, we believe (from repeated instances within our personal knowledge, and in connection with one of the oldest colleges in this country) to be in a high degree baneful and demoralizing. Unless a youth has well filled pockets (in which case rival societies vie with each other to see who shall secure him, or rather his money,) he is not invited to membership at all. Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is inducted, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tacit if not open instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

Hazing, already crushed out in the government naval and military schools, is exciting so large a share of public condemnation that there is a fair prospect of its stern repression in colleges generally. The secret societies, we trust, may meet hereafter with similar treatment, at least through the influence of parents if not at the hands of faculties.

Harper's Magazine.

This standard monthly contained an article in the number for January, 1874, from the editor, George W. Curtis, ably reviewing the case; and also remarking at some length upon the Anti-masonic and political reform of 1826–32, which is thus summed up:

The spring of this triumphant political movement was hostility to a secret society. Many of the most distinguished political names of Western New York, including Millard Fillmore, Wm. H. Seward, Thurlow Weed, Francis Granger, James Wadsworth, George W. Patterson, were associated with it. And as the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. And as his disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay for a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance, so the death of young Leggett is likely to wound fatally the system of college secret societies.

The article then continues:

Every collegian knows that there is no secrecy whatever in what is called a secret society. Everybody knows, not in particular, but in general, that its object is really "good fellowship," with the charm of mystery added. Everybody knows—for the details of such societies in all countries are essentially the same—that there are certain practical jokes of initiation—tossings in blankets, layings in coffins, dippings in in cold water, stringent catechism, moral exhortations, with darkness and sudden light and mysterious voices from forms invisible, and then mystic signs and clasps and mottoes; "the whole to conclude" with the best supper that the treasury can afford. Literary brotherhood, philosophic fraternity, intellectual emulation, these are the noble names by which the youth deceive themselves and allure Freshmen; but the real business of the society is to keep the secret, and to get all the members possible from the entering class.

Each society, of course gets "the best fellows." Every touter informs the callow Freshmen that all men of character and talent hasten to join his society, and impresses the fresh imagination with the names of the famous honorary members. The Freshman, if he be acute, and he is more so every year, naturally wonders how the youth, who are undeniably commonplace in the daily intercourse of college, should become such lofty beings in the hall of a secret society; or, more probably, he thinks of nothing but the sport or the mysterious incentive to a studious and higher life which the society is to furnish. He feels the passionate curiosity of the neophyte. He is smitten with the zeal of the hermetical philosophy. He would learn more than Rosicrucian lore. That is a vision soon dispelled. But the earnest curiosity changes into esprit du corps, and the mischief is that the secrecy and the society feeling are likely to take precedence of the really desirable motives in college. There is a hundred-fold greater zeal to obtain members than there is generous rivalry among the societies to carry off the true college honors. And if the purpose be admirable, why, as Professor Wilder asks, the secrecy? What more can the secret society do for the intellectual or social training of the student than the open society? Has any secret society in an American college done, or can it do, more for the intelligent young man than the Union Debating Society at the English Cambridge University, or the similar club at Oxford? There Macauley, Gladstone, the Austins, Charles Buller, Tooke, Ellis, and the long illustrious list of noted and able Englishmen were trained, and in the only way that manly minds can be trained, by open, free, generous rivalry and collision. The member of a secret society in college is really confined, socially and intellectually, to its membership, for it is found that the secret gradually supplant the open societies. But that membership depends upon luck, not upon merit, while it has the capital disadvantage of erecting false standards of measurement so that the Mu Nu man cannot be just to the hero of the Zeta Eta. The secrecy is a spice that overbears the food. The mystic paraphernalia is a relic of the baby-house, which a generous youth disdains.

There is, indeed, an agreeable sentiment in the veiled friendship of the secret society which every social nature understands. But as students are now becoming more truly "men" as they enter college, because of the higher standard of requirement, it is probable that the glory of the secret society is already waning, and that the allegiance of the older universities to the open arenas of frank and manly intellectual contests, involving no expense, no dissipation, and no perilous temptation is returning. At least there will now be an urgent question among many of the best men in college whether it ought not to return.

CHAPTER V.

RECENT TESTIMONIES FROM COLLEGE FACULTIES AND STUDENTS.

While the evidence of the previous chapter would generally be thought conclusive, the opinions contained in the present make it more weighty and convincing. Those presented in the first part of the chapter were written during the first two months of 1874, in answer to a series of questions sent to nearly all the institutions of the United States, desiring information on: 1st, Number of secret societies in college; 2d, How many open societies; 3d, Number of students in each; 4th, Expense of membership in a secret society; 5th, General influence of the secret society on moral and intellectual standing. The replies have been arranged to correspond with these questions. They are placed in the order of States and the location given when not indicated by the name, also the religious denomination. The remarks are, with one or two exceptions, from the presidents of the respective institutions.

Remarks:—"No generalization can do justice to the facts. On the whole the moral and intellectual standing of the students improves; whether in spite of, or in consequence of these societies, would be decided differently by different persons. That there are serious evils connected with them, cannot be questioned. That they accomplish some good is equally clear. We do not believe that it would do any good to prohibit them by college law. N. Porter."

Bowdoin College,—1st, Two; 2d, Sunday-school and Young Men's Prayer-meeting; 5th, "The exercises in debate are quite a source of improvement; the moral influence depends upon the character of ruling members."

Remarks:—"No evil has resulted directly from our secret societies, but they have been guarded very closely by the faculty. The fact that any member of the faculty may attend at any time destroys much of the influence of secrecy. The tendency here is to render them more open. I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

"We consider secret societies a damage to the public ones, and as tending to form cliques among students; and as in no way promotive of scholarship. R. Allyn."

Monmouth College; United Pres.,—1st, Five; 2d, Four; 3d, Average ten each, or one-sixth the whole number of students; 5th, "It depends mostly on the character of the members of a fraternity at the time. If a fraternity is composed of upright, studious, Christian men, its influence on a new member is favorable. If, however, the leading men in a fraternity are of the opposite character, the influence on both the morals and the scholarship of a new member is disastrous in the extreme."

Remarks:—"From careful observation I am fully persuaded that very great evils are necessarily attached to the existence of a secret society in a college. Their removal from the land would be a blessing of very great value. My advice to students is to keep out of them. D. A. Wallace."

TEACHERS.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Andrus

Desire a situation as Teachers. Mr. Audrus has been for many years a Baptist minister—was formerly a successful pastor—but, for several years past, has been driven from the pastorate on account of the position he has been compelled to take on the subject of secretism. He is a graduate of Madison University, N. Y., and was a thorough scholar. Mrs. Andrus is an experienced and very successful teacher,—she formerly had charge of a young ladies' school. In two branches, as a teacher, she claims to have few equals. These are English Grammer and French. (She has no difficulty in making a child ten years old understand grammar.) Her success in teaching French has been almost without a parallel. She was formerly connected with the Haytian mission and has spoken the language for many years. Her method of teaching is original with herself. She has prepared a small work on French Pronounciation for the use of teachers which she is soon to publish.

Address at Mt. Vision, Otsego county, New York.

June.

Earth gets its price for what Earth gives us ;
The beggar is taxed for a corner to die in,
The priest hath his fee who comes and shrives us,
We bargain for the graves we lie in,
At the devil's booth are all things sold,
Each ounce of dross costs its ounce of gold,
For a cap and bells our lives we pay,
Bubbles we earn with a whole soul's tasking ;
'Tis heaven alone that is given away,
'Tis only God may be had for the asking ;
There is no price set on the lavish summer,
And June may be had by the poorest comer.
And what is so rare as a day in June ?
Then, if ever, come perfect days ;
Then Heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays :
Whether we look, or whether we listen,
We hear life murmur, or see it glisten ;
Every clod feels a stir of might,
An instinct within it that reaches and towers,
And, grasping blindly above it for light,
Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers ;
The flush of life may well be seen
Thrilling back over hills and valleys :
The cow-slip startles in meadows green,
The butter-cup catches the sun in its chalice,
And there's never a leaf or blade too mean
To be some happy creature's palace ;
The little bird sits at his door in the sun,
Atilt like a blossom among the leaves,
And lets his illumined being o'er run
With the deluge of summer it receives ;
His mate feels the eggs beneath her wings,
And the heart in her dumb breast flutters and sings ;
He sings to the wide world, and she to her nest,—
In the nice ear of nature which song is the best ?
Now is the high tide of the year,
And whatever of life hath ebbed away
Comes flooding back, with a ripply cheer,
Into every bare inlet and creek and bay ;
Now the heart is so full that a drop overfills it
We are happy now because God so wills it ;
No matter how barren the past may have been,
'Tis enough for us now that the leaves are green ;
We sit in the warm shade and feel right well
How the sap creeps up and the blossoms wells ;
We may shut our eyes, but we can't help knowing
That the skies are clear and the grass is growing,
The breeze comes whispering in our ear
That the dandelions are blossoming near,
That the maize has sprouted, that streams are flowing
That the river is bluer than the sky,
That the robin is plastering his house hard by ;
And if the breeze kept the good news back,
For other couriers we should not lack ;
We could guess it all by yon heifer's lowing,—
And hark ! how clear, bold chanticleer
Warmed with the new wine of the year,
Tells all in his lusty crowing !
Joy comes, grief goes, we know not how ;
Every thing is happy now,
Everything is upward striving ;
'Tis as easy now for the heart to be true
As for grass to be green or skies to be blue,—
'Tis the natural way of living :
Who knows whither the clouds have fled ?
In the unscarred heaven they leave no wake
And the eyes forget the tears they have shed,
The heart forgets its sorrow and ache :
The soul partakes the season's youth
And the sulphurous rifts of passion and woe
Lie deep 'neath a silence pure and smooth,
Like burnt-out craters healed with snow.

—James Russell Lowell.

The National Congress of Brewers in Boston.

This body which held its sessions June 3rd and 4th in Boston, brings statistics to show that there was an increase of the sales of light fermented liquors of about 1,000,000 barrels last year; that fifty-five per cent. of the internal revenue tax and twenty per cent. of the whole revenue of the national government came from taxes on the manufacture of stimulating beverages.

They profess that their business is a great blessing, affirming that light fermented liquors are the one thing needful for the people which must be had. They state that prohibitary laws are a failure. They desire the national government to pass laws for their protection against those who are ignorantly and unjustly their enemies. They frown at and otherwise oppose the appointment of a United States commission to examine into the influence and tendency of the use of malt liquors in the country. They have passed resolutions protesting against the course of temperance societies in teaching that the use of light fermented liquors tends to immoralty, vice, crime or pauperism; that they will, through the public press, through local associations, by personal effort, and through official organs, endeavor to influence public opinion in favor of the use of malt liquors as a wholesome, nutritious and absolutely necessary; and that they will encourage candidates for office who will use their influence in promoting the sale of all fermented liquors under discriminating licenses.

In brief, the brewers wish to prevent any investigation by which truth concerning the use of drink may be ascertained, protest against any kind of opposition from those who look on fermented liquors as evils and at the same time claim the privilege of saying and doing all they can to increase the sale of the beverages.

A few years among the Germans who freely use beer showed us a pleasant, shrewd, fine looking young carpenter changed into a rough, hoggish, bloated, profane neighbor, thickheaded, often unable to work, evidently because he had taken too much beer. A German woodsawyer with a well built frame, also a neighbor, was unable to work three-fourths of the time because of the same reason. His son, under twenty years of age, a type-setter competent to earn sixteen or eighteen dollars a week, was out of work much of the time on account of his habit of using these same light unfermented liquors.

The boys belonging to these families many of them were vulgar and profane in their language on the street, following the example set by those older who always drank freely of their beer.

Sabbath-breaking dances were the rule, where for a party of twenty or thirty persons, from one to three or more kegs of beer were essential; and, after drinking, one after another of them would project their heads from the window and empty the contents of their unappreciative stomachs upon the ground amid the shouts of the company. The midnight songs of Germans returning from beer saloons accompanied by a visit to their homes the next morning would not raise the opinion of the disinterested person as to its necessity.

In questions of politics, society and morals the average German is said to be influenced only by the questions, How will this effect my health and how will it effect my property?

It was stated in the convention that men were not born angels. Which conveyed to us the impression that Germans themselves were aware of the fact that beer drinking did not promote angelic tendencies in those who used it. If not angelic are they not devilish? If those who consider beer drinking injurious will work as honestly and vigorously for humanity as these brewers work for their pockets, their victory will be as sure in God's own time.

Was it Right?

A QUESTION OF FELLOWSHIP.

Do not be alarmed at the novelty of my topic. I only mean, was it right for me to leave the M. E. church? But, please hear my reasons for so doing, before you decide the question. I was not born a Methodist. Neither was I trained up to be one. But early in life, I found my heart and sympathies were with them, and I soon became one from choice. I suppose no one ever was better satisfied with a choice they had made than I was for about fifteen years. I loved all their usages. Their "means of grace" seemed to suit my very nature. I thought, and still believe, their doctrines are the doctrines of the Bible. Their worship was earnest, spiritual, and lively. The church was thrifty, growing, and respectable. Then why should a man leave such a church who has been a member for more than twenty years, and a zealous and successful minister for over twelve years? Simply, dear reader, because the light has shined and revealed the monster that has crept into that church, and now sits as king, and is the ruling power. In my young days, I thought nothing about secret societies; knew nothing of their nature or designs; had no idea who belonged to them and who did not. But when I became a minister, and began to associate with ministers, I soon found, to my surprise, that quite a number of the preachers of the M. E. church (especially the itinerants) were not satisfied with their sound doctrines, growing church, and all the means of grace known to the church, and, in short, with the religion of Jesus Christ. And though they preach to us that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ supplies the totality of human wants, yet in their own case they say by their actions, it is not sufficient for them. They must have another string for their bow. They must make "assurance doubly sure" by adding on the religion of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc.

These known facts first led me to a serious and prayerful consideration of the subject of Masonry. I reasoned about in this way: Masonry must be of God, of man, or from the devil. If Masonry is of God, it is good, and designed to be a blessing for mankind. Then why is it that but a few of God's children can enjoy this blessing? The old man in dotage, the young in nonage, the halt, the lame, the blind, the deformed, the imbecile, and all females, are entirely excluded from the blessings. So I concluded that Masonry and the Bible were not both from God; for the Bible says, "God is no respecter of persons," and "He is a God of justice." And if he instituted Masonry in its present form for a blessing for mankind, he is certainly a respecter of persons by bestowing special favors on those of his children who seem to least need them; and manifestly unjust by withholding favors from them who most need them. And, further, I never heard that there was any reason for any man to be ashamed of any of God's institutions, and consequently no need of a secret. So I concluded Masonry was not of God, and yet I knew it to be the ruling power in the church of my choice.

But the next question to determine was, is it of man? Man has sought out many inventions, and instituted many abominations and called them secret societies; but they are all modeled, more or less, as far as I can learn, after the old parent stock (Masonry). And if the old stock is as ancient as its advocates claim it is, and had been of man, it would surely have come to nought long ago. If it is not so ancient, it is a lie, and we know who is the father of lies and liars.

But while these unaided investigations were going on, I accidentally met with the Christian Cynosure, and immediately became a subscriber. As light began to dawn, and I learned that the name of Jesus Christ was denied, or, at least ignored in the lodge, and also the shameful, degrading, and worse than heathenish ceremonies of initiation, and also the horrid oaths, and barbarous and inhuman penalties, I became confirmed in the opinion that Masonry is of satanic origin. I believe it to be a trick of that old deceiver: first, to get God's servants to do something that both Jesus and his inspired Apostle both told them not to do, swear, and keep on swearing; secondly, to deny the only name given under heaven, among men, whereby they can be saved; and, thirdly, by influencing them to act the hypocrite, by preaching Christ to the people, praying in the name of Christ, glorying in his cross, knowing nothing but Christ and him crucified, making mention of his righteousness only,—and then go right out into the lodge with infidels, Jews, or Mohammedans, and pray, and preach, or, teach, perhaps, and have no more Jesus in it than the others have. Buddah, or Juggernaut. Is not this acting the hypocrite, one place or the other?

While I was studying this subject, I asked an intimate friend of mine, (who was a good brother in the church and a Mason) the question, "Do you ever pray in the lodge?" "O yes," was his ready reply. "Well, do you pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ?" At which his face colored, and he evaded the question. So I was satisfied it was a Christ-excluding institution. I next began to study why it is so many preachers are ensnared in the net. In conversation with the preacher in charge I told him I did not like to pay my money to a Mason; for he might pay lodge dues with it, and then I would be supporting something my soul abhorred. "You need have no fears of the kind," said he, "I have been a Mason twenty-two years, and it has never cost me $2; but I have received more than $200 from the lodge. They take in preachers free and give them degrees free, and when I fail getting my salary from the people, they make it up to me." Now here was a little more light. The enemy comes to preachers just as he did to the Saviour; promises the "kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them,"—free initiation, promotion in the church and in the lodge, and a sure support. But these are only a part of my reasons for leaving the M. E. church. I may show how the fraternity used me in a future letter. J. WILLIAMS.

Whence came drunkards? Came they not from tippling, moderate drinking, "intelligent temperance"? Who questions it? Whence proceed obscene publications, soul-polluting? From religious fiction, novels, and romances, written, published, puffed and sold by persons professing godliness? Who doubts it? The relish for strong drink, the cup that intoxicates, the degrading, poisonous "Indian weed," is unnatural, is created. The same is true of the vices, mental taste formed from reading fiction. Is not this forming of the unnatural and vicious taste in both cases, the work of Satan? It's a question yet unsolved whether the enemy of all the good succeeds in taking more souls to perdition through the instrumentality of rum and tobacco, or that of the light, frothy literature, popular works of fiction, novels and romances: both are intoxicating, dissipating, soul-ruinous.

Mrs. Swisshelm, in her Saturday Visitor, declared unhesitatingly that the whole batch of fashion-plate magazines, and other fictitious writings, spread more domestic misery and destruction over the human race than all the rum-sellers in the nation. "Yes," says she, "they instigate more murders than the tyrannical bloody Nero!" The beloved Judson, and Sister Vinton, missionaries to Burmah, expressed similar sentiments, weepingly.

Says Bishop Littlejohn, "Among the pernicious activities of our time, is the prolific production of novels and romances. These are of every grade of mischief in their composition, but they have, to a large extent, a property in common, namely, the policy of artful disguise. The debasing tendency is not only veiled, but many times greatly enhanced by the arts of rhetoric, and an elaborate and polished diction.

"Parents and teachers seem not to know, that the thirst for novel reading is cultivated by novel reading; or they seem not to know that reading fiction, with a little sprinkling of religion, prepares children to love to read fiction, though it may have a sprinkling of irreligion.

"There is that in the character of fictitious writings, properly called novels, whether the subject be secular or religious, which forms a taste different from historical, didactic, or any of the other classes of writing, and this taste is as readily formed by holding the child upon religious novels in his younger years, as if he were supplied with secular novels.

"By our religious machinery the child is piously trained to seek his gratifications of mind amid elements of grossest corruption. If the enemy of all good should set himself to devise a scheme to take children, out of all his cunning, he could hardly contrive a better way to avoid giving alarm and to secure the result. 'Stolen waters are sweet, and the bread eaten in secret is pleasant. But he knoweth not the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.' Prov. ix. 17, 18.

"In the Sabbath-school library, and in the books purchased for children, we furnish them with the means of cultivating a taste for novel reading, and so prepare them greedily to devour whatever fictitious trash may fall in their way, and then waste our breath in deploring their exposure to a corrupt literature."

Goldsmith, himself a novel writer, says: "Above all, never let your son touch a novel or romance. How delusive, how destructive, are these features of consummate bliss! They teach the youthful mind to sigh after beauty and happiness that never existed, to despise the little good that Fortune has mixed in our cup, by expecting more than she ever gave."

Rev. John Foster, an eminent Baptist minister in England, says: "Novels are doing incalculable mischief. I wish we could collect them all together, and make one vast fire of them. I should exult to see the smoke of them ascend like that of Sodom and Gomorrah: the judgment would be as just." The fearful results of novel reading are a standing warning against the practice. Let the pulpit and the press speak out boldly, and arouse the unsuspecting.

You are familliar with the high standing of Dr. W. H. Vandoren, of Chicago, as a minister of the gospel. He speaks thus on religious novels, pushed into notice by whom? can you divine? Alas! for the aid the "old serpent," the devil, gets from the church or those professing godliness! But to the quotation of Bro. Vandoren. Says he: "It were a thousand fold better if nine out of ten Sunday-school libraries were taken from their shelves and committed to the flames."

Five distinguished elders of the city of New York, told the writer, with tears, "We are compelled to keep our children out of Sunday-school altogether, because of the swarms of pious novels which infest the shelves."

These pious novels may not only advocate any one bad practice or evil principle; but as punches and various drugged wine lead directly to form a taste for alcohol, so these books lead to novels. The fact that some professors of Christianity and so-called ministers write them, is no more an argument for their being harmless than our reverend forefathers' use of brandy made it a safe precedent for their children. It is a well-known fact that those bearing the office of ministers have proved among the bitterest curses with which our race has ever been visited.

The morbid desire for novelty destroys that sobriety of mind inculcated by the Holy Ghost upon the youth to be "sober-minded."

The wine to an invalid imparts an unnatural glow. Young minds, depraved in all their energies, soon reach an abnormal state. They have the glow, not of health, but of the hectic.

These religious romances lead our youth to the broad, gilded, flowery paths of modern novels. A novel is a theatre in the mind! All the gorgeous curtains, actors, actresses, enchantry, facinating the depraved heart, kindling all its passions, fast prepare the road to the theatre.

It makes one sick at heart to think of pleasure's siren voice, and the promises given of joyous days and years to come.

"Alas! the dead are in her house,
Her guests in depths of hell;
She weaves the winding-sheet of souls
And lays them in the urn of everlasting death."

Why not Pray for Secretism?

Why do not the reverend gentlemen who so tenaciously cling to secretism in view of the great and increasing opposition to the ancient and honorable (?) institution, raise their voices in humble and faithful petitions to the great Architect of the "grand lodge above" for his help in this hour of their great need?

The cowans (that is, dogs,) are becoming almost nervous with anxiety to drag out the lovely thing to the gaze of "the vulgar," and publishing to the world its secret sayings and doings; and it is daily and hourly losing power and influence; and all their efforts to cover it up and hide its lovely features and its blushing modesty are vain. Surely men would become more thoroughly impressed with their sincerity if they would commence calling on their god for help n presence of their congregations. This, too, must certainly be a duty if it be a thing of such vast utility, so ennobling and elevating and enlightening as they tell us it is. They are shamefully negligent of this means of making favorable impressions on the minds of their auditors. It always impresses us with a man's attachment to and confidence in a cause when we hear him earnestly praying for its success.

Then, too, they ought to remember that there are hundreds who daily pray for the overthrow of secretism. . . . This surely is consistent if they believe it to be as Bishop Weaver said, over his own signature, the most effective earthly power "to draw the churches away from Christ." Perfectly consistent. I know there are many who profess to hold a similar view of the subject, and who are never heard presenting the matter at a throne of grace, but rather act as though it would be wicked to pray in that way. But they are not consistent; their prayers do not harmonize with their profession. Perhaps it is because they are fearful. A Christian has no right to be fearful. 'The fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, . . . and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." The fearful are enumerated with a very bad crowd. If you believe that secretism is against the kingdom of Christ, as it most certainly is, why not, in this dreadful struggle between light and darkness, call incessantly and earnestly, publicly as well as privately, on the ever-merciful, the all-wise, and all-powerful Father of all for help? He is a prayer-hearing God; he "will be inquired of." "Lest they think mine idol hath done it." It will intimidate the enemy; it will stir their conscience, it will keep them in remembrance of their wrongs. They will grow fearful that you will bias God against them. In our nation's greatest troubles and their advocates always felt alarmed when they heard Christians praying God to overthrow their wicked institutions. They claimed to be in a righteous cause, and to believe that God is always right, and, of course, on their side. And yet they were fearful that he would become so engrossed with the voice of men on their knees as to forget them and their holy cause, and even finally (through forgetfulness or sympathy, perhaps,) turn against them. Ah, it is true that prayer has power with God and with man. But, as Prof. C. Blanchard said at Pittsburgh, "It is discouraging to see so many chickens with boots on, and some of them in the pulpit."

The word says, "Pray without ceasing." Shall we pray continually, and pray against every evil except only that which is most powerful? Shall we forbear because Satan would be displeased if we pray against his pet institution? If he has a pet evil on earth, surely Freemasonry is that pet; and I pray the blessed God to bless, strengthen, protect, help, and increase rapidly the number of the men who stand up to expose it.—*J. The Sensuous in Worship.

Ceremonies addressed to the senses are characteristics of the pagan religion. When paganism infected the Christian church, as it did to a lamentable extent when the Roman Empire under Constantine, embraced Christianity, the original simplicity of worship gradually disappeared. Pagan temples were changed into Christian churches, in many instances with but little change of order and ceremony in the worship. Whole communities of Roman subjects were forced into the church without any regard to their knowledge and belief of Christian truth, or their experience, as individuals, of its renewing and sanctifying power When the church became largely made up of such members and of officers, if not entirely of the same character, yet so ignorant and weak as to be ready to accommodate religion to the tastes and demands of such a membership, it is not wonderful that the Roman Church became semi-paganized, with a worship addressed to the senses in all manner of superstitious ceremonies. In that way came into existence the Roman Catholic Church.

In the Reformation the church was brought back near to its original order, and its religion to much of original simplicity and purity. Still, there lingered in some of the Reformed churches, most noticeably in that of England, attachment to the forms of a ceremonious religion. In its order of government and ritual of worship, as finally settled under Elizabeth, there could not be claimed for it more than a semi-reformation. It has, nevertheless, been an influential church, and has done much to form the tastes and affect the order of worship in other churches, until the fashionable religion of to-day is one in which music, architecture, decoration and some sort of showy service are the chief elements.

The Puritanism that so long and so stoutly withstood this influence, that affirmed and enforced simplicity in worship against all that was merely sensuous, has grown unpopular. The name has become a title of reproach. It has become but another name for narrow-minded bigotry and opposition to everything beautiful in religion. The times in which its power was most felt developed stalwart Christian characters. They were struggling for the great realities of religion, and did not conceal their contempt for all time-servers, and ceremonial triflers. In this, it may be, they indulged too much in the severities without the amenities of religion, and were carried to an extreme in their opposition to legitimate uses of architecture and music in advancing its interests. So far as these things are true of Puritanism they were but the incidents of its simplicity, its love of truth and its intensity of zeal. In growing from these the reformed churches are, in some instances, getting away from the essential elements of Puritanic character and power. The present danger is of the opposite extreme, not merely in indifference to the great truths of religion, but the emptiness of a mere sensuous worship. Great piles of architecture with their "dim religious light," music in which worshipers cannot join, ceremonies in which preaching, unless sensational, is of the least account, audiences beguiling themselves with forms of religion that please their senses without touching their hearts or disturbing their consciences—this is the extreme to which present tendencies are carrying us.

Give us Puritanism with all its austerity rather than the laxity of principle, weakness of Christian character and the mere sensuousness of much of the religious service of the times. But we need take neither. We may be steadfast in our religious convictions, may affirm and defend them, and do no discourtesy to others. We may preserve simplicity and spirituality in our religious worship with the best use of the best order of music. We may have our houses of worship comfortable and attractive without extravagance or aims at superstitious effect. We may properly have all our services as attractive as they can be made consistently with the nature and right observance of God's ordinances.

But we are not to add to these what he has not appointed for his worship; we are not to administer them by any acts or accompaniments unauthorized by him; we are not to dishonor them by association in any way with mere mummeries of superstition—always remembering that our religion is spiritual, that the senses are to be addressed only as through them we may reach the soul, and that all forms of mere sensuous gratification are but a mockery of worship.

In short we must remember that God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. A right application of these words will rule out everything unauthorized in worship, especially all that would hinder direct communion of the soul with God, all forms of mere sensuous worship whether by images or instruments, acts or ceremonies, which so far as they affect religious feeling keep it away from the supreme object of devotion.—The United Presbyterian.

History Travestied and Tortured.

Mr. Froude wrote a history some time since, largely devoted to an effort to prove that Henry VIII. was not quite the lecherous and blood-thirsty ruffian he was generally believed to be; and other writers have exerted their ingenuity to show that Richard the Third instead of being a wry-necked and cruel murderer was comely and aimable. Copying this example, we learn from Fraser's Magazine and The English Independent, that the "Christian Brothers," as certain English and Irish Jesuits style themselves, have prepared and are engaged in the work of still further editing and publishing a series of "Lesson Books" intended for Roman Catholic children and youths at school, which are to be a species of "erasers," intended to rub out from the pages of history all those blots with which it has been defaced by the superstition or the sanguinary cruelty and intolerance of Roman Catholics.

The aim of these astute Jesuits is to create a denominational literature and place it in the hands of all their school-children, in which the Romish church is represented as having been distinguished ever by meekness and long-suffering, by tolerance and brotherly love, and by an ardent admiration for and patronage of literature and science; while it is further shown to have been uniformly met by unprovoked cruelty, oppression, and the densest and most obstructive ignorance at the hands of Protestants. They dwell on the harshness of the English penal laws to Irishmen, and suppress the story of the massacres of Protestants. They make credit to Cardinal Langton for acting with the English nobles in opposition to King John, but say nothing of the fact that he was suspended by Pope Innocent III. for the stand which he made, or of the further fact that this same pope declared Magna Charta null and void, and anathematized all those who had taken part in wresting it from the tyrant. The "persecutions" under Elizabeth are grossly magnified, but the facts, to quote the language of Dr. Dollinger, that a "succession of popes sanctioned the assassination of heretical sovereigns, and that one actually instigated attempts upon the life of Queen Elizabeth," are sedulously concealed. The "burnings" of the Protestant martyrs by Mary are softened down into mere "severities," the details of which are mendaciously suppressed, and even these are attributed to the civil authorities, who, it is alledged, were "influenced by political, not religious motives," in the face of the well-known historical fact that Romish archbishops and bishops, composing an ecclesiastical court, consigned the martyrs of that day to the flames. It is claimed that the fifty thousand persons who were hung, beheaded, or burnt to death in the low countries on account of their religion only suffered the natural consequences of a civil rebellion against their sovereign; and also that "religion had nothing to do with the massacre on St. Bartholomew's-day;" but they say nothing of the motives which led Philip to destroy the Protestants in the low countries, or of the fact that Pope Gregory issued a bull approving of the massacre on St. Bartholomew's-day, and exhorting Charles IX. to complete the work which he had so well begun; nor that the cruel slaughter was depicted on the walls of the Sistine chapel, nor that a medal was struck by the papacy in honor of the event. But even this miserable travesty of history seems tame alongside of the efforts of the "Christian Brothers" to paint the terrors of the Inquisition in enchanting colors. With unparalled mendacity and audacity combined, they undertake to show that the terrible imprisonments, mutilations, tortures, autos da fe, and other atrocities of the priests and Jesuits who inspired and controlled the Inquision were simply "abuses," which must be ascribed "to the civil and not the ecclesiastical power," notwithstanding the infamous rescript of Innocent VIII: "We enjoin and command the said secular officers, under penalty of excommunication, that within six days after they shall be legally required, they regularly execute the sentence pronounced against heretics, without seeing the said process carried on by you, and without allowing any appeal."

We are curious to know if this scandulous and unblushing perversion of historical evidence is to be repeated in this country; and whether the children of the Romish church in the United States are also to be nurtured on an aliment composed of impudence and fraud. As the old Inquisition tortured and killed its victims, so this new Inquisition puts history to the rack and the thumb-screw, and crushes out of it all the truth that gives it any vitality.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION AT SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Minutes, Resolutions, Organization, Etc.

The beautiful Onondaga Valley of central New York, is a fit location for one of the finest inland cities of our country. Syracuse has a population of about 50,000, and has the appearance of being more generally inhabited by American citizens than most cities of its size in the country. The Erie Canal and extensive railroad connections aid its commerce; three daily papers furnish its news; and numerous churches and schools aid in spreading morality and a various knowledge among the people. The University of Syracuse is located in the outskirts of the city. Here are also the headquarters of Wesleyan Methodism; the Book Room and publishing house is near the center of the city; and funds are nearly subscribed for the erection of new and commodious buildings, which will cost $30,000.

The New York State Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies was organized here, in the same Shakspeare Hall, in November, 1870; and in March, 1873, held in the same place its second annual meeting. A local organization also has added largely to the zeal and information of the citizens on this reform. Through the energetic efforts of the committee of the State Association, and especially its actuary, Rev. L. N. Stratton, of the American Wesleyan, lecturers were sent through large portions of the State during May, opening the way for a large place in the prayers and sympathies of Christian people in behalf of the national meeting. All these circumstances combined to make a great and useful gathering.

As recommended by the National Executive Committee, the usual preliminary meeting for prayer and conference was held in the afternoon of Tuesday, June 2d, a report of which from the secretary will be found in another part of this paper.

In the evening the delegates to the National Convention assembled at an early hour, and before the formal introduction of business a time was spent in earnest prayer to God for guidance during the meetings of the Convention, and in thanksgiving for great mercies of the year past.

At 8 o'clock Rev. J. P. Stoddard, General Agent of the Association, called to order, and announced that in the absence of the President, Rev. J. G. Carson, of Ohio, the Vice-president from Michigan, Rev. John Levington, would preside. The audience by request united in the grand old hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" with fervor, and Rev. A. Crooks, of the American Wesleyan, led heart and thought as one to the throne of grace. A number of the prominent members of the Convention were invited to seats on the platform: Elder David Bernard, author of Light on Masonry; President Blanchard; Dr. D. C. McLaren, of Geneva, N. Y.; Rev. E. B. Rollins, former editor of the Vermont Luminary; Rev. B. T. Roberts, of Rochester, N. Y., General Superintendent of the Free Methodist church; Rev. J. L. Barlow, State Agent and Lecturer for N. Y.; Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Ohio State Agent; Enoch Honeywell, of Altay, N. Y., and others. The appointment of committees to facilitate the business of the Convention was first taken up, with the following result:

On Enrollment—Rev. William Jackson and R. H. Morey, of New York.
To Nominate Officers—Rev. L. N. Statton, of Syracuse, Rev. Joseph Travis, of Winnebago, Ill., Rev. J. K. Alwood, of Metz, Ind., Rev. William Leuty, of Ligonier, Ind., Edward B. Rollins, of Vermont.
On Finance—Rev. Adam Crooks, D. Kirkpatrick, Montgomery Merrick, of Syracuse.
On Petitions and Resolutions—Rev. J. L. Barlow, of Saratoga, N. Y., Rev. John Levington, of Detroit, Zebulon Weaver Esq. of Syracuse, J. G. Mattoon, of Bryan, O.

The remainder of the evening was occupied with brief addresses. The programme was arranged for more extended speeches from the presiding officer and Rev. B. T. Roberts, but the former was suffering from hoarseness and wished to be excused from long speaking. He continued, however, stating that the object of the Convention was opposition to all secret societies whatever. We are not come together in secret with closed doors, but we invite all, even the oath-bound clans, and we will do them good. There is a secret empire in our midst, plotting against our republican government, violating law, usurping authority, manifesting a power for evil. Against this power we are enlisted and will never abandon the field. You might as well try to stop the fall of waters at Niagara with your hand as to stop this great movement. Our country has but one flag, and no other flag should be permitted to wave in this land. He had a knowledge of the workings of secret societies and knew them to be in opposition to Christ's religion, and he was ready to do his part in rooting from this land secret organizations of every kind.

Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Earnest Christian, Rochester, N. Y., said that he was not prepared to speak at length on the subject of secret societies, though regarding them as a great evil. He had, even in boyhood, experience with these societies which satisfied him of their character. They are in flat contradiction to the Scriptures which say that he that doeth truth cometh to the light. A good cause does not need a vail to cover it; bad ones do. We tear away the vail and uncover the hidden iniquity. When a young man, engaged in school teaching, he was approached by an Odd-fellow, who invited him to join that order as it would be a great help to him in his profession. He was indignant at such a proposition. Why should not the order be of as much assistance in forwarding so laudable an object without his becoming a member.

Society has an interest in having honesty rewarded. Secret societies take away this inducement to success, because they crush merit and elevate men who are unworthy. The past winter in New York and other cities men have been reduced to starvation because they did not dare go to their work for fear of some trade combination. These unions proclaim a strike and force all outside to obey their dictations. All these combinations should be suppressed by law. Hume says that at one time in the history of Great Britain, these organizations were made punishable and finable by law; and unless they had been thus suppressed, England would not occupy to day her position among the leading nations of the earth. Such combinations are especially dangerous in our own country where they have the greatest liberty to perfect their organization and push forward their schemes of ambition and social disruption.

So far as secret societies have any influence they promote unworthy men to office. They are made to elevate bad men who can not elevate themselves; and their success in this is sapping the very foundations of our government of civil and religious liberty. A minister of his acquaintance while connected with the Methodist Episcopal church wanted a high position in the conference. He was told by those who knew his ability and ambition that he was unfit for the position and if he tried he could not get a vote. But he replied that there were enough secret society votes to elect him; and they did over and over, year after year.

These secret societies interfere with the administration of justice; as was notably the case with a murderer in Michigan, [Vanderpool] who was three times tried, and was cleared by Masonry. Another case had come under his own observation in New York State only a few years ago. A young man got into a quarrel with an inn-keeper. The latter was a powerful man, and knocked down the other and jumped upon his breast so as to cause his death in a short time. The coroner's jury headed by a Mason and with other Masonic members decided that the young man died of consumption.

It is high time people were aroused on these questions. Communism is only another branch of the secret societies. These may repeat the scenes of Paris in New York, Chicago or Syracuse. Every one should think on these matters and ask the Lord what wilt thou have me to do. In closing he suggested that as Bro. Mathews was present and was good at exhorting he would be glad to hear him.

Rev. James Mathews, of Brooklyn, was called for and came forward. He read from Exodus xxi. 28, 29, concerning the ox that pushes with his horns; and remarked there was once a great ox that pushed William Morgan, and that it was his wont to do so thousands acknowledged by coming out from the lodges. Charles G. Finney was one of these and his testimony was yet clear and strong against the lodge. He had some experience with the institution in Brooklyn. After he had preached a sermon on Masonry a Masonic editor arose in the audience and said, "I pronounce every word you have said a lie!" But the discourse was largely made up of extracts from Masonic authors. One need not be a seceding Mason to incur the opposition of the lodge. If a man only acts out his Christian principles, if he only lives with honor as a man, he will meet scorn and abuse and open opposition from the lodge.

President Blanchard arose to call attention to the address of Mr. Greene, of Indianapolis, upon the grange, which would be delivered on the next evening. When the English Barons, he said, extorted the Magna Charta from King John, the tillers of the soil were left out of the arrangement, as their rights were considered by those gentlemen as too little for notice. Ever since, the farmers have been left out of every movement towards social advancement. But when at length they learned that they had some rights and began to organize in clubs, the Masons broke up with the movement and gave them the grange, which is the last hope of the devil.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard was loudly called for and coming forward spoke briefly and hopefully of the final triumph of the reform. There are times, he said, when men are like straws upon the water, like mists before the rising sun, which appear a moment and are gone. So those who stand up against mighty wrongs seem to pass away and to have accomplished no result. But though the men are lost to view, wrongs are being righted. This fact should encourage every worker in this reform. Another comforting thought is that the same God who numbers the hairs of our heads, who marks the sparrow's fall, who has broken the shackles from the human mind by a Luther, who set free the myriads of Russian serfs and the four million slaves in our own land,—that same God will, by and by, bring about that kingdom which is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost," and every right word, every sincere prayer will at the last be found to have its place in the great work of reformation. So let us be of good courage. The banner of Christ shall yet float over all nations, and all men shall be the free men of the Lord Jesus.

The General Agent, in announcing the programme for the morrow, said that in coming through Ohio about a month ago he had taken pains to call on that venerable man of God, Charles G. Finney, now rapidly descending to the close of life. He sent his kindest greetings to the Convention and prayed that the spirit of the Lord would rest upon it. Especially he sent encouraging words to the younger men who had espoused this cause. Announcements for the exercises of the next day were made and a cordial invitation extended to the citizens of Syracuse to be present.

After singing the doxology, and benediction by Elder J. L. Barlow, the session adjourned.

Wednesday.

MORNING SESSION.

The hour spent in prayer and conference, before the business of the Convention was opened, was probably the best meeting of the day. Among the interesting testimonies given that of Bro. Givens of Indiana was especially interesting as from a seceder. He said that when 21 years of age, he went to California and was led into the Masonic lodge. This step cost him $75 in fees. Col. Totten was his instructor in the work of the order. He tried for years to make himself an infidel through Freemasonry. He was at last brought to see the inqiuity of such attempts, and also of the institution, and fully abandoned both. He had suffered persecution and almost personal violence for this step; but his love for Christ and truth was stronger than all else.

Business was at length commenced with Aaron Floyd, of Pittsburg, Vice-president from Pensylvania, in the chair. A committee was selected to arrange and present the voluminous correspondence from various States: M. N. Downing, E. P. Sellew and C. A. Blanchard. The committee on enrollment was also instructed to place upon the roll the names of all who were present with the intention of becoming members, but were not appointed to represent any auxiliary body or church. A committee to arrange the business of the Convention was also appointed, consisting of J. P. Stoddard, Rev. N. Wardner and Elder J. L. Barlow.

President J. Blanchard, from the Executive Committee, reported, verbally, its action in securing the incorporation of the National Christian Association according to the laws of the State of Illinois. The report was adopted and the following chosen a committee to suggest what further action might be necessary: B. T. Roberts, J. Blanchard and John Levington.

The Committee on Nominations, through Rev. Joseph Travis, presented a partial report as follows:

For President—Rev. B. T. Roberts, of New York.
Vice-Presidents—Rev. L. N. Stratton, of New York; John M. Rownds, of Ohio; S. B. Erwin, of Indiana; Daniel Brailey, of Vermont; I. L. Buchwalter, of Iowa; G. W. Needles, of Missouri; A. C. Chittenden, of Wisconsin; S. B. Allen, of Illinois; George Kipp, of Michigan; Aaron Floyd, of Pennsylvania; J. A. Conant, of Connecticut; S. D. Greene, of Massachusetts; F. Manter, of Maine; P. B. Chamberlain, of Washington Territory; Oren Cravath, of Minnesota; N. B. Blanton, of Kansas; Francis Gillette, of Connecticut.
Recording Secretaries—H. L. Kellogg and Rev. James Mathews.
Corresponding Secretary—C. A. Blanchard.
Lecturer and General Agent—J. P. Stoddard.
Treasurer—H. L. Kellogg.

At request of its chairman, H. L. Kellogg was added to the committee, which afterward reported the following:

Directors—Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard, Archibald Waite, I. A. Hart, C. R. Hagerty, Ezra. A. Cook, J. G. Terrill, O. F. Lumry, J. M. Wallace, Isaac Preston, William Pinkney.
Auditor—H. A. Fischer.

The nominations of the committee were unanimously voted. At the request of Vice-president Floyd the President elect came forward and took the chair, and in a few appropriate remarks asked the aid of the Convention in his position and hoped that God would guide in all the proceedings.

The Executive Committee reported through its chairman, Pres. J. Blanchard, that no progress had been made to secure a joint stock company on the basis suggested last year. The report was accepted and the business continued with the Executive Committee for their further action.

Pres. J. Blanchard, J. L. Barlow and L. N. Stratton were appointed a committee on Political Action at the last anniversary. The chairman reported, verbally, in favor of the speedy organization of The American Party, which shall be the political agency for carrying out the objects of the National Christian Association. He explained that this name had once been used by the "Know-Nothings," but it is so broad, all-embracing and significant that it should not be discarded for that reason. The name embraces all our people, irrespective of their original nationalities. He would welcome all Americans to the American Party. As the fundamental principle of this organization he favored the adoption of the declaration that as ours is a Christian, and not a heathen government, this fact ought to be recognized in our fundamental law. He read a number of letters of prominent men who are in sympathy with this movement. One of the letters read mentioned as a fact that there are good men in the lodge. Rev. John Levington arose to correct so erroneous an idea that there could be pious and good men connected with secret orders, and said, "I tell you, brethren, we must get rid of this idea." President Roberts suggested that the remarks were not upon the question.

Dr. McLaren, of Geneva, N. Y., said that the United Presbyterian church to which he belonged took but little part in politics. He was an Anti-mason in Morgan times and expelled persistently adhering Masons from his church. This reform was needed more in the churches than in government. He was in favor of making this movement non-sectarian, and the enforcing of Christian principles as the means of modifying, and possibly doing away with, civil government.

Rev. Mr. Wilder, of New York, would embody in the report the declaration that we acknowledge one God and are a Christian nation.

Rev. Mr. Foster, of Syracuse, desired careful consideration of the question of carrying this movement into political action.

The report was finally recommitted to be presented in writing.

A request from a lady delegate to know whether the Convention would recognize female suffrage as part of its platform was also referred to the committee.

The Treasurer's report was then read and referred to the Finance Committee.

The report of the Corresponding Secretary was then called for, and as Rev. I. A. Hart, the Secretary, was unable to be present, his report was read by the Secretary of the Convention. It was referred to the Secretaries to make extracts for the minutes and was afterward voted to be sent to other papers which would publish in full or in part.

Bro. L. N. Stratton noticing Mr. George W. Clark, the celebrated "Liberty Singer" of abolition times, in the audience, suggested that he be requested to favor the Convention with a song. He complied, and coming forward said he wanted to take a text from a fling of the Rochester Democrat at this Convention which he saw on coming to Syracuse. Such ridicule by the press was no cause for discouragement. He would sing

A SONG OF PROGRESS.

The world is on the move
Look about, look about,
There is much we may improve
Do not doubt, do not doubt.
And to all who understand
There's a warning voice at hand
Ringing out, ringing out.

Thongh gloomy hearts despond
At the sky, at the sky,
There's a sun to shine beyond
By and by, by and by:
Ere the vessel that we urge
Shall beneath the surface merge
A heacon on the verge
Shall be nigh, shall be nigh.

Step by step the longest march
Can be donc, can hc done;
Single stones will form an arch
One by one, one by one;
And with union what we will
May be all accomplished still,
Drops of water turn a mill
Singly none, singly none.

Brag and bluster float as froth
O'er the wave, o'er the wave;
Hoary treason worse than both—
Fools may rave, fools may rave;
But the honest hearts that think,
And the hardy hands that link,
And for pikes use pen and ink
Are the brave, are the brave.

Let us onward then for right,
Nothing more, nothing more;
And let justice be the might
We adore, we adore;
Bnild no hopes upon the sand,
For our people, heart and hand,
Can make this a better land
Than before, than before.

Pres. Blanchard moved that the Association adjourn to-morrow (Thursday) at 12 o'clock to give opportunity for the holding of a mass meeting, at two in the afternoon, of those opposed to secret societies, to take such action as may be deemed best on the subject of organizing a political party.

Rev. E. B. Rollins, of Vermont, aged eighty-two years, was introduced as one who had taken seven degrees in Masonry. He became a Mason on the promise that it would render him more useful as a minister of the Gospel. He found himself disappointed and deceived, and for more than two years was silent. Then he heard brother Masons boast that a man in Western New York had been put to death for violating the secrets of the order. Officers of the order held that as the Masonic fraternity was older than the government of the United States, it had at least as good a right to punish offenders against its laws. He then publicly confessed his sin in taking the Masonic obligations. The greater part of Mr. Rollin's remarks were nearly a repetition of those made in the Tuesday afternoon meeting and may be read elsewhere. An intensely interesting incident which he had from his father-in-law concerning a woman who was compelled to take the Masonic oath Mr. Rollins has consented to write out for publication hereafter.

After benediction by Pres. Blanchard, a recess was taken till two o'clock.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

opened with reading a portion of Scripture and prayer by Rev. D. B. Douglass of New York and singing the hymn

"A charge to keep I have."

After some preliminary business, reading of minutes, etc., an address from Rev. D. P. Rathbun of New York was next on the programme. Previous to his remarks Mr. Clark was called on for another of his stirring songs, the recollection of the first one giving a zest to the invitation. Mr Clark remarked that we had overcome one great evil, slavery, but the one we now are battling is a worse enemy; its iron bands are stronger than those of intemperance. He sang a beautiful song, "The Freedom of the Soul," adding to a clear and finely modulated voice, such well-fitting gestures as gave greater impressiveness and earnestness to the piece. Mr. Clark never sang during the meeting without reaching every heart, and tears were often seen flowing down the cheeks of aged listeners. These songs will all appear in time. Most of them will necessarily be crowded out of this report.

The remainder of the afternoon was chiefly occupied with addresses by D. P. Rathbun and D. S. Caldwell, and the reading of a valuble historical paper written by Elder David Bernard, "Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times." These will be published hereafter. After Elder Rathbun's address Pres. Roberts said, "We have had a war speech, now let's have a war song," and called on the audience to sing "Am I a soldier of the Cross," which was done with great earnestness. Immediately following Rev. A. Crooks from the Financial Committee reported that about $300 would be necessary to meet all the expenses of the Convention. It was proposed to appoint a sub-committee to raise this amount. Others suggested, Father Green, of Indiana, especially, to strike while the iron is hot and raise the money at once. Subscriptions were called for and the members of the Convention responded promptly, and meanwhile Mr. Clark added to the interest in his inimitable way with a song. The amount raised in cash was $172 and $30 in subscriptions.

The paper of Elder Bernard was accompanied by an autograph letter of John Quincy Adams, expressing satisfaction on reading the revelations of Masonry in Mr. Bernard's great work, also by the diploma issued to Elder Bernard by a Utica lodge, in Utica, N. Y. On account of feebleness of body and of voice Elder Bernard had requested Prof. C. A. Blanchard to read his "Reminiscences;" himself remarking that many facts contained in the paper had been before published, but the full and connected statement was now first written out. Of the three persons through whom the higher degrees were given to the world he only yet remained alive, and this would probably be his last testimony by which the circle of proof was made complete. The thanks of the Convention were given by rising vote to Elder Bernard and the paper ordered to be printed.

The General Agent reported nearly 7,000 names to the corner-stone, and moved a committee to arrange them and forward to President Grant. Pres. Blanchard, D. Kirkpatrick and G. W. Needles were chosen to that duty. Mrs. M. B. Gage, of Fayetteville, N. Y., had been appointed to make some remarks upon Woman's Work in the Anti-secret Reform, but the lateness of the hour caused a postponement until evening, and after announcements the Convention adjourned until the evening session.

A Chapter on Manners.

It is a sign of bad manners to look over the shoulders of a person who is writing, to see what is written.

It is bad manners to occupy a seat while other people stand around without a seat.

It is bad manners to go into any person's house without taking off your hat.

It is bad manners to use profane language.

It is bad manners to use your own knife at meals in cutting off a piece of meat, or to use it on the butter dish—get a clean knife.

It is bad manners to go into any person's house with mud or dirt on your shoes.

It is bad manners to talk in company when others are talking, or to talk or whisper in church.

It is bad manners to talk in company to one or two persons about some subject which the others do not understand.

It is bad manners to stare at strangers in company or in the street.

It is bad manners to say "yes" or "no" to a stranger, or to your parents, or to aged people; let it be "yes, sir," and "no, sir."

It is bad manners to pick your teeth at the table, and bad manners to pick them with a pin in any company.

It is bad manners to comb your hair and brush your coat in the eating room.

It is a sign of low breeding to make a display of your finery or equipage.

It is bad manners to boast of your wealth or prosperity or good fortune in the presence of the poor or those less fortunate than you are.

It is vulgar to talk much about yourself, and it is very low and vulgar to lie.

It is bad manners to stand in the middle of the pavement when people are passing, or to make remarks about those who pass.

It is bad manners to spit on the floor or carpet, or to spit at meals, and yet many people who think they are genteel do it. If you must spit at meals, get up and go out. Children ought to be taught at school that spitting is mere habit.

OUR MAIL.

J. G. Laughlin, College Springs, Ia., writes:

"Enclosed find $2.50 for weekly Cynosure in post-office order. Wish I could send you one hundred subscribers. Hurry up that political party opposed to all secrecy, as I have voted my last vote for any secret society man. I indorse the Cynosure's position in sweeping the whole brood of secrecy by the board."

Mrs. S. B. Allen, Morrison, Ill., writes:

"Dr. Donaldson, our Deacon and Superintendent of the Sabbath-school, joined the Masons three weeks ago. He expects to go to Chicago to live. I shall not commune with the church or attend the Sabbath school while he remains."

E. Manville, Turner, Ill., writes:

"I have tried to get some subscriptions for the Cynosure, but I have not got any, but may in the future."

Persevere. Good seed planted and properly cared for will surely grow and the harvest will come in due time.

Jacob Haffner, Donnellson, Ia., quotes the following lines:

"Right is right since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Rev. E. P. Selew, Rome, N. Y., writes:

"Bro. Barlow lectured in my church last Friday night. The meeting was a success. This is a strongly Masonic city. But the Anti-masonic leaven is working."

Wm. G. Walters, Leslie, Van Wert Co., O., writes:

"I love to read it (the Cynosure) and I take great delight in handing it to my neighbors to read. Only to-day I asked a Freemason to subscribe for it, gave him a copy to read, told him to read and pray when he read it and then pick out the false parts and come to me the next time we meet. Masonry is pretty strong here and the people are wonderfully in the dark concerning the Anti-masonic movement. May God arouse them. I distributed all the Anti-masonic tracts you sent me at our township election this spring. The people were astonished when I opened fire against the lodge by handing out tracts to friend and foe. We need a lecturer here in this county (Van Wert) bad. I have been soliciting subscribers for the Cynosure, but it is a very busy time with me at present, as I am a farmer by occupation. I have succeeded in getting only four subscribers for three months, but they all promise to renew if they like the paper. I intend to try to get more and still more."

Curtis Cogswell, Deer Lick, O., writes:

"I have now spent two days to get signers to your petition to U. S. Grant to prevent the Masons from laying the corner-stone in Chicago. But I am about discouraged. I have only got twenty-seven names as yet. But I will fight the Masons as long as I live, and do all I can for their downfall; because I have been a Mason and know it is the work of the devil. I will do all I can for your paper and cause, for I know you are on the right track."

We think you need not be discouraged; if every friend of the cause was succeeding as well, we would make a strong movement against Masonry."

G. C. Hinsdale, Wyanet, Ill., writes:

"We cannot give it (the Cynosure) up, we believe every family ought to take one."

Saml. Lilly, Bronson, Mich., writes:

"I hope the Anti-masons will have success and come off victorious."

Benj. H. Binford, Westland, Ind., writes:

"No one in my neighborhood ever saw the paper until I showed it to them. I think I will get some more new subscribers before long."

We believe there are many neighborhoods which have not seen the Cynosure that will welcome it gladly if a friend will only introduce it.

C. O. Beatty. Creenfield O., writes:

"I have a petition out, am doing well, and will send to Syracuse on time."

John McLean, Keokuk, Iowa, writes:

"Some say they will send for the paper soon. I will do all I can for it, God being my helper."

Rev. Wm. Bridgman, Streator, Ill., writes:

"I discard all secret societies, especially Masonry, which I regard as the mother of abominations, in all secret organizations."

Jacob Seammahorn, Rockport, Ind., sends one three months subscriber and writes:

"This is a small business, but we must not despise the day of small things. Everything has a beginning. The Cynosure is giving satisfaction to all subscribers as far as I know. . . . I hope to be able to send more soon."

We believe great, stupendous movements have sometimes turned on hinges as small as a single three months subscriber.

Hope Davis, Carpenterville, Ill., writes:

"According to President Blanchard's request I have got fifty-four names to send to the Rev. L. N. Stratton, Syracuse. Masonic influence has much to do with the minds of men in the workshop and in the pulpit. One man told me if he should put his name on that paper it would be one thousand dollars damage to his business. A good many Masons trade with me; at the same time he said he was as much an Anti-mason as I was. One Baptist minister in this place said he would not sign it for a thousand dollars."

Philo Millard, Woodhull, N. Y., writes;

"I have succeeded in getting you twelve three months subscribers, . . . I shall try and get them renewed."

Hiram Gardner, Big Rapids, Mich,, writes:

"I consider I am a freeman now, and I mean to spend the remainder of my days in opposing secret societies, of which Freemasonry is chief on account of its great power (deception). . . . I am a stranger here, do not know what can be done for our good cause, but I will try to keep the light burning in my own heart, so that others may see it and flee from secret orders of all kinds. . . . That God will take the work into his own hands is my highest wish."

Eleazer Smith, Glengardner, N. J., writes:
